In demanding these measures and reforms, we arraign the Radical party for the disregard of right, and the unparalleled oppression and tyranny which have marked its career. After the most solemn and unanimous pledge of both Houses of Congress to prosecute the war exclusively for the maintenance of the government and the preservation of the Union under the Constitution, it has repeatedly violated that most sacred pledge, under which was rallied that noble volunteer army which carried our flag to victory. Instead of restoring the Union, it has, so far as it is in its power, dissolved it, and subjected ten States, in a time of profound peace, to military despotism and negro supremacy. It has nullified there the right of trial by jury. It has abolished the habeas corpus, that most sacred writ of liberty. It has overthrown the freedom of speech and the press. It has substituted arbitrary seizures and arrests, and military trial and secret star-chamber inquisitions for constitutional tribunals. It has disregarded, in time of peace, the right of the people to be free from search and seizures. It has entered the post and telegraph offices, and even the private rooms of individuals and seized private papers and letters, without any specification or notice of affidavit as required by the organic law. It has converted the American capitol into a bastile. It has established a system of spies and official espionage to which no constitutional monarchy of Europe would now dare resort. It has abolished the right of appeal on important constitutional questions to the supreme judicial tribunal, and threatens to curtail or destroy its original jurisdiction, which is irrevocably vested by the Constitution. While the learned Chief Justice has been subjected to great and atrocious calumnies, merely because he would not prostitute his high office to the support of the false and partisan charges preferred against the President, its corruption and extravagance have exceeded anything known in history, and by its fraud and monopolies it has nearly doubled the burden of the debt created during the war. It has stripped the President of his constitutional power of appointment even of his own cabinet. Under its repeated assaults the pillars of the government are rocking on their base, and should it succeed in November next, and inaugurate its President, we will meet as a subjugated and conquered people amid the ruins of liberty and the scattered fragments of the Constitution. And we do declare and resolve that ever since the people of the United States threw off all subjection to the British Crown, the privilege and trust to suffrage have been granted, regulated and controlled exclusively by the political power of each State respectively, and any attempt by Congress, on any pretext whatever, to deprive any State of this right, or interfere with this exercise, is a flagrant usurpation of power which can find no warrant in the Constitution, and, if sanctioned by the people, will subvert our form of government, and can only end in a single, centralized, consolidated government, in which the separate existence of States will be entirely absorbed and an unqualified despotism be established in place of a Federal Union of coequal States, and that we regard the reconstruction acts, so called, of Congress gross usurpations, and unconstitutional, revolutionary and void; and that our soldiers and sailors, who carried the flag of our country to victory against a most gallant and determined foe, must ever be gratefully remembered, and all guarantees given to the laws must be faithfully carried into execution; that the public lands should be distributed as widely among the people and should be disposed of under the pre-emption or homestead law, and sold in reasonable quantities, and to none but actual occupants, at the minimum price established by the government. When grants of the public lands may be allowed, necessary for the encouragement of important public improvements, the proceeds of the sale of such lands, and not the lands themselves, should be so applied; that the President of the United States, Andrew Johnson, [applause,] in exercising the power of his high office in resisting the aggressions of Congress on the constitutional rights of the States and the people, is entitled to the gratitude of the whole American people, and on behalf of the Democratic party we tender him our thanks for his patriotic efforts in that regard. [Great applause.]

Upon this platform the Democratic party appeal to every patriot, including all the Conservative element, and all who desire to support the Constitution and restore the Union, forgetting all past differences of opinion, to unite with us in the present great struggle for the liberties of the people, and that to all such, to whatever party they may have heretofore belonged, we extend the right hand of fellowship, and hail all such co-operating men as friends and brothers.

THERE is a famine in Algiers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.—MR. EDMUNDS' BILL.

On the 10th instant the Senate passed Mr. Edmunds' bill in relation to the Electoral College. Subjoined is the debate in the Senate and the bill as passed:

After some remarks by Mr. Trumbull, in support of his proposition, the expiration of the morning hour brought up the unfinished business of yesterday, viz: Mr. Edmunds' bill excluding from the Electoral College the votes of States lately in rebellion, which shall not have been reorganized.

Mr. Edmunds favored and Mr. Davis opposed the bill.

Mr. Nye followed in denunciation of the Democratic convention, whose platform, he said, was a fraud and a lie, and in eulogy of the Republican party.

Mr. Davis reminded the Senator, no matter how a rebel hand may be reeking with the blood of Union soldiers, the Radical party is willing to receive him as soon as he professed repentance. He pronounced General Grant as possessed of none of the qualities of a soldier but courage and will, and asserted that, but for an accident, and but for an abler man than himself, we would never have heard of him as a candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. Morton spoke of General Blair's recent letter as threatening rebellion in the future, claiming his nomination for the Vice Presidency was made upon that letter, and his sentiments were indorsed by the Democratic party and by the platform of that party, and he called upon Senators to meet this issue boldly and bravely.

Mr. Buckalew did not coincide with General Blair in overthrowing the reconstruction laws, and said the platform, made before General Blair was nominated, contained no intimation of violence or revolution.

After further discussion, Mr. Conkling's substitute, offered some days ago, was rejected by yeas 19, nays 30.

At the evening session the following transpired:

Mr. Edmunds' bill relative to the vote in the Electoral College was again taken up, and Mr. Drake's amendment, previously offered, was rejected.

On motion of Mr. Thayer the names of the States were struck out, and the words 'the States lately in rebellion and not now represented in Congress' inserted, by a vote of yeas 20, nays 14.

The bill was then passed by yeas 28, nays 5, a party vote, except that Mr. Henderson voted with the Democrats.

The bill passed is as follows:

Resolved, That none of the States whose inhabitants were lately in rebellion shall be entitled to be represented in the Electoral College for the choice of President and Vice President of the United States, nor shall any electoral votes be received or counted from any of such States unless at the time prescribed by law for the choice of electors the people of such States, pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf, shall have, since the 4th day of March, 1867, adopted a constitution of State government, under which a State government shall have been organized, and shall be in operation; and unless such election of electors shall have been held under the authority of such constitution and government, and such State shall have also become entitled to be represented in Congress pursuant to the acts of Congress in that behalf.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Seymour's journey homeward was almost a continued ovation.

The weather northward is hotter than it has been for many years. Many deaths have occurred from sunstroke, including seven in Buffalo, N. Y.

The thermometer rose to 103 today, and horses were sunstruck.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Chief Justice Chase declared to-day, to a Western friend, that while he could not accord personally with the resolution against the reconstruction acts, and believed that the present constitutions ought to stand till changed by the people of each State, all voting, yet he was a Democrat, a State's rights Democrat, and in full sympathy with the Democratic party. He also spoke very highly of Horatio Seymour.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—General Meade has transferred Florida to the civil authorities.

It is stated that Howard is preparing to reduce the number of employees of the Freedman's Bureau.

The new treaty with China has been sent to the Senate for ratification.

Grant won't return from the West until the middle of September.

The Senate had a brief executive session, but nothing of importance was done.

Both Houses are in session to-night.

The Committee on Reconstruction is called for to-morrow to hear the Mississippi Radical delegation regarding the alleged election frauds.

Senator Doolittle has written a letter strongly discouraging the third party movement. Well informed parties think there is no real base for the third party rumors.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—The Senate last night passed the funding bill, and bills appropriating $20,000 to Mrs. L. T. Potter, of Charleston, S. C., for relieving Union prisoners, and discontinuing the Freedman's Bureau in January.

A fire occurred last night, the telegraph failed, and a group of displaced firemen in the neighborhood subdued the fire.

Senate.—The bill amending various bills relating to the navy and marine corps passed without amendment.

A bill reducing the military to a peace establishment was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

House.—A committee of five was appointed to investigate how the House contingent fund of 1867 was expended.

Heaton, representative from North Carolina, was seated.

The bill removing disabilities from certain parties, as amended by the Senate, passed.

The conference committee's report on the tax bill was adopted. The Senate having previously adopted it, it goes to the President. The committee struck out all relating to banks. Store keepers are to be paid by the United States. Special agents are limited to 25. Mineral oils are on the same footing with other manufactures. Spirits must be removed from bond within nine months. Wholesale liquor dealers pay one per cent. In other respects the bill remains as passed by the House. Recess.

The House thermometer reached 91 degrees when the House met, and 94 degrees at recess.

Schenck estimates the loss by removing the tax on mineral oils at $2,000,000. Provisions in the tax bill will dispense with about 1,700 inspectors.

Collector Smythe, of New York, is here, engineering his confirmation to Austria, with feeble prospects.

Wm. M. Evarts has been confirmed as Attorney General.

Secretary Seward reports that twenty-three votes have ratified the fourteenth article, from which Ohio and New Jersey have receded. He also reports that Arkansas, North Carolina and Florida have given notice of ratification by alleged legislatures of those States.

The third party movement is assuming small proportions; eleven persons only are actively interesting themselves in the matter, none of whom were delegates. It is stated that the President was approached by a small delegation who demanded whether the President would support Seymour. The President quietly asked whether Seymour would support the administration.

The President complains to personal friends that had the Democratic party given him cordial support, he was prepared at any time to drive the Radicals to the wall most effectually, but he is now and has heretofore been left to work comparatively alone. There is no doubt in well informed circles that the President discourages the third party phantom, and will cordially support Seymour and Blair, in his own way, however.

Fifteen Radical Mississippians appeared before the Reconstruction Committee to-day, demanding the exclusion of Rankin, Chickasaw, Marshall, Carroll and De Soto counties from the count, thereby carrying the Constitution and electing a Radical State ticket and Congressmen.

THE mother of the Emperor of China has been selecting for him a wife, somewhat after the style of Ahasuerus. One hundred and twenty candidates were presented, and from these seven were selected, and from these the fortunate Esther was at last accounts to be selected.

THE school population of the United States is 5,000,000. They require 20,000,000 books, at an expense of $18,750,000.

THE name of the town of South Danvers, Massachusetts, has been changed to Peabody, in honor of the great philanthropist.

INAUGURATION OF THE GOVERNOR OF LOUISIANA.

Governor Warmoth was inaugurated on Monday, the 13th instant. The following is the inaugural address of the Governor:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I am deeply impressed with the grave and peculiar significance of this occasion, and the magnitude of the responsibility which I am this day to assume. I trust the hearts of all of us are moved and pervaded by a realizing sense of the new and serious duties we have been called upon to discharge. Before me is the first Legislature, as an equal member of the American Union, that has sat for seven years. I need not recount to you the history of these seven years, so full of startling and wonderful, as well as painful and terrible events—so pregnant with momentous issues, so productive of great and glorious results. Nor do I deem it expedient at this time to trace the chain of causes which led to these events and produced these results, or to discuss the questions of who have been most culpable and responsible for whatever has been wrong or mistaken in the past, and who are most deserving of credit for whatever is good in the present. We have here met, not to speculate upon the past, nor to brood and quarrel over its ashes, but rather to meet the great living issues of the present, and the duties which it imposes upon us. We stand amid the ruins of an old order of things; it should be ours to work wisely and manfully for the establishment of a new and better order of things upon the foundation which these seven years have established. So long as time is spent in futile and irritating discussions upon the realness and probable permanency of these foundations, or persistent and perhaps turbulent efforts to unsettle and upheave them, so long will the public peace, order and tranquility refuse to be restored, and so long will the restoration and development of all the great interests of the State be delayed and endangered.

Gentlemen, the corner-stone of these foundations, laid and fixed forever by a war, sealed, as I firmly believe, by the hand of God himself, and recognized by the organic law under which we have assembled, and which I am here to swear to support and defend, is the equality before the law and the enjoyment of every political right of all the citizens of the State, regardless of race, color or previous condition; and only when this grand distinctive feature of the new constitution shall be stamped on every act of legislation, and when such legislation shall find approval and support in that general public sentiment which gives to law its vitality, will our State fairly enter upon that career of greatness and prosperity which the Almighty designed for her. It would be idle to deny that while a large majority of our people have testified in the strongest manner their approval of that feature of the constitution of which I have spoken, there is still a minority, not wanting in intelligence and virtue, who are strenuously opposed to it. Much is to be hoped from the good sense, the discretion, the inherent love of justice of the American people for the gradual wearing away of the prejudices upon which alone this opposition is founded. Meantime let our course, while resolute and manly, be also moderate and discreet. Let legislation be kept as much as possible in harmony with the sentiment of the whole people. It is better that the course of legislation should rather fall behind than outstrip the popular wishes and demands. Let everything consistent with right and justice be done to bring back the era of good feeling, and to wash from the memories of all everything that tends to alienate one class or one party from another.

I refrain at this time from entering into any discussion of measures which I may deem of importance. In future I will discharge the duty imposed upon me by giving to the General Assembly information respecting the condition of the State, and recommending to its consideration such legislation as I may deem expedient. I venture, however, to urge immediate measures for the repression of lawlessness and disorder now rife in many parts of the State. From many parishes we have almost daily accounts of violence and outrage—in many cases most brutal and revolting murders—without any effort on the part of the people to prevent or punish them.

We want peace and order; without it we can have no prosperity. Such measures must be adopted to secure life and property as may be necessary. If the tax-payers prefer to support a strong constabulary to doing their duty as citizens by helping the officers, yes, by making the officers of the law keep the peace, and protect the life of every man, however poor, then the responsibility will be upon them and not upon the State administration. Everybody knows that the strong men, the property holders, and those who claim and command the respect of their parish, could make it as peaceable and safe throughout the State as any part of the Union.

The hands of the courts must be strengthened and upheld—the peace officers must do their duty—the good people must rise up and vindicate the law. The press, too, vindictive and partisan, should unite with the government in denouncing crime, and aid in the establishment of a healthy public sentiment, which of itself would protect the peace by its frowns upon evil doers. You should drive those drones upon society, who eat but do not work, who consume but produce nothing, more dangerous to peace and prosperity than famine or pestilence, to go to work or find another country than this to curse.

I appear before you to-day not as a partisan, but to take the oath of office prescribed for those who are chosen by the people to discharge the duties of the office of governor of your State. My object will be to enforce the law, protect the people, and aid in advancing the social, material and political interests of the whole people. I believe the epoch has the smiles of Providence. Cursed for our sins with war, scourged with the epidemic, our crops blighted for a succession of years, our fair State overflowed by the torrents of the Mississippi, commerce paralyzed, the people impoverished—the event of my inauguration is welcomed by the full restoration of civil government and readmission into the Union, the fairest prospect for crops, receding floods and improving credit. Let us vie with each other in seeing who of us shall receive most blessings for good and faithful services rendered the State.

THE FOURTEENTH ARTICLE.—The practical operation of the amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution as the fourteenth article, when adopted, has not been generally considered, and has in some instances been misapprehended. This article will soon be ratified by three-fourths of the States, and proclaimed as part of the Constitution.

Seven of the lately excluded States will soon have accepted the article as an amendment through Africo-Radical and bayonet-made legislatures. It will be a part of the Constitution, provided the reconstruction acts of Congress are to stand as laws of the land.

It has been represented that the fourteenth article gave to the several States, including the Southern States, the option of extending the franchise to all persons, including the freedmen, or of limiting the suffrage to whites as heretofore, it being provided, however, that the basis of representation in Congress shall be in accordance with the population of the voting classes. If a State exclude any class of male inhabitants from voting, the basis of representation shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens in a State.

But Congress, by an arbitrary law, practically withdrew and annulled this option, and left hardly anything for the fourteenth article to operate upon. They enacted laws establishing universal negro suffrage in all the excluded States, and constituting negro State governments, and enabling the negro Radical conventions of such States to force negro suffrage upon the people of those States by constitutions which have since, by another act, been declared perpetual. Thus there remains to the Southern States no option between universal negro suffrage and a qualified suffrage.

But to the Africanized State governments there does remain the option of contracting the basis of representation by denying or abridging the right of suffrage for the white people of the State. The constitutions of some of these States, which have been or are about to be readmitted by Congress, exclude large portions of the white citizens from the right of suffrage.—National Intelligencer.

Oh, how blessed is the thought that I am going to live with God, where sorrow never comes; where heaven's own sun always shines with benignant beams, and where love, pure and perfect, flows on in one everlasting stream.

FLOWER GATHERING.

BY MARY CLEMMEN AMES.

Miles away from the dusty town,
Out in the beautiful June time weather,
The wind of the South is rippling down
And over the purple hills of heather.

Dim in the distance the city walls
Rise like the walls of a dreary prison;
On the healing sward, where the sunshine falls,
We stand mid the flowery folk arisen.

We watch their innocent eyelids ope,
And below we hear the river flowing;
While wilting sweet on the upland slope
Lies the grass of the early mowing.

On through the bees and the butterflies,
The grass and the flowers, the hours are walking;
And we seem to catch their low replies,
To the waters ever and ever talking.

We listen and question the infinite space,
In the deeps of its emerald silence lying,
While we watch the leaves turning face to face,
And their lovers, the winds, wooing and sighing.

And still like a dream fades the dreary town,
And dumb on our ear dies its distant murmur,
As the speech in the silent air steals down,
And the fainting heart grows calmer and firmer.

Hearts that ache with a wounding smart
Wander out from the heedless city;
The human yearning toward nature's heart
Is a thing that God in his love must pity.

Sorrow and sin are in the mart,
And greed and gain killing tender feeling;
Here we draw close to nature's heart,
And feel on our hearts her touch of healing.

Often we ask: Is there room to grow
'Neath the bands of the world, so hard and binding?
The wisdom of life we are fain to know—
Does it ever pay for the pain of finding?

So, far away from the dissonant town,
Out in the marvelous June-time weather,
We climb the hills to their blossoming crown,
And rest, and gather our flowers together,

As free as the wonderful waves that coil,
And break away in their measureless vents,
Away from their mossy and ferny walls,
From their leaning bands of flower-Innocents.

Let us gather our flowers to-day;
We are like thee, O restless river—
We loiter for play on our endless way,
While our life flows on and on forever.

Commencement Exercises at the Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

The commencement exercises of the Southern University were begun on Sunday, June 28th, by the commencement sermon, preached by the writer. The audience was large, attentive and apparently interested, and it is hoped good was done. In the evening Dr. Hamilton preached an able, interesting and edifying sermon.

On Monday, the 29th, the Board of Trustees met, and continued to hold morning and evening sessions until Thursday, the 2d of July. The attendance of the board was large, and their interest in the welfare of the university was lively. Many matters of importance were discussed with much interest and practical wisdom. It was resolved to establish a boarding hall, and to make the rates of board and tuition as low as at any first-class institution in the South. The board also resolved to organize and put into operation the law department of the institution, which will add two more to the already able faculty. It was also resolved to make the preparatory department more immediately a feature of the university, by allotting to it a portion of the spacious and elegant university building, and putting it under the immediate care of the faculty. This will make it a preparatory school unsurpassed in its claims by any preparatory school in the land.

On Monday night, the 29th, Mr. T. J. Levy, a distinguished graduate of last year, addressed the alumni in a speech evincing scholarship and thought. His theme was Social Philosophy and the Relative Importance of the Individual.

On Tuesday Dr. P. P. Neely, of Mobile, addressed the literary societies. His address was able and eloquent, and was delivered with that impressive effectiveness which characterizes the Doctor's finished elocution.

On Tuesday evening the Clariosophic Society held its annual exhibition, and was ably represented by the following young gentlemen: Messrs. Waller, Peterson, Humphrey and Keener, whose themes were respectively: Eloquence, Adversity, Fancy and Fact, and Education, the last of these being humorous, turning up some new angles in an old theme. It was received with uproarious and cheerful applause.

On Wednesday, July 1st, the graduating class, Messrs. L. B. Weble, A. Benners, W. Wills, W. B. Inge, James Peterson and William Walker, received their diplomas, the first named taking the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, the two following the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and the last three that of Master of Arts.—These young gentlemen delivered addresses evincing thought and cultivated scholarship.

The exercises closed with a most able, instructive and eloquent Baccalaureate address from the chancellor, Bishop Wightman. The closing evening was celebrated by a grand reunion of all the best elements of Southern society. It was considered by all a happy success.

The faculty and Board of Trustees have the most encouraging hopes for the coming collegiate year. The society and health of Greensboro are all that parents could wish. During the past year the conduct of the students was most satisfactory—not an expulsion, no disorder, nor even a student reproved.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

HOUMA, La., July 4, 1868.

John N. Crichlow was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., January 20, 1833; united in marriage to Miss Lanra A. Danks, at Front Lawn, Terrebonne parish, Louisiana, December 12, 1865; died, at same place, June 17, 1868.

The subject of this notice, blessed with pious parents, enjoyed the advantages of early religious training. As far back as he could remember he had believed in the truth of religion—had often felt, in a measure, its importance, and, doubtless, as often promised himself that some day or other he would turn his attention seriously and earnestly to it. But he waited, as multitudes are doing, for a more "convenient season." At length disease, in the form of dropsy, took hold upon him, and for four weary months he lingered between hope and fear, loth to believe that his present sickness would be unto death. During this period the writer frequently visited, conversed and prayed with him. He reproached himself that he had not, while in health, devoted himself to the service of God. Much of his time now was spent in prayer and meditation upon this subject. To one who asked if he prayed he replied: "O, yes, I pray all the time." To another, not a professor of religion, who asked him what he was thinking about, he said: "I am thinking of the things I have left behind me, that I ought to have attended to, and that you ought to attend to." Would that that one might be induced to give timely heed to this admonition of a dying man. In the last days of his illness the deceased gave evidences, satisfactory to those who waited around his sick bed, that at length the Lord had blessed him and prepared him for the dying hour, and for that better life beyond. He now wished to unite with the church, but during these few days there was no minister with him. In accordance, however, with his earnest request, an entry of his name has been appropriately made in the record books of the M. E. Church South at this place.

A beloved companion, together with a large circle of relatives and friends, are left to mourn their loss. But the living, at farthest, shall not long survive those who are gone; for the hearts of all these,

"Like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave."

And that it may serve as an admonition to the reader not to defer the needed preparation, let him bear in mind, as a more than probable fact, that of the many who are waiting for a "convenient season," not one in a thousand may be favored as was the subject of this notice. His sickness was protracted, affording time for preparation; his mental faculties remained unimpaired until a day or two before his death: he had the counsel and the prayers of Christian friends to aid and encourage him: he remembered the godly examples set before him, and the pious lessons that had been taught him in the days of his childhood and youth. And yet with all this he did not seem to reach the point of faith—the point at which he was enabled to trust wholly in the Crucified—until he had come down to the very last days of his life. With all his advantages, and the favoring circumstances attending him, still let it be borne in mind that with him the struggle was a hard one. Oh, the power and the stubbornness of unbelief! How great they are! Reader, with or without his advantages, will you run the risk, and wait yet a while longer? By all that is good, I pray that you will not do it. Remember—

"Wisdom, if thou still despise, Harder is she to be won."

'POOR MOLLY.'—A PLEA FOR SLEEPY HEARERS.—An affectionate and faithful minister in England was annoyed, on taking a new charge, by seeing a woman in the gallery invariably fall asleep as soon as the text was announced, and remain so till the bustle of the dispersing congregation aroused her. Sabbath after Sabbath, whether the weather was bright or dull, it was all the same; she nodded and then roused herself, coughed, changed her position, stared wildly about—as if to open her eyes so wide that they could not shut again—and then finally gave up the contest and settled herself comfortably to sleep. This at length reached a pass where it could be borne no longer; and finding out her name, the minister sought the sleeper in her home. He found her at the wash-tub, where she informed him she was forced to stand ten or twelve hours a day, after which she had to mend, and make, and cook for her fatherless boys far into the night.

Where had the resentment of God's servant fled so suddenly? Where the words of rebuke he had all ready to pour on the sleeper's head?

'This must be a hard life for you, poor woman,' he said.

'Ay, parson,' she replied, 'it is summat hard, to be sure; but I could e'en bear the labor o'body if I could but keep the soul free o't. But I cannot do it. The while I'm on my feet I can aye drudge on and on. But once I sit down, I'm asleep in spite of myself. Some times I fall asleep with the bread in my mouth at my poor dinner; and ye may ha' took notice, sir, that I fall aff even in God's house! I've had many's the battle with satan about this. Says he, 'Bide at home now and take the Sabbath as what it's given for, a day o' rest.' But says I, 'My soul thirsteth, yea, even longeth for the courts of the Lord's house, and there I'll go while my limbs can carry me.' Says he, 'Ye'll disgrace the place and vex the parson.' Says I, 'The searcher of hearts knows why I go; and I will still go, for then I can at least keep up the battle with ye, which I couldn't do in a sound sleep at home.'

—'Well, Molly,' said the parson, 'still do you come and keep up the battle there, and we will outwit satan between us; for what you can't get for your infirmity on Sunday, I will bring to you on Monday. I will then preach a five minute's sermon to your hungry soul by the side of your tub, my poor woman; and may God give to all my hearers an equal desire to come to his courts against obstacles.'

While men of God should bear with those who bear so much more with themselves, should not all our Sabbath sleepers inquire whether their excuse will avail them before God as will that of poor Molly?

THE IRISH CHURCH.

The population of Ireland in 1861, when the census was taken, was 5,793,967, of whom only 693,357, or about one of every nine persons, belonged to the Established Church.

The State employs, to minister to this church of the minority, two archbishops, ten bishops, and upward of 1,500 clergymen.

The income of the bishops alone is upward of £55,000. The income of the clergy is nearly half a million sterling.

There are 199 parishes in Ireland without any church population.

There are eighteen benefices in Ireland without a single resident member of the Established Church, the clergy of which receive incomes varying from £100 to £500 a year.

There are 220 benefices in Ireland having an income of £83,071. Deducting the families of the incumbents and clerks, the total amount of income apportioned to the remaining families averages £139 12s. per family per annum as the cost of their religious instruction.

There are 615 benefices in Ireland, the church revenue of which is £257,000, and where every church family costs for religious instruction £31 each per annum.

There are 575 parishes in Ireland in which the church population does not exceed twenty persons, men, women and children, for each parish.

There are 443 benefices in Ireland, the total church population of which is 20,529. The cost of teaching these 20,529 persons is £98,305 per annum.

The following are some of the benefices of the Irish Church, with their revenues and church population:*

Benefice.	Value.	Popula'n.
Kells	£1,020	528
Ratoath	408	73

The personal property alone of twenty bishops of the Irish Church, who have died since 1822, has been sworn at £861,868, or an average of £43,093 for each bishop.

Lord John Beresford, Archbishop of Armagh, who died in 1865, enjoyed the following dignities during his lifetime:

Dean of Clogher, 7 years	£4,500
Bishop of Cork, 2 years	10,000
Bishop of Raphoe, 2 years	12,000
Bishop of Clogher, 11 years	121,000
Archbishop of Dublin, 2 years	20,000
Archbishop of Armagh, 40 years	720,000
Total	£887,500

The church which exhibits these scandalous enormities is the church, not of the poor, but of the rich. The greater number of the landed proprietors, of the bankers, of professional men, of the nobility and gentry, belong to it, but scarcely any of the poor, and few of the lower section of the middle classes. The religion of these persons is sustained by the compulsory taxation of the poorest classes in Ireland.

The Established Church in Ireland is imposed upon the people of that country against their will, and has been pronounced by the highest authorities to be the most fruitful source of the discontent which characterizes that unhappy country.

* These figures are taken from the last census of Ireland and Captain Stackpole's Parliamentary return—all of them, therefore, are from public official documents.

FLOWERS.—DO THEY SLEEP?—A celebrated author, who has devoted much time to the study of plants, and often watched them in their slumbers, says that almost all kinds of flowers sleep in the night; and those plants which seem to be awake are the bats and owls of the vegetable kingdom. The marigold goes to bed with the sun and rises weeping. Many plants are so sensitive that their leaves close during the passage of a cloud. The dandelion opens at five or six in the morning, and closes at nine in the evening. The daisy opens its day's eye to meet the morning sun. The crocus, tulip and many others close their blossoms at different hours toward evening. The ivy-leaved lettuce opens at eight in the morning and closes forever at four in the afternoon. The night-blooming cereus turns night into day; it begins to expand its magnificent sweet-scented blossoms in the twilight, and it is in full bloom at midnight, and closes, never to open again, at the dawn of day. In a clover field not a leaf opens till after sunrise.

THE receipts of corn in Chicago, in 1867, were 10,000,000 bushels less than in 1866.

TURKEY.

The sultan, who seems to have received inspiration from his visit to Paris and London, in the spring of 1867, has just made a grand step forward, by preparing a plan to permit persons of foreign birth to hold property in Turkey. The absence of some such provision has hitherto been one great drawback to the progress of that fine empire. The beautiful and fertile regions that lie beyond the Bosphorus have always been inviting to the people of crowded northern Europe, and had there existed any fully recognized legal guarantee for the life and property of immigrants against Moslem fanaticism, considerable regions of the East would, ere this, have been full of the activity and wealth of modernized life, instead of being plunged in poverty and lethargy.

As it is, the Ottoman Empire has advanced considerably during the reign of its present monarch, and, while favored by nature with one of the most central and commanding positions on the globe, is grandly important for its mineral and agricultural resources.

Turkey in Europe, properly speaking, and including the islands therewith classed, contains 9,880,000 inhabitants, of whom 8,660,000 are Christians; 1,150,000 Osmanlis or Musselmen, and 70,000 Jews. Turkey in Asia, embracing Syria and Arabia, has 13,430,000, of whom 9,050,000 are Musselmen, including all the different sects, 4,500,000 of them being Osmanlis; 4,300,000 are Christians of the different communions, and 80,000 are Jews. This makes the grand total of population amount to 23,310,000, not including tributary provinces such as Egypt, etc., etc.

Constantinople, the capital, has 850,000 permanent inhabitants, or, with the floating population, about 1,200,000 in all. But there are many other large and splendid cities, for instance Adrianople, with 110,000 inhabitants; Aleppo, 115,000; Bagdad, 105,000; Salonica, 70,000; Serajeva, 70,000; Smyrna, 160,000; Damascus, 165,000; Cairo in Egypt, (tributary,) 250,000; Broussa, 80,000; Erzeroan, 70,000; Philipopolis, 60,000; Sophia, 30,000; Gallipoli, 40,000, and Jerusalem, 25,000.

In the fiscal year 1865-66 the revenue of the Turkish government amounted to 3,169,380 purses of about 22 dollars each, and the Egyptian tribute increased the same by 62,500 purses, making the grand total 3,171,880 purses, or $69,781,360.

The expenditures amounted to 3,266,931 purses, or $71,871,482, leaving a deficit of 95,051 purses, or $2,001,122. The public debt on November 1, 1865, was £35,037,500, which is diminished by a sinking fund of one and two per cent. paid up annually. The Rothschilds hold 5,000,000 sterling of this amount, and are thus enabled to wield a considerable and often salutary influence. The internal debt is 31,800,000 pounds sterling, guaranteed by the general revenues.

The Turkish army on a peace footing numbers 148,680 men, and on a war footing 170,376, with a reserve of 148,680, called redifs; 100,000 auxiliaries, and 87,000 irregulars. The navy comprises 48 vessels of war, of which 18 are steamers, with 1,218 guns.

The commerce of Turkey embraces a vast number of productions and manufactured commodities, some of which are among the most delightful and beautiful known to man. She has cotton, silk, wool, all the cereals, all the fruits, including the best of the northern and the richest of the southern zones, rice, sugar, tobacco of exquisite quality, rare spices, fine coffees, excellent building and superb cabinet timber, several of the metals, precious stones, amber, ivory, jewels and a wonderful variety of valuable drugs. Her means of communication are superb, and she holds the very gateway of the East. Napoleon only uttered what every statesman feels who examines the position of the Ottoman Empire on the map, that he who shall rule in Constantinople must become the master of the Oriental world, and the Russian Czars, in following out the hints imparted by Peter the Great, in his famous will, have steadily bent their policy toward the acquisition of the Golden Horn.

The admission of foreigners to property rights, in the great realm of which we have been writing, marks another epoch in the march of progress. Let us, as we justly may, rejoice in it. Another barrier has fallen. Telegraphs and railroads will do the rest, and a very few years may end the "Eastern question" without bloodshed, through the blessed instrumentalities of peaceful settlement and trade. We doubt not that, tempted by the opportunities of so rich and fair a land, Northern enterprise will, ere long, be supplying Aleppo with water and gas, and running up the price of town lots at Bagdad.—New York Commercial Journal.

SPIRITUAL BLOSSOMING.

Good Elder Merryfield, one of the most genial men, who, on his circuit journeys, used to have his prophet's chamber in Aunt Miriam's house, used to say to me: 'Your aunt has great strength and decision of character. She is, in many respects, a remarkable woman. It is true her lines seem to have fallen in pleasant places, but I wish the Lord, in his good providence, would send her a flood of human sunshine in some shape. I would like to see what it would do for her.'

'What do you think it would do for her, Elder Merryfield?'

'My opinion is—' and then a quiet smile of great satisfaction would steal into his sympathetic face; 'my opinion is, she'd blossom!' and in the tone of the good man's voice one might suppose all the flowers had concentrated their united freshness and sweetness.

Elder Merryfield's remark often recurs to me in connection with others than Aunt Miriam. The flood of sunshine which would bring out blossoms of character is, in many instances, greatly to be desired.—Our hearts yearn toward laboring, faithful ones, whose lives are much in the shade. They are true saints. The crown, we know, awaits them, but, oh! for a gleam from the brightness of the land beyond, to shine upon their paths now, and illumine them, and make them beautiful to the eyes of those who can only discern their pilgrim garb. A flood of spiritual consolations and delights, it was assumed, were already Aunt Miriam's; but warm human sunshine was what she wanted to bring to life the rich heart-bloom.

Is then the truth, as it is in our blessed Saviour, insufficient? Must the soul that feeds upon it still be in hunger and unrest? Or is there an arcana of love and communion, a closer mystery of fellowship and friendship which might be entered if the human heart were willing? Do we linger in the portal, while the music of invitation calls us to enter where the very attitude of our souls must be constant worship, and hence constant joy? Having 'spiritual consolations,' do we long for human sunshine? Where is humanity, in its full sweetness, found, if not in the divine human of our Lord? Is there one want of the heart with which he cannot, does not sympathize? Is there one need to which he gives not sweet response, if we shrink not back from his loving tenderness? Is not the 'good news' of his gospel designed for the entire nature, and is not every joy of circumstance or state truly such only as it is elevated into an expression of his divine love and sympathy?

To stand aloof from an earthly friend, who longs to bless and receive and impart the cheer of sympathy, is an offence. To be willing to receive only general truths, and through want of faith put away the warm, personal, human friendship of our Lord and Saviour, is defrauding ourselves of transcendent help and blessing, and is, humanly speaking, taking from his glory. He has made provision for the joy that gives spiritual blossoming. The garden of the soul should be full of flowers. Then will others note the fragrance—then shall be gathered the 'fruit of heavenly flavor.'—Sunday School Times.

THE TURN OF LIFE.—Between the years of forty-five and sixty, a man who has properly regulated himself may be considered in the prime of life. His matured strength of constitution renders him almost impervious to the attack of disease, and experience has given soundness to his judgment. His mind is resolute, firm and equal; all his functions are in the highest order; he assumes mastery over business; builds up a competence on the foundation he has laid in early manhood, and passes through a period of life attended by many gratifications. Having gone a year or two past sixty he arrives at a stand-still. But athwart this is a viaduct, called the turn of life, which, if crossed in safety, leads to the valley of 'old age,' round which the river winds, and then beyond, without a boat or causeway to effect its passage. The bridge is, however, constructed of fragile materials, and it depends upon how it is trodden whether it bend or break. Gout and apoplexy are also in the vicinity to waylay the traveler, and thrust him from the pass; but let him gird his loins and provide himself with a fitter staff, and he may trudge in safety with perfect composure. To quit metaphor, 'The Turn of Life' is a turn either into prolonged walk or into the grave. The system and powers having reached their utmost expansion, now begin either to close like flowers at sunset or break down at once. One injudicious stimulant, a single fatal excitement, may force it beyond its strength, whilst a careful supply of props, and the withdrawal of all that tends to force a plant, will sustain it in beauty and vigor until night has entirely set in.—The Science of Life, by a Physician.

AN EMPIRE WITHOUT A DOCTOR.

The Moors have always prided themselves upon being the strictest and most orthodox of believers. This means that they steadily set their faces against anything which is likely to improve their condition. So great is their present dread of European innovations, that no Christian can enter their mosques under pain of death. Recent cases are known in which adventurous spirits had to pay for their curiosity by a race round the town with a yelling mob at their heels. So far, therefore, from attempting to keep pace with the civilization of the West, the Moors seem to think that they will best fulfill the requirements of their faith by ignoring the existence of science altogether. Arithmetic, geometry and astronomy, which once found a favored home in Barbary, only survive as names. Astrology appears in a garb which would make it hard to deceive any one, not thoroughly resolved to be cheated; while the builder's art, which has left so many matchless memorials in Southern Spain, seems to have passed out of the land, and the choicest specimens of Gothic skill are allowed to moulder away for want of a few touches from a master hand. Medicine forms no exception to the unhappy rule, and bears mournful testimony to the rigidity of a system which makes all considerations of progress or safety yield in blind submission to a worn-out creed.

As the empire of Morocco cannot boast of a single school of medicine, it is needless to say that there are no licensed practitioners. Diplomas, hospitals and dispensaries, not being specified in the Koran, must of necessity be emanations from the powers of darkness, and are consequently to be abhorred of all believers. The want of a medical education does not appear to be felt; and all that is needful to secure a practice is a confiding spirit on the part of patients. Any one who pleases may set up as a doctor, and as his stock-in-trade consists of a few simple herbs for poultices, together with hot iron and boiling oil for wounds, he has the satisfaction of knowing that his efforts for the public health are conducted at a very small pecuniary cost. Surgical instruments are unknown, and the nearest approach to an operation is performed by hacking off an offending member, and dipping the wound in boiling oil.

It is a good thing, perhaps, that Moors have an objection to amputation. As a rule, they prefer death to the loss of one of their limbs. They expect that the sum total of their members will be demanded of them at the judgment day; and if they have been unlucky enough to lose a finger or toe, they must then produce a new one, or suffer direful penalties. The clumsiest amputations are seldom followed by fatal effects, for the temperate habits of the people make them capable of enduring almost any amount of cutting and hacking without a sign of inflammation.

But how are patients obtained in a country where brass plates and red lamps are unknown? Most likely the budding doctor is already following some other trade, and he improves his opportunities by affectionate inquiries about the health of a dyspeptic customer. The arrival of a corpulent, town-bred Moor, who has been over-eating himself, gives an admirable chance for trying his skill. Long and patient is the cross-legged consultation. At last the head is pronounced to be the seat of the disorder, and a cord tied tightly round the temples. This is a grand specific, freely resorted to by a people who have not the remotest idea of reaching the head through the stomach.

The patient doubles himself up in a corner for a nap, and, on waking, finding his headache much the same. The doctor looks wise, examines the cord, and thinks that his victim wants bleeding. This is usually done in the arm or leg; but a person who is very well up in the Koran, and has read a chapter or two that morning, may venture upon other parts, in which case the head is usually selected. The Moors are nearly as fond of bleeding as their neighbors, the Spaniards. From the liberal way in which nature is "assisted" in Spain, it is likely enough that a fair proportion of patients receive such effectual help as rapidly to place them out of reach of earthly suffering. A Moorish practitioner will not be disposed to carry matters to this length, so he may probably vary blood-letting with some milder form of treatment. This will take the shape of a poultice or plaster; and so highly is this application esteemed, that it is common enough to see a burly fellow, who is under the influence of an attack of bile, walking about with a plaster on each side of his face; purgative medicines are never used. Supposing the complaint to be obstinate, talismans and charms are next resorted to. A little abstinence would probably effect for the patient all that his doctor's treatment is supposed to achieve; but it is curious to observe that although the Moors are exceedingly calm when suffering from any serious disorder which calls out their endurance, they are restless under a trivial ailment, and grumble loudly if they do not obtain instantaneous relief. The dosing, then, goes on somewhat as follows: A verse or so of the Koran is written on an egg, that is then carefully washed in water, of which the patient drinks a little, rubbing the part effected with the rest.

This is a sovereign remedy for ophthalmia. In a case of very acute suffering, a passage of the Koran is inscribed on parchment, which is reduced to pulp, and administered in the form of a pill. This is a very extreme remedy, something like eight or ten grains of calomel among ourselves. Supposing that it fail of good effect, it is plainly the man's destiny that he must die. The doctor's art can do no more for him, and he is dismissed as incurable. Should he, however, be unreasonable enough to desire to prolong his life, he may secure the good offices of a Santon, or saint, by an greater outlay than the purchase of a cock, which is to be sacrificed at the departed worthy's tomb. The country is pretty thickly strewn with little whitewashed structures, consisting of four low walls, sometimes surmounted by a tiny dome, but oftener open to the sky. These are the resting places of men famous for the sanctity of their lives, and who have attained to the honor of canonization. The Santons must be a placable race, when their favor can be secured by a few coppers expended in a fowl. If the patient be very much in earnest about the Santon's intercession, he will pitch his tent in the neighborhood of the tomb, and make a heavy investment in poultry. Sometimes a number of people club together, and turn the thing into a sort of medical picnic; remaining at the encampment for periods varying from a week to a month. As tombs are often to be found on the side of breezy hills, the amount of inconvenience encountered by a camping party need not be excessive. With plenty of fresh air, glorious scenery, game to be had for the shooting, and an entire removal from business, a man may contrive to make himself pretty comfortable. It is likely that pilgrims to the shrine of the saint derive as much benefit from the bounty of nature as from the holy man's intercession.

There are, of course, divers complaints which will not wait to be cured by time and such medicinal practice as is known to the Moors. Lung diseases are not common, but their absence is atoned for by fevers of various types. Then, too, a man's leg may be crushed by a fall from his horse. Some kind friend bandages it up in his turban, and carries the poor fellow home to an inevitable death by gangrene. Or, again, a person drops down in a fit. A crowd collects. Not the officious circle of curiosity attracted by a street accident in London, but grave and solemn men, who stroke their beards and discourse of destiny. No effort is made to raise the sufferer—not because the bystanders mean to be cruel, but because an icy form of faith has frozen up the approaches to their hearts. Sympathy would be indecent. The utmost that decorum will allow is to pull the gelab (or cloak) over the blackening face, and to adjust the slippers which have fallen off. For the rest, Allah is great, and Mohammed is his prophet.

The temperate habits of country-bred Moors carry them through disorders which would be fatal to blood inflamed by stimulants. The rapidity with which their flesh heals after serious wounds would create astonishment in the wards of the best-arranged European hospital. So long as a vital part is not touched recovery is nearly certain. Insanity, which is fearfully prevalent, knows no treatment or restraint. Viewed as a mark of heaven's favor, in withdrawing the mind from all capacity for worldly business, that it may contemplate things above, madness is allowed to have its way; and the most dangerous lunatics go at large, often inflicting deadly injury upon themselves and on incautious passers-by. Many of these poor raving creatures attain to a kind of canonization after death, and, as a reward for the wildness of their excesses, are elevated into the rank of Santons, and have their tombs besieged by a crowd of supplicants for the cure of bodily infirmities. It is assumed that the mere process of dying transforms them into public benefactors; for during the period of their earthly lives they never cease to be a dangerous and intolerable nuisance.

But there is one branch of Moorish medical practice that is well worth consideration, and which certainly deserves a trial amongst us. The bite of a mad dog, which in European countries becomes a sore puzzle to the faculty, meets with a treatment in Morocco as effectual as it is summary. Anything which may help to lessen the chances of hydrophobia is a public benefaction; and in a country where canine madness prevails to an almost incredible extent, it is fortunate that native ingenuity has hit upon a remedy which admits of instant application. A Moor is pretty sure to have some gunpowder in his pouch, so he takes out a handful, and having deepened and enlarged the wound with his knife, with as much coolness and indifference as if he were the most practiced hospital surgeon, rubs the powder into the sore. Having made a little pyramid on the flesh, he allows it to dry for a few minutes in the sun. A match is then applied, and the operation terminates with a fizz, which has the double effect of cleansing the wound and stanching the blood. As a rule, no evil consequences follow upon this rough-and-ready sort of treatment, beyond an ugly scar, testifying to the courage and endurance of the operator. When hot iron is at hand, it is applied as a surer remedy than even the blasting process. Criminal practice makes the Moors familiar with its use. When a man has been detected in a theft, and has not been able to condone the offence by a fine, his hand is chopped off, when hot iron is immediately applied to the mangled stump. Sometimes boiling oil or pitch is used instead, and, whatever pain may result from this rude remedy, the patient is nearly sure to escape from gangrene.

The Moors, in common with other African races, are strongly impressed with the idea that every head covered with a European hat must necessarily be a treasure-house of medical knowledge. The consequence is that visitors are, immediately on their arrival, regaled with an exhibition of such wounds and sores as would be impossible except among a people upon whom filth and starvation are allowed to do their work unchecked. Each man has something to show, worse, if possible, than his neighbor; and all expect instantaneous relief.—When they are clamorous for help, however, they are pertinacious in rejecting every remedy that does not come up to their idea of the right and fitting. When whole villages are swept off by typhus or cholera, as has recently been the case, the calamity is alleviated by one never-failing source of comfort, viz, that if the inhabitants had not died of typhus or cholera, they must inevitably have died of something else.—The St. James Magazine.

RELIGION AND NOT DO ANYTHING.—A Christian woman in a revival season had conversed with a young girl upon the importance of a change of heart, and of attending at once to the subject. The girl appeared to be deeply convicted of her need, but was not ready to take the first step.

One evening, as they passed out of a meeting where many had been anxiously inquiring the way of salvation, she turned to her friend and said: 'I wish I could get religion and not do anything!'

Religion and not do anything—not labor for God—not strive against sin—not accept denials and sacrifices for Christ's sake—not render weak and imperfect love for love infinite and eternal! There is no such religion. The young girl was at that time convinced of the truth, and she wanted the results of piety—the safety and happiness of a child of God. But there was something she preferred to a life of piety—she was unwilling to come out boldly and acknowledge Christ as her Saviour.

And so the Spirit, slighted and refused, left her. I do not know it ever came to her heart again. In a few years she became a critic of things sacred and holy, and then an avowed infidel; and then, while yet in youth, she passed into another world, to meet the God she did not want in this.

When the soul, intelligently convicted of sin, chooses, wilfully and deliberately, something else than God, there is no certainty that the Spirit will ever again seek to win it to truth, and holiness, and heaven. Perhaps that one earnest call, and her refusal to obey, was to the young girl the point where turned her eternal destiny. I have never heard that she afterward gave any evidence of a true desire for God or heaven.—Tract Journal.

'SOUND ON THE GOOSE.'—This phrase originated in Pittsburg, Penn. That city, some years ago, was so overrun with geese that a public meeting was held, and the extermination of the offending bird decided on. A charter election soon following, the two candidates for the mayoralty were questioned as to what would be their action in case of election. The one who was 'sound on the goose question' was elected; and from that date the phrase crept into general use.

A BISHOP CHALLENGED.—Dr. Mattison, while attending the Methodist Conference at Chicago, gave a public address answering the statements made by Father Hecker in a lecture which he had just delivered. Soon after, Rev. J. McMullen, D. D., a Roman Catholic priest, and professor in one of the colleges there, published a letter challenging Bishop Scott, "or any other gentleman, lay or cleric," to meet the challenger in a public discussion, and proposing as the first and main question, "Is Roman Catholicism a Saving Christianity?" Dr. Mattison instantly replied, accepting the challenge, but changing the form of the question to the following: "Is Romanism a Corrupt Form of Christianity?" Dr. McMullen replied, declining that form, but proposing to discuss the question "Is Methodism a Corrupt Form of Christianity?" Dr. Mattison replied again, insisting that the topic should not be changed, and adding that he was obliged to return to his home in Jersey City immediately; but would return in ten days to discuss Romanism, if his opponent would stick to that topic. Whereupon Dr. McMullen publishes a card that somebody must meet him within three days, or he will consider the challenge not accepted. Dr. Mattison then dispatched a note to Dr. McMullen's address, and to the papers, stating that at much inconvenience he would delay his departure if his opponent would actually meet him, and requesting an answer before the time for him to leave. He received no answer, and the discussion will not come off. Dr. McMullen evidently was determined not to discuss the question, which is the real point of debate, Whether Romanism is Corrupt; but wished to maintain, what few would doubt, that men may be saved in that communion. Dr. Hiram Mattison is secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, and, when pastor of a Methodist church in Jersey City, his church was mobbed one night by the Catholics. At the city election next day the votes of the indignant Methodists, thus suddenly converted to Radicalism, unexpectedly gave the control of the municipal government to the Republicans.

WHAT MUST YOU DO?—Reader, do you feel the slightest drawing toward God, the smallest concern about your mortal soul? Does your conscience tell you this day that you are not yet forgiven, and have not yet felt the Spirit's power, and do you want to know what to do? Listen, and I will tell you.

You must go at once to the Lord Jesus Christ in prayer, and beseech him to have mercy upon you, and send you the Spirit. You must go direct to that open fountain of living waters, the Lord Jesus Christ, and you shall receive the Holy Ghost. (John 7, 39.) Begin at once to pray to Jesus for the Holy Spirit. Think not that you are shut up and cut off from hope. The Holy Ghost is promised to them that ask him. Give the Lord no rest till he comes down and makes you a new heart. Cry mightily unto the Lord; say unto him, "Bless me, even me also; quicken me, and make me alive."

I dare not, for my part, send anxious souls to any one but Christ. I cannot hold with those who tell men to pray for the Holy Spirit in the first place, in order that they may go to Christ in the second place. I see no warrant of Scripture for saying so. I only see that if men feel they are needy, perishing sinners, they ought to apply first and foremost, straight and direct, to Jesus Christ. I see he himself says, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." (John 8, 37.) I know it is his special office to baptize with the Holy Ghost, and that "in him all fullness dwells." I dare not pretend to be more systematic than the Bible. I believe that Christ is the meeting-place between God and the soul, and my first advice must always be, Go to Jesus, and tell your wants to Him.

Reader, remember this: I have told you what to do. You are to go to Christ if you want to be saved.—J. C. Ryle.

THE party of prisoners released from the grasp of Theodore arrived safely at Suez on the 5th inst. There are sixty-nine persons in all—twenty gentlemen and eight ladies, with children and followers; few, if any, of whom would have seen their native country again if Theodore's despotism had remained undisturbed. They will soon be in England, and will be speedily followed by Col. Milward, bringing the crown, robe and state seal of Theodore, to lay at the feet of the Queen of England. Sir Robert Napier's troops have begun to land in England.

THE DEW.—If clouds are necessary to produce rain, sunshine is an essential to the formation of dew. A dewy morning only follows a day whose sun has well warmed up the earth. It is necessary that the heat should readily radiate into the surrounding atmosphere by night. When the surface of the earth thus cools down more rapidly than the incumbent air about it, and when the air is saturated with moisture, then, by the contact of temperatures, the air becomes unable to retain its moisture, and yields its sprays and vapors to be shaped by a natural law, the same which rounded the world out of chaos and orbed the universe; and then what was invisible becomes visible in drops of settling dew. So, whenever dew is seen to fall, there must first have been a flowing down of sunshine in the day, and then a responsive current of warmth uprising in the night, toward the region whence it came. The earth receives and yet returns the heat the heavens gave, and, as if to reward such gratitude, the dew descends to refresh and gladden its beseeching and thankful breast.

So, when people's hearts are hard, and dry, and desolate, it may be because they lack responsiveness to heaven's gifts—for want of gratitude for the light and privilege which have shone upon them all their days. Teachers, if they would see their classes bright and happy, and parents, if they would have glowing summer in their homes, and have young hearts themselves, should be open-souled and thankful, and teach the children how to be grateful for daily blessings. Then would sun-warmth from the better world be taken in through the gauze of form, and task, and habits, and fashion; then, because each heart would be flower instead of flint, grass instead of granite, fruit instead of fossil; then would the pearly dew-drops of glory glitter all over a school and all through a family, like an immortal morning.—Rev. A. Clark.

FISH BREEDING.—Fish-breeding is bringing to light many interesting facts in their natural history. The hatching of fish eggs is said by experts in that business to be easier and more sure than the hatching of fowls' eggs. The whole expense of putting fifty million shad in the Connecticut river did not exceed fifty dollars. The eggs of shad, put in water of suitable temperature, produce young fish in a few days. The salmon trout eggs require a longer incubation than those of most birds. Salmon require two months or more, under the most favorable circumstances. The New England Fish Commissioners are having great luck in the hatching line, at the Charlestown Springs, in New Hampshire, where they deposited 40,000 eggs in October. They hatched on the 11th of December, just sixty-two days from the time they were taken from the parent fish. The eggs of the salmon trout, at these springs, were thirty-five days in hatching, which is said to be a very short time. The annual catch of shad in the Connecticut has dwindled to about 500,000. If 50,000,000 were turned into the river, as reported, shad ought to be plenty and very cheap next spring. For the salmon we shall have to wait longer. They are two years or more in coming to maturity.—National Journal, Philadelphia.

OUR CHART.—If you would know whether the Bible be true in its teachings, you must do by it as you do by a chart. A chart is nothing but a piece of paper, and what good would it do for half a dozen captains to sit down on shore and discuss its merits? How can they know whether its descriptions are correct or not? Let them take it on board and prove it by sailing by it. That is a chart on trial. If there is a rock where it says "rock;" if there is a shoal where it says "shoal;" if there is a current where it says "current;" if it is safe where it says "safe," then it is a true chart, no matter who made it, or how or when or where it was made.

It is the sea that is the best test of a chart; so is the human life the test of the Bible. Take God's word, in which human life is charted down, and measure character and conduct by it; measure your whole self by it; measure God's grace by it; and see if it is not true. Would you know the truth of the Bible? Become a Christian. "If any man will do my will," says Christ, "he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."

CAPT. JAMES, a British officer, when leaving England for Abyssinia, jocularly promised a friend in Plymouth that he would send him a lock of King Theodore's hair. A few days ago the pledge was redeemed, a note accompanying it, in which Capt. James said: "I send you a real lock of King Theodore's hair. I cut it off myself as soon as we found his body in the gateway, and I assure you it is genuine. I little thought, when I promised this in fun, that it would be fulfilled in reality."

THE AFRICAN JUDGE.—Alexander of Macedonia came one day to a distant province in Africa, rich in gold. The inhabitants went to meet him, carrying baskets full of gold and fruit.

"Do you eat these fruits?" said Alexander. "I am not come to view your riches, but to learn your customs."

So they led him to the market, where their chief judge held his court. Just then a citizen stepped forth and said:

"O judge! I bought of this man a sack full of chaff, and have found in it a considerable treasure. The chaff is mine, but not the gold; and this man will not take it back. Speak to him, O judge, for it is his."

His adversary, also a citizen of the place, answered: "Thou art afraid lest thou shouldst retain something wrong, and I fear to take it from thee. I sold thee this sack, including all that it contains. Keep thine own. Speak to him to this effect, O judge!"

The judge asked the first if he had a son. He answered, "Yes." He asked the other if he had a daughter; and he also answered, "Yes." "Friends," said the judge, "you are both honest people; unite your children to each other, and give them the newly-found treasure for a marriage dower. This is my decision."

Alexander was astonished when he heard this sentence.

"Have I judged unrighteously," said the judge of the distant land, "that thou art thus astonished?"

"By no means," answered Alexander; "but in our country it would have been otherwise."

"And how?" inquired the African judge.

"The disputants," answered Alexander, "would have lost their heads, and the treasure would have come into the hands of the king."

The judge smote his hands together, and said: "Does the sun shine with you, and does heaven drop rain upon you?"

Alexander answered, "Yes."

"Then must it be," he pursued, "on account of the innocent animals that dwell in your land; for over such men ought no sun to shine, no heaven to rain."

THE ONE CHERISHED SIN.—Often from my window, on the sea-shore, have observed a little boat at anchor. Day after day, month after month, it is seen at the same spot. The tides ebb and flow, yet it scarcely moves. While many a gallant vessel spreads its sails, and, catching the favoring breeze, has reached the haven, this little bark moves not from its accustomed spot. True it is, that when the tide rises, it rises; and when it ebbs again, it sinks; but advances not. Why is this? It is fastened to the earth by one slender rope. There is the secret. A cord, scarcely visible, enchants it, and will not let it go. Now, stationary Christians, see here your state—the state of thousands. Sabbaths come and go, but leave them as before. Ordinances come and go; ministers come and go; means, privileges, sermons, move them not—yes, they move them; a slight elevation by a Sabbath tide, and again they sink; but no onward, heavenward movement. They are as remote as ever from the haven of rest; this Sabbath as the last, this year as the past. Some one sin enslaves, enchants the soul, and will not let it go. If it be so, make one desperate effort in the strength of God. Take the Bible as your chart, and Christ as your pilot, to steer you safely amid the dangerous rocks, and pray for the Spirit of all grace to fill your every sail, and waft you onward over the ocean of life, to the haven of everlasting life.

A SUGGESTION.—When superintendent of a Sunday school, I had a novel and simple arrangement which proved very valuable, and may assist others. A small wooden box, nicely painted, bearing the inscription, 'Question,' was securely fastened to the wall near the entrance; and through an opening in the top of it, any who desired might thrust in from time to time any religious or moral questions. Once a month our box was unlocked, and its contents produced before the school, giving any one an opportunity to answer the queries. Eventually our box only received questions upon the lesson of the day, which were deposited by teachers and scholars on entering the room. The first plan awakened a great interest among the members of the school, and of the community, many of the latter coming expressly at such times to listen to the answers. But the second plan had a wonderful influence, awakening great interest in the lesson. It gave me what I was so anxious to obtain, and could obtain in no other way: some knowledge of what the scholars had been thinking of during the week; at the same time it aided me in my work of catechising, for it furnished material and secured attention.

THE culture of tea is about to be introduced in Jamaica under the auspices of the English government.

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1868.

To SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

TO AGENTS.—A NEW THOUGHT!

We wish them to forward promptly the money when they send the name of the subscriber, not because their credit is not the very best at this office, but because we need daily food, and the food of a printing press is money. But we urge them, by all the thieves in the Post Office Department, and they are legion, to either remit in a post office order, in a draft, by express, or register. We have given the order of preference as to security. To hold back a subscription one month is to each of our five hundred agents a small matter. To us it is like cutting the Croton Aquednct.

MISSIONARY DEBT.

Rev. J. Bancroft, of Macon, Mississippi, sends ten dollars for the missionary debt, which we forwarded, by post office order, to W. T. Smithson, treasurer, at Baltimore.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. A. Parker, of the Montgomery Conference, was in our office this week. We regret having seen so little of him; and still more, that our people here were not in a condition to respond to the object of his mission.

Rev. T. J. Lacey, of the Louisiana Conference, has been with us for a few days, on his return from British Hondnras. He has seen enough of that country, and comes back to stay. "Is this Bro. Lacey?" "Yes, what is left of me." His sojourn in the tropics has not proved a hair dye, nor a renovator of the constitution. Bro. Lacey showed us the scars of the "beef worm," and has evidently suffered much from sickness. Under all the circumstances, he believes Louisiana to be the better country, negro suffrage and Radical rule notwithstanding. The estimony of some who are in Honduras will doubtless be different, and their observation and experience of matters there may be of a more cheering character. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

THE Christian life is not an engagement by contract between a master and his servant. It is the union of two hearts—that of the Saviour and the saved by the enduring ties of the most intimate love.

PRAISE.

It is the utterance of the loving and grateful heart, and of the holiest affections. In the present life it flows and mingles in the currents of prayer and conflict, sometimes jubilant and exulting over the discords of infirmity and sin, and sometimes silent under the weight of sorrow. Here our praises are interrupted; in heaven they will be continuous, and form the chief part of its worship. Praise is the duty of all, and yet it is impossible to any but the holy. Spirituality is the singing robe, "the garment of praise," which God gives in exchange for the spirit of heaviness.

Other songs the wicked have, as of love, and war and earthly glory; contrition and every emotion of the awakened soul may be wailed and sung, and dead formality may come to the sanctuary with its stately offerings of instrument and voice; but there is no praise. None but the holy can or do praise God. The "new song" is put into the month of the regenerated soul. It is new because he never praised before, and because it is in contrast with the old songs of unbelief, and of the spirit of bondage to fear.

"Making melody in the heart unto the Lord" is Paul's most striking and beautiful description of the nature of praise. The pure heart is the wonderful instrument, divinely tuned, and vibrating under the breathings of the Holy Spirit. Its strings and keys are in perfect accord, and all within is harmony. The Psalmist evokes this most complete music when he exclaims: "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." Praise is the exponent of a joyful religion, and is therefore the true exhibition of real Christianity. Assurance, hope, comfort and love, victory over sin and death, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, make the faith of Christ a faith of cheerfulness. It is joy in the Holy Ghost. The baptism of the spirit is a baptism of joy. Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. Whatever may be the dark paths through which the sinner comes to God, and whatever may be the dreadful shades of temptation through which the believer is occasionally called to pass, it is his common privilege to be anointed with the oil of gladness.

Religion alone enables us to rejoice evermore, and maketh our cup to run over. Praise, then, is the true expression of a genuine gospel experience—the crown and flower of the graces. Something it is, most like heaven, and that will accompany us through the gates into the Eternal City. It may be paralleled to charity, because it is immortal. Prayer ceases on the threshold of eternity; faith and hope, as to their present functions, have served their time. The last tear has dropped, and with it every saddening and sorrowful groan incident to the house of clay. Praise alone is regal and deathless, investing the soul in its flight with the ascension robes of melody, and sitting down, at length, amidst the songs and harps of the angels.

"Praise is comely to the upright." We may say it is impossible to any other, but is befitting to them as the appropriate costume and adornment of redeemed and grateful creatures. The Christian without praise is a greater incongruity, a more violent anomaly, than the lark without its song or the thrush without its whistle. In the strange land of captivity there may be no gladness, but if we have entered into a spiritual liberty, the language of the heart is: "I will praise thee, O Lord! I will praise thee." The comeliness of our religion lies much in this spirit of praise. Its beauty and attractiveness are in the aspect of cheerfulness which it commands. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Without praise religion is gloomy and forbidding, and solemn asceticism and unmitigated melancholy are false interpretations of the Christian spirit. With whatever sincerity and earnestness these may be associated, they are misleading and false as exhibitions of true religion. Joy and gladness are the elements of its highest and best attainments. Where Jesus reigns in the soul the heart is filled with melody, sunshine spreads over the landscape, and the very clouds are woven into scenes and pictures of delight.

Praise is a religious power. Nothing so commends religion as this; and in it our light, as Christians, shines most persuasively. It is aggressive, convincing and conquering in its influence upon the world. It is the true type of scriptural experience, and what the miserable and guilty feel that they need. It is the thing for life and for death, adapted to the changing fortunes of time, and the final hour when the last enemy must be met. Praise is the language of holy living, and even more, of tranquil dying. The sanctified spirit breaks away from the earthly tabernacle with a doxology, and the benediction of the parting saint passes into praise. Peard Dickinson, in his last moments, suddenly exclaimed to his attendants: "Stop! say nothing but glory, glory!" All was swallowed up in praise.

The spirit of praise seeks for expression, and where it pervades a congregation there will be heartiness, life and volume in the singing. This spontaneous inward emotion will not only seek expression, but it will find it. An impetus will be given to the study and practice of sacred music, and the heart that is moved to praise God will not be indifferent to the highest excellencies of art. The more profound the devotional feeling, the deeper will be the desire for a comely, reverent and effective expression. The Wesleyan revival developed the music of praise, and inspired the sacred lyrics, and the melody, which were scarcely less effective than the preaching. The singing is indeed the most spiritual part of worship, because it is the utterance of the spiritual life, and the highest and most direct approach to God in adoration and praise. A little unclean of sinners in an organ loft, whilst Christian people sit in silence and listen to the performance, is a dreadful burlesque.

Developed from this point of view, it becomes a matter of conscience with Christians to learn to utter praise, and to have their children taught the science and the art of sacred music. The young should be taught these elements as religiously as they are instructed in the catechism. It is as much a duty as to teach them to pray. There is much carelessness and neglect amongst us on this subject. Many who sing are indifferent about the manner of it, and never study to improve themselves. Many more think as little of it as of things belonging to the higher spheres. This is a sin against God, and damaging to our own souls. "Let all the people praise thee." "Not one in ten only," says Wesley. Our Founder insisted even upon the different parts. We put it pointedly to pious consciences whether we ought not to come back to the practice of the primitive Methodism, and give to praise, both as a grace and an utterance, that sacred importance which it rightfully claims.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

On Monday evening last the commencement exercises of this college were attended by a fine audience. A full account will appear in our next week's paper. The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred by the college upon the Rev. Linus Parker, of Louisiana Conference, and the Rev. Thos. E. Bond, of Baltimore.

AT THE recent commencement of the Southern University, Greensboro, Alabama, the degree of D. D. was conferred on Rev. A. H. Redford, of Nashville, Tennessee, and Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Selma, Alabama.

ABOUT 6,000 persons, of both sexes, are employed in cleaning the streets of Paris. The daily wages of the men average about 50 cents, and those of the women 40 cents.

CHINESE coolies drown themselves at Havana at the rate of twenty a week.

WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

The candidates of the Democratic party are now nominated. Horatio Seymour and Frank P. Blair are now fairly before the people, and we suppose the contest in the political arena will go on with increasing earnestness until November. The nominations seem to satisfy the conservative people of the country; and the platform adopted at New York meets the approval of all who wish to see the Constitution restored and maintained as the charter of civil liberty.

The Southern people look to the triumph of this party as the only immediate hope of deliverance. This may not be so certain nor so immediate as we could desire, but it is the only reasonable and probable deliverance from the nearly intolerable burdens which weigh upon us. That there are encouraging prospects of relief in this direction we cannot doubt, and it is, therefore, the duty of all good citizens to strengthen the hands of those who are fighting the political battle for us, as well as for themselves. Especially is it incumbent upon thoughtful Christian men to promote peace by all means. This is unquestionably the desire of the people, and we sincerely believe that the admirable temper, so long maintained under the greatest provocations, will be displayed to the end. Violent collisions and local disturbances must be avoided by all means. The glow of Radical fanaticism is waning in the North, and a few martyrs are now the greatest want of our enemies. Let our people determine that they shall not have them. A broken-headed adventurer from the South would now be gratefully welcomed among them as a missionary of hope to their cause.

There are now many causes of irritation, and there are in store for us occasions of deep exasperation. In Louisiana the military commander has turned over the government to the civil authorities. As these authorities are now constituted, we have nothing to expect but increased humiliation and oppression. Like devils about to be exorcised, those in power will be filled with a more malignant rage. They will tear and devour as demons who are soon to be cast out. Our schools will probably be virtually destroyed, and the most odious measures will be enacted for the enforcement of social equality. In view of what is already inflicted upon us, and of what remains, it becomes us to resolve upon patience, and thus defeat the purposes and wishes of those politicians who, at a safe distance from the path of the tornado, would rejoice to see it sweep over us.

Time, in any case, will bring relief. Even a generation is a moment in the life-time of a nation, and should the extremists hold power for another four years, we should still believe in the ultimate and peaceable triumph of the right. But with the brightening skies in the North, and the harbingers of a better day to dawn upon the land in November, we can afford to have patience. The troubles which we deprecate can arise from two very different causes. They may spring from momentary passion, under aggravated provocations. Here is perhaps the greatest danger to our peace, and we must fortify ourselves against any such unwise betrayal of the vital interests which tranquility alone can secure. In the present situation of affairs, the wise man's aphorism is eminently applicable: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city."

Another source from which our peace is endangered is the indulgence of a spirit of despair with reference to the situation. Where all is lost, there is nothing to curb and restrain under the pressure of dishonor and insult; but, so long as there is hope of relief, there are the strongest motives for calmness and self-control. Against this groundless discouragement, this vicious despair, we should carefully guard. We have abundant reasons for hopefulness, and, to the extent of these reasons, all should be solicitous to maintain an unbroken front of quiet and sublime endurance. Here Christian duty and expediency are in harmony. "Blessed are the peacemakers" always; and more blessed than ever at this time, and in this crisis of our political affairs. The experience of the last few months has demonstrated that much can be done even here, and throughout the Southern States, in the peaceable exercise of the ballot. The extremists may be met upon their own ground, and foiled in the use of their own weapons. It is far from certain that universal suffrage will inure to the success of those who, for partisan purposes, have inaugurated it.

In the prospects for good crops, and the improving tone of all our industrial interests, there are reasons for thankfulness. With an improved political condition, the country will begin to build up, and the days of prosperity will return. Religion, education, arts, manufactures and all industrial pursuits will be filled with new life. The night is yet upon us, with its oppressive darkness, and dismal echoes, and vagrant omens of evil. Let us have "patience to labor and to wait." Prayerful people must not forget their duties and responsibilities; neither must they lose sight of the fact that their "supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks" are to be offered up, "that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." This "is a day of trouble and of treading down, and of perplexity," but the morning cometh if prudence and calmness prevail amongst ourselves. Our churches have much at stake, and the religious interests of the country are involved in the questions which are to agitate the land for months to come. To be the salt of the earth now, to seek peace and ensue it, is to seek the welfare of Zion and the good of the State.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

The following notice of the examination and commencement exercises of this institution is taken from the Shreveport Southwestern. From other sources we learn that the occasion was one of great interest, and gave unusual satisfaction. This school has accomplished much for education and religion, and is destined to wide and increasing usefulness. We doubt not the fall session will open with an encouraging roll of pupils. This institution should receive the patronage of our people to whom it may be accessible. The property and school are in the hands of the Louisiana Conference, and there is no better place for the education of young ladies in the bounds of the State. For ourselves, we would not hesitate to incur considerable extra trouble and expense, if these were necessary, in order to place a daughter under the care of President Stuart and his accomplished wife. Our boys ought to be educated, but our girls must be. Which is of greater importance, where both are surpassingly so, admits of no debate in our estimate of the subject. Here is already a large outlay in property, belonging to the conference—a school of years' standing, and under the conduct of a gentleman whose character and reputation as an educator are in themselves a sufficient guarantee of efficiency and success. Our preachers, who work for this institution, are promoting thereby the best interests of society and religion.

"The examinations commenced on Saturday, the 20th, and continued until Tuesday evening. The young ladies stood remarkably well, and gave unmistakable evidence of having been thoroughly and faithfully taught. On Saturday, the 21st, at 11 o'clock, the sermon before the graduating class was preached by Rev. T. B. White, of the Louisiana Conference, now stationed at Minden. It was a chaste and finished production, and in a high degree interesting and acceptable to the large audience. On Tuesday night a concert of vocal and instrumental music was given, under the direction of Miss L. O. Rentrop, who has charge of this department of the institution. It was a complete success, and gave evidence of the great labor and pains of Miss R., as exhibited in the rapid progress of her pupils. Wednesday was commencement day. At an early hour the spacious chapel of the college was crowded—indeed, it was one of the largest crowds ever assembled on a similar occasion. At 10 o'clock the annual oration was delivered by Col. H. C. Hall, of your city. He spoke for an hour without manuscript, holding his audience spellbound the entire time. It was a speech of uncommon brilliancy and power, and universally acknowledged as one of the ablest and most appropriate addresses ever delivered before the institution. Then followed the graduates with their essays, viz: Miss Sallie Ann Thom, of De Soto—subject, 'Fireside Angels;' Miss Emma T. Wimbish, of Mansfield—subject, 'Onward;' Miss Mary E. Dennis, of Smith county, Texas—subject, 'Divine Thought;' Miss Corine Eggleston, of Mansfield, the valedictory address.

"The young ladies did well, reflecting much credit upon themselves and their preceptors. Everything passed off successfully and pleasantly, and all present were impressed with the thoroughness, the system and the superior discipline of the Mansfield Female College."

WATSON DYER GOODWYN.

Rev. P. M. Goodwyn writes as follows of the death of his son, Watson Dyer. The letter tells all we need to know—the happy death of a most promising and pious youth. There was abundant comfort and hope in it. Sad as sad can be to the stricken hearts that linger here; but such a death is something to be thankful for. Deeply as we deplore the loss, and sympathize with our afflicted brother, we will also praise the Infinite Father for such displays of grace. Let our young people read and think of the testimony of this youthful Christian, and let it be to them a persuasive to give their hearts to God:

THIBODEAUX, July 11, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: To day I mourn the death of my dear son Wattie, (Watson Dyer.) He died at the residence of my brother-in-law, Mr. F. W. Bike, in Assumption parish, on the 9th inst., at 5½ o'clock p. m., after an illness of only a few days. And, but for the confidence I have that he rests in peace, it seems to me there would be no consolation for me now. In childhood he was dedicated to God in holy baptism. He was taught to pray, and this practice he continued, with few intermissions, to the day of his death. On the morning of that day he had the family called, told them that he was about to leave them, kissed each one, and bade them good-by. With some members of the household he talked awhile, after which he offered up a long prayer. He prayed for his father and his brother—neither of whom were present—for all his relatives, and for his enemies; said he had no ill will against any; was willing to die, and felt that he was prepared; quoted a number of passages of Scripture that were to the point, and very full of comfort; and amidst all he was perfectly calm and composed. He said he would like so much to see his dear brother H. once more in this world. But if he never did, hoped, by the help of God, to meet him in heaven; wished very much to see me. I arrived at twenty minutes to one, and had the mournful pleasure of hearing my poor, dear boy call me "pa" once more. I asked him if he felt that he could put his trust in God. "Yes," said he; but in a very short while he became delirious, and so continued pretty much all the time to the end. His age was sixteen years, six months and twenty-six days. Three of our household have now passed over the stream, and are waiting on the other shore. Two of us yet remain, but we shall pass ere long.

P. M. GOODWYN.

To the Preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

REV. AND DEAR BRETHREN: Your secretary is at work to the extent of his ability. He is visiting annual conferences, district meetings, etc.; but he cannot possibly cover the whole field in a brief period. He and the church are greatly dependent on you for success in our domestic missionary enterprise. Have you made your annual collections? Please do not forget this important department of our Zion. New fields are inviting us to enter and cultivate Immanuel's land. We must have the means. Let application be made to all the friends of our cause; let every member of the church, old and young, rich and poor, contribute to the cause of missions. Now please do not delay. If you have not made the call, ask your brethren and friends for aid, and it will be given. I have never failed to get a generous response when properly presenting the claims of missions. Let every man do his duty.

CIVIL LAW.

On Monday, the day of Governor Warmoth's inauguration, the following order was issued by Gen. Buchanan. "Military law no longer exists; the civil law is supreme." Alas! for us, with such law and law-givers as we now have. The tender mercies of the new constitution and Legislature are to be more depreeated than any military rule. Bot our people must submit to be free from military bondage, and take their restored statehood with as good a graee as possible:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DIST., New Orleans, La., July 13, 1868.

Special Orders No. 154.

[Extract.]

* * * * *

The commanding general having beea officially notified of the ratification of the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, on the 9th instant, it becomes his duty under the net of Congress, which beeame a law June 25th, 1868, and the orders of the General of the Army, to announce to the people of the State and to the troops under his command, that the provisions of the reconstruction acts of Congress cease to operate in Louisiana from this date. Military authority will no longer be exercised under the reconstruction acts in said State, and all officers commanding posts or detachments are forbidden to interfere in civil affairs, unless upon a proper application by the civil authorities to preserve the peace, or under instructions duly received from the commanding general of the district. Military law no longer exists; the civil law is supreme.

All civil officers now acting under authority of appointments from these headquarters will at once transfer their offices; with the records, funds and other property pertaining thereto, to their successors who have been declared duly elected, and who have qualified under the laws of the State. All other records properly belonging to the State will be transferred to the proper State officers.

The commanding general cannot sever the relations heretofore existing between the State and himself without congratulating the people upon an event which fully restores Lonisiana to her former position among the other States of the Union, and to all her rights under the Constitution. Peace and quiet marked the late election, showing the softening influences of mutual forbearance. Should such forbearance animate the councils of the State, the era of kind feeling will return, and the highest prosperity of the people will be attained.

That this may be the result, under the guidance of a merciful Providence, is his devout and earnest prayer. May her restoration to the benefits of our beloved Union mark the commencement of a new era of prosperity and happiness for her people.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

THOS. H. NEILL, Brevet Brig. General, A. A. A. G.

Official: Wm. Russell, Jr., Second Lieut. 4th Cavalry, A. A. A. G.

Bishop McIlvaine, of Ohio, has delivered an address to the Ohio convention, in which he has vigorously rebuked the practice, now coming in vogue, of opening divine service with processional singing. A choir of men and boys, vested in surplices, enters the church at the front door, proceeds, singing as it advances, up the middle aisle, till it reaches the seats (called stalls) before the chancel, where the procession finds its seats, the congregation being expected to stand until the choristers are seated. The bishop objects to the processional singing as being contrary to the rubrics, and to the vestments as being forbidden to the laity. It is not that he cares so much for invasion of the dignity of clerical millinery, as that, when the surplice becomes no longer distinctive of the clergy, they then adopt the chasuble, dalmatic and tunicle, which are regarded as emblematizing the doctrino that the holy communion is a eucharistic sacrifice offered by the officiating priest. Bishop McIlvaine, at the beginning of the Tractarian movement, in 1846, refused to consecrate a church in which the communion table was replaced by an altar-shaped structure, because it was intended to support this same popish doctrino.

A RULE FOR TALKERS.—No one who wishes that conversation should be pleasant to his neighbors, as well as himself, should speak more than two or three sentences at once. However much he may have to say, it will be all the more agreeably said for giving others the opportunity of assenting, illustrating, qualifying, or even contradicting. The ball needs to be returned by the opposite player to make a lively game. Blackwood's Magazine.

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. ELIZABETH ROBERTSON died at the residence of her husband, near Black Hawk, Carroll county, Mississippi, May 9, 1868, aged 53 years and 23 days.

The subject of this memoir was born in Johnson county, North Carolina, March 17, 1815. She removed to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1830. It was here she first commenced to seek the Lord. During the autumn of 1832, at a camp meeting near Tuscaloosa, she was converted. Being discouraged, she made up her mind to go to the altar for prayers no more. An unbelieving friend insisted that she should go once more. She decided to go again, and this time to lay her own prayers and tears, and the prayers of her friends, upon the blessed Saviour, and to give her case fully into his hands, and do no more.—Fearful that this test would drive the Lord from her, and leave her a helpless sinner, she came with fear and trembling. The tempter told her she "dare not do it." She had resolved, and felt that she would, when lo! a subduing power filled her mind with unutterable peace, and, as she expressed it, before her mind, as clear as in letters of light, were the words: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." With a change in all her feelings, in which she could not be mistaken, she arose, and those who saw her thought she did shine. No change from the sad and disconsolate to the happy and joyous could have been more marked than in her case. Her unbelieving friend was so wrought upon by the change so plainly marked in her appearance and feelings that he sought and found the Lord.

In her seventeenth year she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. She never regretted giving her heart to God in her early life. In 1834 she was married to Mr. William B. Robertson, who still survives her. Her place at church was always filled. In the Sunday school her labors were unremitting when her health would permit. Her chief interest was with the very young, and with these she labored with such affection that she won a mother's influence over them. I have known them to form companies to visit her, and many a sad young heart followed her remains to the grave. Her private devotions were most scrupulously observed. Though for a number of years in feeble health, her fast days were rigorously kept. No business crowded out her Bible reading and her private prayers, and when afflicted or unusually depressed, with her Bible, in prayer and communion with her God, hours and hours were spent alone. Her children, when young, were taken with her on these occasions, and were most solemnly impressed with the spirit as well as the form of prayer.

An attack of pneumonia upon her delicate constitution left her in an irreconcilable decline. She was confined to her room and bed for months, a great sufferer, but sweet and peaceful amidst it all. She often shouted aloud in praise to God for his goodness. She expressed herself ready to depart, but willing to live and labor for the church, or suffer and endure for the sake of Christ. When she felt that she was near her end she called for her favorite hymn:

"Father, I stretch my hand to thee," and then asked for:

"I'm happy, I'm happy, oh! wondrous account. My joys are immortal, I stand on the mount."

With her eyes fixed heavenward, heaving with inward joy, she shouted: "Glory, glory!" Then lifting her clay cold hands, which for days had lain almost useless by her side, she clapped them with unnatural force above her, exclaiming in a tone of voice high above any she had used, perhaps, for months: "Glory, honor and salvation!" Then dropping her hands, relapsing into silence, she closed her eyes and was dead. JOSEPH H. NEWSOM

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.:—I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely.—The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Your's, very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', Mass., June 9, '67.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than formerly. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair. With respect,
WM. S. EDDY.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS OF THE

Central Pacific Railroad Comp.,

BEARING SIX PER CENT. PER annum. Principal and interest expressly payable in

GOLD COIN

OF THE UNITED STATES.

These Securities, based upon the most favored portion of the Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

representing the first claim thereon, and which rest upon a valuable and productive property furnished by an equal amount of the Government Bonds, and a similar amount of private capital, net earnings, donations, etc. They have thirty years to run, are already taken in large amounts for steady investments both in this country and in Europe, and are favorably regarded as being among the very offered on this continent, and are believed to be secure against all ordinary contingencies.

The Bonds are $1,000 each, with semi-annual coupons attached, payable in New York city in January and July, and are offered for sale at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

in currency, from the date of the payment of the last coupon. At the present rates of gold they yield

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

with the prospect of a steady appreciation of the premium upon the Bonds.

The Company have now built and in successful operation 150 miles of road, on both slopes of the Sierra Nevada mountains, including by far the most difficult and expensive portion of the whole. They have also an unprecedented force, extending the track into the Salt Lake basin, the middle of which will be reached in autumn, making more than 330 miles in operation. Several important tributary branch and connecting roads are projected and now being built, and the prospect is fair that the continuous will be completed early in 1870, or about two years from this time.

The net earnings from local business, merely, for the past year, upon less than 100 miles, operating under temporary disadvantages, amounted to $1,087,901, in gold, over the operating expenses; and the gross earnings for the first quarter of the current year were 50 per cent. greater than for the same period in 1867. It is estimated that the net earnings for 1868 will reach $2,500,000, which, after deducting interests payments (estimated at less than $1,000,000,) are applied to construction purposes. Besides further subscription to the capital stock and other resources, the Company will be receiving from the United States Government its 30-year six per cent. Bonds at the rate of $32,000 per mile, and are therefore enabled to carry forward the enterprise with the utmost confidence and vigor.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. HELMBOLD.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

MORNING MUSIC.

BY LUCILLA CLARK.

Do you love the merry music
Of the village bells at morn,
When the dew sleeps in the commune,
The shadows in the corn?

Do you love the earliest cadence,
Of bird-song, clear and low
In the garden or the green wood
Greeting you where you go?

Do you love the quiet murmur
Of the river wide and deep—
The whispering of its flowing waves,
That never, never sleep?

Do you love to hear the breezes
Go singing past your door,
Kissing each leaf that they have kissed
A thousand times before?

Do you love the swallow's chirping
Under the cottage eaves,
Or the robin's earliest matin,
From out the clustering leaves?

O rich and fair, on earth, in air,
Of the free, glad mornings here
Are the sights and sounds whose daily rounds
Make glad the summer years.

Little Corporal.

THE TWO LITTLE FISHES.

BY S. W. LANDER.

In a clear pool lived two lovely little fishes. One was as yellow as gold, and the other was white, like silver, except a couple of black spots on his fins. They were good little things, and swam happily about.

Not far from the little pool there was some deep water, where there were all kinds of large fishes.

One day the gold fish said to the silver fish: 'Come, let us go into the deep water; it is too solitary and confined here.'

'Ah, no!' answered the silver fish, 'I would rather stay here: we have room enough, and can play so beautifully with the sunbeams.'

'But there is much more room there, and a great many more sunbeams,' said the self-willed gold fish. 'Come with me, or, I shall go all alone!'

So he swam away; and simply because the silver fish did not wish to forsake his brother he swam after him.

In the deep water there was an enormous pickerel, who liked to devour all the little fishes he could find.

When he saw these little ones coming he swam to them, opened his great jaws and snapped at them.

He had big sharp teeth, but he did not take time to bite the fish—he swallowed them whole, and that was nice for them, because they could stay alive inside of him. But it was very uncomfortable for them there, as you may suppose. It was quite dark, and they had to lie so near together that they could hardly move.

They complained bitterly, and the gold fish said: 'Ah, if we were only in the clear little pool, where we had so much room. O dear! O dear! If I only had some sun and air! I shall die if I don't have some soon!'

But the good silver fish comforted his little brother, saying:

'Keep quiet now; it will be better soon.'

And soon it was better, for a fisherman came to the big pond to catch fish. He cast his net and caught the large pickerel, and with him the two little fishes which he had swallowed. The fisherman carried him home, cut him open, and—see! the two little fishes came tumbling out.

They looked so pretty and delicate that the man put them into a large glass of pure water, and brought them to the children's mother. She bought them for her children, and the little fishes were forced to live in a smaller home than their pool was; but they were very happy that they had come out from the dark stomach of the pickerel, and could live in a glass of clear water, through which the sun shone cheerfully.

And they are swimming there happily to this day; and every child who sees them is delighted with their beauty.—Home Circle.

HAPPINESS.—True happiness is of a retired nature, and an enemy to pomp and noise; it arises, in the first place, from the enjoyment of one's self; and in the next, from the friendship and conversation of a few select companions; false happiness loves to be in a crowd, and to draw the eyes of the world upon her. She does not receive any satisfaction from the applauses which she gives herself, but from the admiration which she raises in others. Addison.

THE joy of the spirit is a delicate, sacred deposit, and must be kept in a pure casket; an unholy breath will dim its lustre and fade its freshness.—Cecil.

As the magnetic needle points always toward the Pole, so does pure love evermore point its possessor toward that God whose nature and whose name is love.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE USE OF LIME IN ENGLAND.

BY KEITH.

A few words as to the application of lime to meadow and pasture. There cannot be two opinions that it is of very great advantage when the land is in a fit state to receive it. As to the mode of application, it may be spread on the surface of the grass in a slacked state, or, what is far better, mixed in a compost being mixed in due proportion with earth, such as the scouring out of ditches and ponds, old banks of hedges, or accumulations in the headlands. The more vegetable matter it contains the better. The shells of burnt lime are first mixed all through with the earth in due proportion, say on the headland, and there allowed to remain until the time for turning over, which is precisely when the lime has slacked into a dry, hot powder, as the whole will then mix and incorporate into a warm mass; but it should never be allowed to burn. It should not be removed, at the earliest, until cold. A dressing with this compost will not only much increase the quantity of grass, but what is more so sweeten it by promoting the growth of the finer clover and grasses, that, when grazed by stock, it will be eaten down to the ground, and will tell a profitable tale in the condition of animals, in the dairy, or when made into hay, by its fragrance as well as quantity. Not only quick lime, but mild and old, and, indeed, calcareous matter in any form, will effect a great change for the better on grass land. I tried an experiment of this kind ten years ago, with marked success, on some low lying meadows of about ten acres. They were so wet that they could scarcely be passed over in winter, and were composed, for the most part, of a hungry clay to within two or three inches of the surface, and bore the sourest and coarsest grasses and rushes. Having effectually drained the land, I was in doubt whether it would be best to plow before laying down to permanent pasture, or to endeavor to renovate the grasses without breaking the surface. I decided on the latter, for I feared to bring up the tenacious clay and bury the thin sward. An extensive old building, about a mile distant, was at the time being pulled down. I bought the old mortar and lime rubbish at a small price, and set several women to pick and screen it, and carted some three hundred or four hundred loads to the meadows, as a top dressing. At the same time I gave a thin sprinkling of perennial grass seed to assist nature in forming a new clothing. The scene was soon changed, the meadows put on a smiling face, being covered, for the most part, with the sweetest herbage of grasses and clovers. Thus land not worth, I believe, 30s. an acre, though very near the town, would now let at high rent. This lime rubbish in large quantity proved just about the thing that these meadows required to open and ameliorate the heavy clay, correct acidity, and decompose the inert vegetable matter in the soil, thus exerting both a mechanical and chemical action. That this lime rubbish, fifty years old, still retained considerable causticity was proved by its effect on the fingers of the women, who were soon obliged to put on gloves to continue their work. Again, nowhere, perhaps, is lime, particularly quick lime, more useful than in breaking up rough turf or reclaiming overgrown waste land. The lime should be spread hot upon the surface, and at once plowed in, and the land subjected to the winter frosts; and if very foul with the roots of such trash as fern, furze or briars, it should be continued a summer fallow, otherwise these enemies cannot be killed and got rid of, but will be forever springing up and troubling you, and be as thorns in your sides, as the Hittites, Amorites and Perizzites were to the Israelites, because they were not extirpated out of the land. I am at present doing this kind of work, and on some considerable breadth of land, so overgrown with furze that the roots have all to be grubbed out by manual labor before the plow can make its way. But, although expensive work, it is far better than paring and burning, unless you wish to kill the goose for the golden egg, and ruin the land (except the soil is very deep) for a generation. Lime is also invaluable in reclaiming bog and peat land after draining. The application of lime must be regulated by the circumstances of the case. On arable land, under a regular course of cultivation, say in light periodical dressings, and on the stronger soils, clays and meadow lands, in heavier doses, at longer intervals. It now remains for me to mention some cases in which the application of lime is disadvantageous and unprofitable. I have already intimated that it is worse than useless to apply it to land that has been already exhausted by it in growing successive crops of corn, in which little organic matter of any kind remains for the lime to act upon. And this is very commonly the case on lands near to towns or where the lime is very abundant and cheap. Everything that would feed the plant is scratched out of the soil, which becomes like a mass of spare bed in which it ever dying human will always rest either in the earth, or the cemetery. The success that followed one application of lime, no doubt, led to another application, but disappointment has resulted, and when no more corn could be got out of the land it has been left fallow to rest, and become unprofitable for years, until it acquired a thin sward of vegetation to be again, with a dose of lime and all the little manure of the farm yard subjected to the same process, that is, to produce wheat, oats and barley, to succession, and again laid down hungry and foul with weeds. You will mark that the consequence of this system is to keep the farm down to the lowest state of production—hungry and exhausted. Whereas, on the other hand, a well-regulated system of alternate cropping, whether a four, five or six-course rotation, always maintains the farm in good heart and fertility.—Southern Cultivator.

BEE-KEEPING.

It is related that a Catholic priest in Ireland, when visiting his parishioners, had always noticed that one bedridden old man was always surrounded not only by comforts, but by what were esteemed luxuries, among his neighbors, though he had no visible means. On inquiry of the good wife, one day, the source of their prosperity, she led him to the back of the house, where, ranged on a rude stand, were numbers of restived, saying, "Behold our laborers! early and late they are at work to keep us comfortable." Striking an impression was made upon the old priest, that thenceforth when any one complained in his presence of sickness, hard times, poverty or poor crops, his invariable reply was, "Keep bees, my friend: keep bees."

Though I would not, like his reverence, propose bee-keeping as a remedy for all the ills of life, I would be glad to promote a more general interest in bees and their intelligent keeping than now exists. Not only is the business profitable beyond any other branch of rural pursuits, but also so fascinating that no one ceases to be interested after once engaging in it. The care of bees is well suited to fill up the leisure moments of ministers of the gospel. Some of the most successful apiarists in this country are clergymen, while in Germany, men who have made great discoveries in apiarian science, and are also practical bee-keepers, are found in the ranks both of the Protestant and Catholic clergy.

Women, also, may appropriately perform all the light duties appertaining to bee-keeping. It will afford them delightful out-door recreation and labor; and their children will learn from them to find, in noticing the ways and industry of the bee, not only the moral lessons conveyed so long ago by Watts, but also habits of investigation and hints on natural history which will be of life-long benefit to them.

Bee-keeping is no longer shrouded in mystery as once it was; everything pertaining to the natural history of the insect is made plain, and common sense rules in their management. It has also been demonstrated that, in all parts of our country, bees can be kept with profit. Unlike some branches of business, this requires little capital to commence with. It is not necessary to own land or houses to succeed. Your beehives may stand upon a rented yard, and their busy inmates gather honey from crops that other men have planted and tended. Neither is much study required to understand how to care for bees intelligently. Others have spent years in acquiring the art by diligent research and observation, united with practical experience. The result of their labor is given simply in cheap works upon the subject. Any one now who will procure and study one of the little books on bee culture, and then purchase a colony or two of bees, is ready for the work; and I am sure that these steps taken, there will be enough interest in the matter to insure any one satisfactory progress.

At this season of the year all who now have bees are interested to know how they may best winter them. Many bees die every winter in all parts of this country, and in this, as in almost every other point where people fail in this business, ignorance pertaining to the subject is the cause; not hard winters, bad seasons, nor yet "worms."

Bees are not killed by cold; for, though a bee separate from the cluster is easily chilled, if a cluster or colony is of sufficient size they are able to maintain collectively enough animal heat in the coldest climate. Their food, too, must be where they can reach it with ease and safety, and they must also have rest from that they may breathe and the evaporations from their bodies may pass off freely. My repetitions of a thousand warnings upon this simple theme. Numbers suffocate to maintain a requisite warmth of food to feed these numbers from the time they cease to afford bodily heat to keep it from part of the cluster as they can reach it freely and rest and be served to them in such a way that no draft is caused through the cluster.

If these are given to the bees, you may leave them where they are entered by the snow or plow them in doors and it will be found that in steady prolonged winters in cold climates, bees having these requisites to the fullest, will much better than in mild winters of warm latitudes.

SCIENTIFIC.

AERONAUTIC SCIENCE.

The art of flying in the air has been for generations a subject of discussion and aspiration with mechanicians, but until within the last few years has been simply a plaything for pseudo-scientific men, resulting in nothing of really practical value, if we except the occasional use of the balloon in taking military observations, all or nearly all experiments in this line having been made by those whose faith was founded rather on exuberant creations of their day-dreams than on any data drawn by logical induction from the phenomena exhibited by the working of natural forces. Of late years, however, the possibilities of aerostatic science have been considered in a more rational spirit, and the truth accepted that the intricate and apparently unsolvable problem can only be successfully traveled by the adoption of hitherto unknown or untried means, elaborated and adapted to the end proposed by the most careful application of scientific truths. In order to bring to bear upon the subject in the greatest possible degree the three essentials of practical engineering experience, thorough theoretical training, and originative or inventive skill, aeronautic societies have been organized in several European countries, and it is reported that steps are being taken to form a like organization in the United States. The English society have taken precedence in publicity, and active exertion, and by their exhibition, commencing during the present month at the Crystal Palace, London, will undoubtedly draw out many new appliances relating to the different functions necessarily involved in the operation of an aerial machine, so that the year 1868 will probably be productive of more thorough discussion and investigation, and very likely of far more real progress, than has hitherto been attained.

The structure of birds, beetles, and other winged creatures has been recently very closely investigated, especially in France, and considerable data secured, which, even if not valuable in itself, may be suggestive of improvement. The lightness secured in the strong wing of the bird by the hollowness of the quill might, perhaps, be obtained to an equal extent in the frame of an aerostat by the use of thin but stiff tubes of tempered metal, especially if aluminium, which is as light as glass, could by any process be rendered capable of being made as stiff and strong as steel; and in like manner the strength stored in the muscles of the bat by nutrition in hours of rest might find its analogue in air compressed to a pressure of many atmospheres in reservoirs of like strong and light material, and applied to working vanes formed of stiff but slender rods covered with oiled silk.

Whatever the result of the present organized efforts to accomplish aerial navigation may be, those concerned in them are worthy of much praise for their energy and enterprise in what has hitherto been considered by all practical men as a futile and useless dream; for even should they be disappointed in the immediate objects of their labors, they can hardly fail to contribute something to the stock of human knowledge, while, should they after all succeed, they will have attained an end for which mankind has hoped and aspired in vain for ages.—American Artisan.

A NEW African exploring expedition has been fitted out in Dublin, and will start in a few days. It has been organized by Capt. Faulkner, who has had a pretty and ingeniously-constructed little steam yacht built for the party. They will pursue the exploration of Lake Nyassa from the point where Dr. Livingstone was last heard from. The party was to leave Southampton on the 9th of June, proceeding directly to the mouth of the Zambesi, and thence follow the track of the late expedition.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.

TENTH SESSION.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on Wednesday, October 2d, 1867.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education.

Particular care is bestowed on the moral and social culture of the pupils.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin mosquito-bar and all marked distinctly with his own name—also a suitable dozen of knives.

It is urgently requested that Students be prompt in their attendance. A few days absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS: Board and Tuition per session, $250.

PAYMENTS.—$200 in advance—balance 1st March.

Tuition of Day Scholars, per session, $75 00 payable—one half in advance—balance 1st March.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the School demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as Teachers, gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

SOUTH-WESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Where is it located? Its Depository and Bible-House is at its own building, No. 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

When was it established? 1850.

Who is its General Agent to whom correspondence on its business should be addressed? Rev J E C Holcombe, D.D.

Where is the Society's field of labor? All of Louisiana, and all of Mississippi, south of the 33rd parallel of North Latitude.

What is the object of the Society? To explore and supply (gratuitously where needed) the destitution of the Holy Scriptures.

What are the resources and whence the income of the Society? From the annual contributions of its members. Collections of Churches within its field, collections at public meetings and anniversaries. Appropriations of the surplus funds of its auxiliaries, the donations of generous individuals, testamentary bequests, and the annual donation in Books of the American Bible Society.

What is the Society's method of work? By cultivating its own local work in the city and district of New Orleans: then through Auxiliary Societies established or to be established in every Parish and County in the field, and the employment by them of such means as will accomplish the object of the Society.

What are the terms of membership?

The payment of $35 at one time constitutes a life member.

The payment of $150 at one time, constitutes a life Director.

The payment of $1000 at one time, constitutes a life Patron.

The payment of $3 annually, constitutes a member.

The taking up of a collection by a church constitutes the Pastor an honorary member.

Having thus briefly stated the main features of the Society's work, income and expenditure, the Board of Directors for the current year confidently ask the aid of all lovers of the Bible, whether professors of religion or not: to strengthen the hands of the S. W. B. S.: by founding or reviving Auxiliaries, by donating and urging donations, by exploring and reporting the destitution of the Scriptures, by commencing or renewing memberships of all grades and by establishing connections with the Society as the Lord has prospered them according to that Scripture which says "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." To ministers and professing Christians of every Orthodox Protestant Church, the Board of Directors, representing in its body, all such within our bounds, appeals with confidence to aid them by judicious effort, in prompt performance of duty and a prayerful commendation of the Society to the blessing of Almighty God, for except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it, except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain.

Our last thought is the heart-cry of the Great Reformation. No forbidding of the Word: no tampering with the text: no man's note or comment: God's Word: Christ's Word: the Holy Spirit's Word: Free: Free: Free. n25 1y.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Circulating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will be $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 613 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The favorable prospect of the growing crop imparts a better feeling to the general market, but, with few exceptions, operations continue on a very limited scale, nearly every branch of trade sharing in the prevailing apathy. There is, nevertheless, a moderate business doing in staple dry goods, and also in some other staple articles in the wholesale business, the supplies of which have been nearly exhausted in the interior.

The weather has continued seasonable, with frequent refreshing showers, which have kept down the temperature below the point it has ruled at in many of the Northern cities. We have nothing to add to our last report of the accounts from the country, which are generally decidedly encouraging, with but few exceptions.

The river has fallen one foot four inches since our last, and is now six feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—We left the market, at the date of our last report, ruling at 30 to 30½c. for Good Ordinary, 31 to 31½c. for Low Middling, and 32½c. for Middling, but with a wide difference between the views of factors and buyers, which was calculated to prevent any active movement, even had the stock justified it. On Saturday there was a fair inquiry during the early part of the day, but the accounts from Liverpool and New York being discouraging, although without any quotable decline, the movement was subsequently nearly suspended, and the day's business was confined to 200 bales, at easier prices, Good Ordinary ruling at 30c., Low Middling at 31c., and Middling at 32c. On Monday, in the face of a heavy market at Liverpool, where Middling Uplands was quoted at 11⅛d. and Orleans at 11⅜d., factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand at some concessions from previous prices, and easier rates stimulating the demand, the sales summed up 350 bales, at the reduced figures of 29½c. for Good Ordinary, 30c. for Low Middling, and 31c. for Middling, showing an irregular decline of one-half to one cent per lb. On Tuesday the market opened with a limited inquiry, buyers, in anticipation of a further decline, refusing to operate unless at figures below the views of holders, and the sales were consequently confined to about 50 bales, in trifling lots.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 600 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 308 bales, against 224 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 84 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 586,220 bales, against 706,340 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 294,915 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 46,561 bales to Great Britain, of 2,979 to France, and of 104,908 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —

Sugar.—Since our last review the market for Cuba sugar has continued quiet, though there has been more inquiry, and dealers look for increased activity at an early day. In the jobbing and retail demand there has been considerable improvement. The stock on hand is fair, and ample for the demand. There were sales on Saturday of 17 hogsheads fully fair, at 13¼ to 13½c. per pound, 60 hogsheads and 200 boxes on private terms; while on Monday and Tuesday business was confined to small lots at unchanged rates.

Molasses.—Cuba molasses has continued very dull and depressed, without even a fair retail business. The stock on hand is good, with very little demand for distilling purposes. It is still quoted nominally at 46½ to 52½c. per gallon, though sales cannot be effected at even considerably less rates than these.

Flour.—The market is quiet, and operations are restricted.

CANCER CAN BE CURED.

I BEG LEAVE HEREBY TO INform the public that I will guarantee a

in every case of Cancer, except where the disease has taken hold of a vital organ.

In confirmation of my ability to cure this disease I beg leave to offer the following certificates of two cures effected from most respectable parties, who now reside in this State. I will give to those applying for treatment the names of some of the most reputable gentlemen in this city as references for my personal responsibility and experience as a regular practitioner of medicine during the past twenty years. I have selected these certificates out of a number which I have received from parties who have been cured of Cancer, of long standing, by my treatment.

Persons wishing to consult will find me at No. 63 Carondelet street.

T. S. COLLIER, M. D.

Atlanta, February 15, 1868.

I certify that I had a very large Cancer on my lip, and one on my nose, both of which continued to grow worse for years. My friends, as well as quite a number of physicians, thought my case hopeless. I had paid out hundreds of dollars without finding any relief. On seeing one of Dr. T. S. Colier's cards, and hearing that he had never failed in curing Cancers, I went to him on the 5th of last month for treatment. I am now well, and would recommend him to all who have Cancers. For any further information write to me at Waterproof, Tensas parish, Louisiana. THOMAS A. JAMES

We, the undersigned, citizens of De Soto parish, Louisiana, do hereby certify that we saw Mr Thomas A James—now a resident of Tensas parish, Louisiana—in the year 1865, in this parish, suffering with Cancer on the lip, which we thought to be incurable

WILSON GODFREY, M D.
Mansfield, La.
WILLIAM C TAIT, M D,
Mansfield, La

The following is signed by most respectable citizens of Wynn parish, Louisiana:

We certify that Mr T A James, as well as quite a number of others, have been cured of Cancer by Dr T S Collier, and we believe that his remedies are an infallible cure for Cancer

SAMUEL PEACE.

I hereby certify that I had been afflicted with an eating Cancer for ten years. I tried every remedy that I could hear of, but to no purpose, till, hearing of Dr T S Colier's success in curing Cancers, I applied to him for treatment, when, to my utter astonishment, I was cured in a short time, leaving not even a scar. I believe Dr Collier can cure any case of Cancer

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

TREATY WITH THE CHINESE EMBASSY.

We copy as follows from a special Washington dispatch dated the 13th:

The government on Saturday concluded a treaty with the Chinese embassy, which it is expected the President will formally communicate to the Senate to-morrow. It is based on the idea of opening China to general trade, and of bringing her into the family of civilized nations. This, of course, is simply a treaty with us, but the embassy intend making one of a similar character with the leading European powers.

The Chinese on their own part to throw their ports open to trade as other nations, and agree to abolish most of their restrictive regulations; they also agree to open their rivers to foreign vessels to a certain extent. They will invite citizens of other countries to reside in their cities and towns; will protect them in their rights, persons and property, and will allow them to trade and engage in business. They do not propose to give foreigners a share in their government affairs, but will guarantee them all privileges of neutrals.

They are also desirous of entering into reciprocal terms for the importation of some articles of natural growth. We, on our part, are to protect the Chinese who choose to settle in this country, and after a time give them the privilege of naturalization. We also grant them some advantages for trade, especially on the Western coast. We further, with the other great powers, aid the Chinese to protect themselves against aggression. This is a provision intended to prevent any one power from exercising undue influence upon Chinese affairs without the consent of the other treaty powers.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Apprehending unfavorable hygienic results, the removal of the Confederate dead from Johnson's Island is postponed.

The Southern members have a caucus this morning to consider the Virginia, Mississippi and Texas situation, and make arrangements for the campaign.

The Senate passed a bill directing seven engineers to report next session regarding bridging the Ohio Meantime bridge builders, except at Louisville, will suspend operations.

The House passed the funding bill substantially as published on Monday.

Appropriation bills aggregating $292,000,000 have passed.

Blair's letter of acceptance is published in this morning's Intelligencer.

House.—Kellogg, of Alabama, and Fift, of South Carolina, were seated.

A bill passed removing disabilities from Simon Carley, of South Carolina, Michael Hahn, of Louisiana, and John Milledga, of Georgia.

Stevens made personal explanation denying the remarks attributed to him about paying the bonds in gold, and denouncing the papers attacking him as rebel, or half rebel, and all in bond holders interests.

The Speaker made a statement regarding the tax bill, in answer to a question, and had a message from the President read, in which the approval of the tax bill was announced. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, however, had advices that the bill was not signed. The Speaker had no other information other than that contained in the President's message that the bill had been signed.

The amendment to the Alaska appropriation was disapproved, and a committee of conference appointed.

The bill extending the time for the completion of the Southern Pacific Railroad passed.

Senate.—Robertson and Sawyer, Senators from South Carolina, were seated. Seating Sawyer excited a prolonged discussion. Affidavits of C. G. Bowen and Thomas J. Mackey were read, declaring their belief that Sawyer was ineligible—that he was a shareholder in blockade running and a member of a military organization in Charleston in 1864. Senator Conkling said he was free to say he did not believe one word of the charges against Sawyer. Robertson, who had been previously seated so that he might speak and vote in Sawyer's case, heard none of these charges in the South Carolina Legislature, and he believed them unfounded, and that they were brought up by the disappointed friends of Dr. Mackey.

The question of adjournment was resumed, when the arming of the Southern States was again discussed. The bill will undoubtedly become a law before Congress adjourns.

A concurrent resolution to take a recess from Monday to the third Monday in September passed. Adjourned.

The uncertainty about the tax bill creates much excitement, and it seems probable now that the President will veto it on the ground of innovation on the appointing power.

The Senate will disagree to the House amendments to the funding bill.

There was a meeting to day of the Southern members of Congress and Union men. Whittemore, of South Carolina, president, and H. F. Fish, of Mississippi, secretary. A committee of five was appointed to draft resolutions. John C. Fremont introduced the following resolution:

"That in view of the President's threatening attitude regarding reconstruction, Congress should remain in session until after the Presidential election. Congress should immediately give Virginia, Mississippi and Texas loyal State governments. Congress should pass a stringent law for the enforcement of the fourteenth article of the constitutional amendment."

Pending consideration of the above a resolution was offered that the President should be impeached; pledging themselves to resist adjournment or recess until removal is accomplished. The meeting adjourned to to night.

The President proclaims the adoption of the fourteenth article by the alleged Alabama Legislature.

The sub committee on reconstruction has prepared a bill for establishing a provisional government in Texas. It will be considered by full committee to-morrow, and then reported to the House. The first section provides that the constitutional convention of Texas shall be empowered to make removals and appointments of all officers of the provisional government, and authorizes the provisional governor to appoint registers, judges of elections, (judges not to be candidates,) to organize and maintain a constabulary force to maintain peace and to execute the laws. The convention is given power to provide for its own assembling from time to time, and for ascertaining the results of elections which may be held to ratify any constitution the convention may adopt.

The second section makes it the duty of the military authorities to aid the convention in executing the laws and maintaining order.

A brother of Gen. Hamilton, supported by another person, states that the convention should have power to organize the military, in view of repeated acts of violence and the murder of Union men.

The delegates to the National Democratic Convention say they are prepared to prove the falsity of these charges.

In the House to day, on motion of Gen. Sypher, the Committee on Railroads and Canals was instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the levees of the Mississippi a public highway, or otherwise improving the levees at public expense. Also extending the act of 1864 to indemnify loyal citizens for losses sustained during the war over Louisiana.

Emanuel Leutze, the well-known artist, died here, suddenly, last night, of apoplexy, superinduced by the excessive heat. He was engaged on a national painting, to be called "The Emancipation."

THE Irish language is gradually ceasing to be used. According to the census of Ireland, taken in 1851, it appeared that in a population of 6,574,278, as many as 23 3 per cent spoke Irish; but ten years subsequent a decrease of 4 2 per cent had taken place, since in March, 1861, when the last census was taken, and the total number of inhabitants was 6,798,967, the entire Irish-speaking population amounted to only 19.1 per cent. Of the 1,405,536 returned in 1861, those who could only speak Irish numbered 169,275, and the remainder professed a vernacular knowledge of both languages. But few educated persons could either read or write Irish. In 1851 more than half the inhabitants of the Province of Connaught spoke their native language; even still the counties of Galway and Mayo afford the greatest number of Irish-speaking people, and in 1861 as many as 73,780 therein were returned as unable to speak English. The spoken Gaelic is dying out, and in twenty years more the oldest language in northwestern Europe, except that of the Lapps and other extreme northern tribes, will have ceased to be used.

TO BE able to bear provocation is an argument of great reason, and to forgive it, of a great mind.

Is It Repudiation?—The Payment of the Bonds in Greenbacks.

A great public question was elucidated in a striking manner the other day during the progress of a private conversation. The details of a transaction, then alluded to, are stated below with strict accuracy, and the transaction itself illustrates the connection between the government and a large class of its creditors.

A glass manufacturer from Pittsburg was a few day since in the counting-room of a Louisville house with which he has done a large business for twenty years past. In a conversation with his old friend, the Louisville merchant, he remarked that he was not pleased with the nomination of Grant, and would not support him unless Pendleton should be the opposing candidate.

"In that case," said he, 'I shall vote for Grant, because I contributed to the support of the government in the hour of its distress,' and Mr. Pendleton would compel me to accept greenbacks for the bonds which I hold. That would be repudiation.'

'I remember that investment of yours,' said the Louisville merchant. 'You sold $10,000 in gold at 282 in 1864, and bought gold-bearing United States bonds, for which you paid 94 in greenbacks.'

'Exactly so,' said the Pittsburg gentleman.

'Then,' said his friend, 'you exchanged your $10,000 in gold for $28,200 in greenbacks, and these you exchanged for $30,000 in United States bonds. On these bonds the government has annually paid you an interest of $1,800 in gold, which is eighteen per cent. per annum on the sum you invested in government securities. Your interest in four years has returned into your pockets $7,200 of your $10,000 in gold dollars, and you claim that the government owes you $30,000 more in gold. If in four years you receive $37,200 in return for $10,000, your patriotism will be well rewarded indeed.'

'I am not responsible for the bad management of the government,' said the Pittsburg gentleman. 'I was financiering for myself and not for the government, and I only ask it to keep its engagements as I keep mine.'

'But while you were financiering for yourself,' said his friend, 'you should have observed the striking fact, that while the bonds promised gold for the interest, they did not specify the money in which the principal was to be paid. Moreover, the greenbacks with which you bought those bonds bore this legend:

'This note is legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports, and the interest of the public debt.'

'Every one of those notes which has passed through your hands before you bought the bonds, and since, has been a notice served on you by the government that the principal of your bonds is payable in greenbacks. Accordingly, you see the government is paying its other debts in greenbacks. So it paid the soldiers for enduring toils and braving dangers. Even the pitiful pension of the disabled private is paid in greenbacks, and the widow is paid for the lost labor of the husband, who lies moldering in a soldier's grave. What have you done that the government shall make an exception in your favor?'

'I hold its bonds,' replied the glass manufacturer, 'and though the bonds may fail to specify anything of the sort, yet there is an implied obligation, whenever a government issues such bonds, that the principal shall be paid in gold.'

'But,' rejoined the merchant, 'that implied obligation is directly negatived by the inscription on the greenbacks, and negatived also by the wording of the bonds, which carefully specifies gold for the interest and carefully omits any specification as to how the principal is to be paid; thus leaving that point optional with the government. Moreover, the greenbacks themselves are notes, bonds, 'promises to pay,' which the government is as much obligated to pay in coin as any other description of bonds whatever. If the government substitutes its greenback notes for its bonds in your possession, you hold against it as valid an obligation as you held before, and have no right whatever to cry 'repudiation.'

'The government will be able to redeem the greenbacks in coin as soon as it will be able to pay your bonds in coin. Its necessities compel it to give its creditors promise instead of pay. It is for you to show why it should give you interest-bearing notes and compel its other creditors to accept notes which draw no interest. It is for you to show why the people shall be taxed to pay interest on what the government owes you, while they get no interest on the notes which they hold against the government. In what respect is your claim more just or sacred than theirs?

'Now, suppose the government takes your bonds at their face and pays you $30,000 in greenbacks. You can exchange that sum for $21,400 in gold. You will then receive more than double the sum you invested four years ago, and upon which the government has paid you usury at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum! My friend, you have no good reason for calling this 'repudiation.' When so liberal a settlement is proposed, you have no right to demand that $9,000 more gold than is 'nominated in the bond,' shall be wrung from the labor of the country for your private emolument. As a just business man you would not set up such a claim against a private individual, and you could not legally collect it. The obligation of your bonds, as you construe it, against the public would convert them and the government itself into instruments of extortion and inordinate oppression.'—Louisville Courier.

DIDN'T WANT CURLEW.—The Salt Lake Vidette says: "A wayfarer dropped into the Occidental Hotel in this place on Tuesday to get a square meal. Having planted himself in a chair at one of the tables, he was confronted by the waiter with:

"'What'll you have?' The hungry one fastened his eyes on the attache le soup and said:

"'What have you that's good?'

"'Oh! we've roast beef, corned beef, roast mutton, boiled mutton, fried ham and boiled curlew!'

"'What is 'curlew?' said the stranger.

"'Curlew!—why, curlew is a bird something like a snipe.'

"'Did it fly?'

"'Yes.'

"'Did it have wings?'

"'Yes.'

"'Then I don't want any curlew; anything that had wings, and could fly, and didn't leave this country, I don't want for dinner.'"

CURIOUS BALLOON ACCIDENT.—In New Bedford, Massachusetts, on the 4th, there was a balloon ascension, and as the balloon started to go up the guy by which it was held caught and displaced the grapnel, which fell from the car. In its descent it struck upon the head of a little boy, named Wm. Mottrom, belonging in Taunton, fracturing his skull. The rope having been cut, the grapnel was dragged along and caught one little boy, named John Bono, under one arm and the chin, and another, named Charlie Jones, on the hip, and both were lifted into the air. The balloon was ascending in a direct line, when the aeronaut, hearing the cry, and seeing the boys suspended, cut the rope with a knife, thus giving the little fellows their only chance of escape. They had reached an altitude of forty feet, and fortunately fell into a tree, which greatly broke the force of their descent, and thus saved not only their lives but their limbs. Both suffered from the concussion. They remained insensible for a time, but will recover.

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.—When the eloquent Dr. P——, now of New Orleans, was pastor of a church in Columbia, S. C., a very amusing circumstance took place in the midst of one of his most eloquent discourses. A stranger, stopping over Sunday at one of the hotels, was attracted to his church by the fame of his eloquence, and was seated by the sexton in one of the middle pews, only a short distance from the pulpit. He evidently had been traveling for several nights, and was very drowsy. At last sleep overcame him, and he began to nod in his seat; and finally he fell so far forward that his face struck the top of the pew in front of him. When this happened he instantly sprang to his feet and shouted "fire!" at the top of his voice. The effect of this accident and the scene presented in the church can be better imagined than described.

AN OLD MULE.—The late Major Saml. J. Hensley came to California in 1843, riding his favorite mule, 'Old Peg.' This was just a quarter of a century ago, and 'Old Peg' was then eighteen years old. The Major, good soul, has gone the way of all flesh, but 'Old Peg' is still living at Kern river. So writes a correspondent of the Examiner.—San Francisco Spectator.

The Luther Monument at Worms.

The city in which Luther, pleading before the sovereign and the assembled estates of the Holy Roman Empire, vindicated the Gospel against sacerdotal encroachment 347 years ago, has just witnessed the inauguration of a monument to his honor. From the other statues previously erected to him the new one is distinguished in more than one respect. It is a tribute paid by all Protestant Germany, subscriptions having come in from every county in which the reformed faith has gained a footing. It is a memorial dedicated, not to a man, but to a period, perpetuating alike the effigy of Luther and his associates in the sacred exploit; and it has been unveiled at a time when there are symptoms of another religious movement, which, whatever its immediate result, will ultimately exercise considerable influence on the destinies of Luther's country and countrymen.

In size and rich variety of design the monument has no equal. In this respect it is an improvement even upon Rauch's Frederick the Great, with its host of generals ranged round the base. It is not a statue, but a combination of eleven statues grouped around and surmounted by the gigantic likeness of the Thuringian miner's son. Ascending a few steps, you tread on a granite base forty feet square, inclosed on the three other sides by a battlemented balustrade. In its centre Luther stands pre-eminent. Seated on the four pillars projecting from the corners of Luther's pedestal you see, clustering about the master mind, his four precursors, who attempted what he accomplished. To this noble array the English, French, Italian and Slave nations have each furnished a member—John Wickliffe, Petrus Waldus, Jeronimo Savonarola and Jan Huss. Then, turning to the circumference, you notice seven more statues distributed around. Occupying the four corners of the balustrade, and separated from the centre group by the inner space, are the venerable figures of two regal and two clerical allies of the reformatory hero. Frederick the Wise, Elector of Saxony, and Philip the Generous, Landgrave of Hesse, impersonating power and prudence, watch the front; Philip Melanchthon and John Reuchlin, with their solid erudition, are at their rear. To these four, or, adding those in the centre group, nine great men—images of real beings—are, with questionable taste, united the symbolical statues of three cities, celebrated in the history of the time. Augsburg, Magdeburg and Spires, three majestic women, take up the centre of each side of the balustrade. Seated, and looking up to Luther, they pleasingly relieve the four corner statues, which are standing, and have their faces turned in the same direction as the central figure. To do justice to the many places which have likewise deserved well of the cause of religious liberty, the battlements of the inclosure are on the inner side decorated with the escutcheons of 24 other German cities. These are Brunswick, Bremen, Constance, Eisenach, Eisleben, Emden, Erfurt, Frankfort, Halle, Hamburg, Heilbronn, Jena, Konigsberg, Leipsic, Lindau, Lubeck, Marburg, Memlingen, Nordlingen, Riga, Schmalkalden, Strasburg, Wittenberg and Worms. Thus stands the wonderful structure before us, a petrified piece of history, silent yet eloquent to any one who knows what has once agitated mankind, and has a presentiment of what will agitate them again.

Grand as the total effect is, the best critics agree in regretting that the artist who devised the work did not live to see it completed. Rietschel, who in 1856 was commissioned to make the model, died a few years ago, when the statues of Luther and Wickliffe alone had been carried out. The rest were modelled from his sketches by Herren Schilling, Dondorf and Kietz, his three talented assistants. Their achievements are worthy of the studio whence they proceed; but while acquitting themselves of their task in excellent style, each of the three sculptors seems to have followed the particular bent of his genius rather than co-operate with the others in the production of an artistic whole. The five statues in the centre, indeed, are generally thought to constitute a splendid ensemble; but the seven others, placed much beneath Luther, and divided from him by nearly thirty feet, are described as having the appearance of separate monuments. To connect them with the centre and each other it is necessary to bind them with the strong thread of history; architecturally they are centrifugal rather than centripetal. The circumstance also that the twelve statues are of four different sizes scarcely contributes to impart to the monument that air of composed symmetry indispensable in every composite work of art. Luther is ten and a half feet high; the figures at his feet, seven feet; the corner statues of the balustrade, eight and a half feet, and those of the towns, six feet.

The inauguration was graced by the presence of the King and the Crown Prince of Prussia, the King of Wurtemberg, the Grand Dukes of Weimar and Hesse, Prince William of Baden, and other members of the royal families of Germany. Of ladies, I see only Princess Charles of Hesse, the mother of Prince Louis, mentioned in the reports. The programme included many sermons, and the prolix verbosity of the reverend gentlemen not mending the matter, the ceremony does not in every particular seem to have produced the solemn effect expected. Times have changed since Luther's days. It is the man, not his creed, that is now worshiped by the majority.

The concourse of strangers was immense, some reports speaking of 100,000, and among them many clergymen. That her majesty Queen Victoria sent King William a telegram, expressing the sympathies of Protestant England will, no doubt, have been re telegraphed to your shores.—Correspondence of the London Times.

MISS RYE, whose success in importing female servants into Canada has been already alluded to, has written to the London papers that if she had had 300 more women she believes they could all have been equally well placed. "We had," she says, "a most hearty welcome at Montreal, where excellent arrangements had been made for my people, and where, in a few hours, I easily placed about forty women. Toronto had given us, if possible, a heartier welcome, and my only fear is that we are receiving too much attention and kindness. However, my visit has more than confirmed my belief that hundreds of situations here may be happily filled by some of our poor, under-paid, half starved women in England, and I see every prospect of the work which has just been commenced for Canada being again and again repeated with equal success."

THE Rev. W. W. Bennett, editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, is preparing a narrative of the great revival which prevailed throughout the Southern armies during the late war. Desiring to make this work a full and complete record of that extraordinary work of grace, he would be very thankful for any information in regard to the work in any portion of the late Confederate armies. He would be especially grateful to those who served as missionaries, chaplains or colporteurs, as well as to pious officers and soldiers, for any aid they may give him in the preparation of this work.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE London Times' special correspondent mentions that the Emperor Theodore's son 'had taken very kindly to the English customs, wearing a sailor's dress, of which he is evidently very proud, and handling a knife and fork at the dinner table with as much gravity and decorum as if he had been to the manner born, although Abyssinia goes upon the principle that fingers were made before forks. He seems a very intelligent, nice little follow, and was a great favorite on board.' The young prince, under the charge of Lieutenant Speedy, goes direct to Southampton, and then to Osborne.

AN American soda fountain has been established in the Boulevard Malesherbes in Paris, but the French are slow in appreciating the advantages of innovations, and hence as yet the sale has not exceeded about five hundred glasses per day. It is supposed that, so soon as the establishment becomes known, the sales will very much increase, notwithstanding that Frenchmen prefer absinthe, cognac, and similar fluids, to the less intoxicating but more refreshing beverages which gush from the silver taps of the handsome marble fountain.

THERE'S AN OCEAN ABOVE US.

There's an ocean above us, so calm in its flow
That no sound from its depths breaks the silence below;
All the objects that fill it in grandeur appear,
Ponted forth from the hand of Omnipotence there.

I gaze on its wonders with awe-stricken eyes,
In the path of its waves, where eternity lies,
And, borne from the grossness of earth, see advance
The glory and pomp of that boundless expanse.

Far away on the verge of that beautiful blue,
Where the sun, sinking low, disappears from the view,
There are clouds sailing round, dressed in purple and gold,
More splendid than courts or than monarchs of old.

And again, in the morning, what dazzling array
Heralds on in his brightness the sovereign of day,
As he duly goes forth on his mission of love,
Shedding down light and heat from that ocean above.

He is wafting his blessings to regions unknown,
And the planets are sailing with joy round his throne,
All illumined and warmed by a splendor so bright,
And filling their sails from that ocean of light.

And at midnight what star-ships encircle the sky,
Blazing out in the midst of the blue sea on high;
With their glories kept burning, as onward they bound,
O'er the deep waves that cover the trackless profound.

There the moon calmly sails in her noiseless career,
And the Pleiades seek for their lost one so dear;
And Arcturus, all bright with his canvass on fire,
Rides aloft in his splendor still higher and higher.

All sublime they recede, all majestic advance,
A legion of worlds in that boundless expanse,
Sailing backward and forward like ships, as they go
On the fathomless depths of our waters below.

There's an ocean above us; there's a Pilot that steers
His millions of orbs in their intricate spheres;
And creation is teeming with worlds that are new,
Meant to sail on that sea of immensity too.

THE ANGELS OF WEAL AND WOE.

AN ALLEGORY.

At the hour of vesper, when the sun's golden chariot had disappeared beyond the azure-cased clouds of the west, two angels—the angels of Weal and Woe—encamped among the lilies and roses on a picturesque mountain near the habitations of men.

Heavenly quiet reigned over all the landscape. The weary husbandman, having returned from his labor, had sought his couch. Prattling infants had their eyes closed in sweet repose. Yea, even those whose hearts are the habitation of sorrow had the veil of temporary forgetfulness drawn over the wounds of their aching souls, and enjoyed undisturbed rest. "Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep," a fairy queen, swayed her sceptre far and near; and the profound silence which prevailed was broken only by the solemn tolling of a bell in a distant cathedral, inviting poor nurselings of the storm to the midnight mass, in order to find shelter under the wings of the Lord.

It was now that the angel of Weal arose from his divan of moss, perfumed and bedecked with fragrant flowers, and took from a mysterious casket—the same which Providence had rescued from the heathenish Fates—the joy-bringing seeds of fortune and happiness, and deposited them as his Master had directed. "Happiness and seraphic bliss," said he aloud, "multiply among the sons of men! Peace and prosperity may ever reign in their habitation!"

Thus saying, he returned to his comrade, the angel of Woe. But lo! his comrade wept. "Ah!" said the angel of Woe, weeping, "ah! friend, dear friend, I envy you your lot. When, in the morning, the children of men awake from their sweet repose they will at once discover the many blessings which thou hast showered upon them; and then they will bless thee, singing grateful Psalms to our Master. Not so with me. The burdens which I am under necessity to impose, the pain which I am compelled to inflict, the woes which I am commanded to instill, awake sighs and moans so numerous and loud that the earth resounds with their noise. Then men will regard me with scorn and will, with Job, curse the day that gave them birth."

The angel of Weal then embraced his weeping companion, and consoled him with affectionate words. "Weep not, brother," said he, "weep not, for thy lot is not less blissful than mine. We can scarcely realize, but mortal being can never know the mystery of salvation. Dost thou not know that those whom I have blessed are not all really blessed; nor that all whom thou didst curse are really cursed? Our Master employs inexplicable means to win men for the skies. All things, both of weal and woe, work together for good to those who love the Lord. Your afflictions, not less than my sunny favors, will prove benedictions to short-sighted man.

'Afflictions
Ne'er from the ground arise,
But oft-times Heaven's celestial benedictions
Assume such dark disguise.'"

Thus consoled, the angel of Woe kissed his affectionate brother, and, arm interlinked with arm, they returned to the fair bowers in Paradise.

J. B. A. AHRENS.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 2, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: On last Sunday night the Rev. J. P. Newman preached a sermon, in the Wabash avenue Methodist Church, on the "Religious Condition of the Southern People."

Though a resident of Chicago, I am a Southerner by birth, and cannot but feel a deep interest in all that relates to the religious, social and political condition of the Southern people. I therefore gladly availed myself of the opportunity, which was afforded by the Doctor's sermon, of informing myself as to the "situation," which, to my mind, had never been clearly defined.

I had heard that you declined to "close in with the offers of mercy," and stubbornly resisted the gentle endeavors of Congress to win back the "wayward sisters" to the bosom of the political family, but I had not thought that rebellion against the best earthly government necessarily implied rebellion against the government of God; that disloyalty was atheism; that the plan of reconstruction embodied the whole "philosophy of the plan of salvation," and that an acceptance of its provisions was antecedent and essential to regeneration.

I was totally unprepared for the report which the Doctor brings of your social degradation, your atheism, your political and domestic infidelity. He hears the South no malice, and his heart is sad within him when he beholds your iniquities, for he said so.

I am an indifferent theologian—am, perhaps, not well informed as regards the "situation"—but I am an honest inquirer after truth.

"God is no respecter of persons." So saith the text. If this, as the Doctor asserts, is an argument "for social equality, without regard to race, color or previous condition," ought not this fact to be recognized and acted upon by the church?

Yet the people of the South do tell us up here that the Doctor confines the negroes to the gallery of his fine new church in New Orleans, thus virtually saying to them: "Thus far, and no farther, shalt thou come."

The Southern people, we were told, reverenced but two things—courage and power,—and that it is therefore folly for the United States to pursue a lenient course of reconstruction. If we understand him correctly, truly the Southern people need not hope to be "carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease." If they expect to be saved they may as well open their mouths, hold their noses and gulp down the Doctor's dose of salvation at once; for without the protection of that "true-hearted soldier, Sheridan," and under the administration of "Hancock and that old granny, Buchanan," (we all re-echoed this patriotic outburst, and applauded uproariously,) the "present generation" has a very slender chance of being saved.

The people of the South hate the ministers who have deceived them. These ministers deceived them by preaching secession and urging them to take up arms. Yet "the Southern people religiously believe they were and are right." "They believe themselves to be God's peculiar people."

In the face of this we were informed that "they doubted the existence of a God." If I were a profound theologian, no doubt I could easily reconcile the two statements.

In one of the most magnificent piles of church architecture on the continent the congregation gathered about the eloquent pastor, and at the foot of the altar earnestly, passionately besought him to tell them if there was a God who answered prayer. Their faith was wrecked along with the "lost cause," and afloat on the sea of infidelity; despairing, sinking, they sent up to their faithless pilot this inquiring, anguish-laden wail. The Doctor did not tell us upon what street of the Crescent City that "magnificent pile" was situated, nor did he mention the name of the "eloquent pastor."

The negroes of the South are more industrious and provident than the whites. The Doctor declares to this; and that the assertion that they are not able to take care of themselves cannot be sustained by proof—the negroes arguing that, if they were once able to take care of "old massa and all his family," they ought to be able to take care of themselves.

Notwithstanding the negro's industry and frugality, the Doctor thinks he is in danger of being run over and crushed by the juggernaut of civilization. To prevent this three things are necessary; plenty of gospel, plenty of money, and the protection of the government. Here he grew eloquent and pathetic, and the audience was greatly moved. Before us was the pioneer of undefiled Christianity, who had left the appliances and luxuries of civilized life to crusade for the gospel in the South, where he had dared to preach the true God in the very sanctuaries of the heretics; where he still held his position, and fulminated his editorial thunderbolts against treason and licentiousness, despite the Ku-Klux. But as yet the prospect was gloomy. He did not despair, however, of the three things needful. The Doctor can furnish the necessary gospel. He appealed to the generosity of the Wabash avenue Methodists for a part of the money. He had waited through the winter, and he could wait through the fall for the protection of the government—until spring gave to us a Grant and a Colfax. Up to this time the congregation had not applauded more than two or three times, but at this point their long pent-up sympathy and patriotism were no longer to be restrained, and peals of applause shook the sanctuary of the Most High. The evening breeze, that but a few minutes before trembled with the melody of hosannahs to God, was rent with the praises of Grant and Colfax.

According to the Doctor's statement, the Southern clergy are much given to the preaching of politics.

One of the greatest obstacles to reconstruction is the appearance in the South of "quasi Union men, chiefly from New England," who go there to make money, and identify themselves with the Southern Methodists, or some other branch of the evangelical church than that which Dr. Newman represents. What the Doctor means by this statement is the most difficult problem he has yet presented to me for solution. Does he mean to say that Northern Methodism is the only test of loyalty, and that as soon as a Northerner goes South he must sacrifice his religious opinions upon the altar of reconstruction; and join Dr. Newman's church?

The Doctor charges the Southern clergy with neglecting to enforce, with undervaluing, the "gospel ethics," temperance, chastity, etc., and bemoans the domestic infidelity which sets before the ignorant negro an example of licentiousness and debauch, the effects of which are fearful to contemplate. I suppose in these assertions he merely intended to reflect the morals of Chicago. But time and space forbid further discussion.

Auburn College Commencement.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., July 11, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: We have had a delightful commencement occasion at Auburn. Joining Brother Blue in a buggy, we arrived at that "loveliest village of the plain" on Monday, 6th inst.—too late to hear the sermon, to our great regret, as we heard it was very able, instructive and edifying.

We had, however, the pleasure of meeting Dr. Summers, who preached it, and who gave us the advantage of his counsels in the Board of Trustees, and closed the exercises on Monday evening with a most admirable speech.

On Monday night — Freshman declamation. The average grade of the class in this important department was high. The young men will make their mark as public speakers.

Tuesday, the 7th, was set apart for the junior exhibition. The class acquitted themselves handsomely.

The speeches were original, containing fine thoughts, expressed in language remarkable for its purity, beauty and force. We had fewer common-places than usual. We were not "swept away by the besom of destruction" a single time. We had but one reference to "Ultima Thule," which was a popular phrase in our day. The young men are evidently students of style, and showed themselves familiar with the best authors.

Tuesday night—Sophomore declamation. Here we had some fine speaking. Mr. B. W. Stone, of Montgomery, Alabama, who took the prize in the Freshman class last year, bore off the palm, but the ground was closely contested by Mr. E. L. Whipple, of Montgomery, to whom the committee awarded the second prize.

The first prize in the Freshman class was given to Mr. A. C. Baker, of Russell county, Alabama, and the second to Mr. P. H. Lightfoot, of Macon county, Alabama, both of whom are young ministers who promise usefulness to the church.

The prizes were presented by Rev. J. B. Cottrell, of the Montgomery Conference, in just such a speech as he alone can make. It was full of sallies of wit, and sparkles of humor, and strokes of satire, but contained much that was instructive on the art of oratory. The advantage of retirement, to the public speaker, was a strong point, and forcibly presented.

Wednesday was commencement day. Two young men were graduated—Mr. W. W. Moore, of Loachapoka, Alabama, and Wm. T. Patillo, of Auburn, Alabama. Mr. P. is a young minister, a fine teacher and principal of the preparatory school. We regretted our absence in the Board of Trustees while Mr. M. was making his speech, as we listened to him with great pleasure last year. Mr. P.'s speech was elegantly written, and delivered with great distinctness. About the speeches of all the young gentlemen, we may say there was a fine moral and religious tone running through all of them; and their general department was above all praise. Bishop McTyeire delivered the address to the Wirt and Websterian societies. The students paid him the tribute of an undivided and absorbed attention. Theme—"A Plea for Liberal Education." The treatment was able, exhaustive and thorough; the style, of course, had his usual characteristics of conciseness, terseness and strength.

The young men cannot easily find a better model. The argument in favor of the "dead languages" was conclusive, and kept attention rapt and wide awake. President Dowdell conferred the degrees, and delivered his Baccalaureate address in Latin, which was pronounced with so much deliberation and distinctness that a good Latin scholar could easily catch the meaning. The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on Rev. D. M. Hudson, Montgomery Conference, and on Robert E. Park, principal of the Henry Lucas Institute, Mt. Meigs, Alabama. Also the honorary degree of D. D. on Rev. Albert H. Redford, our publishing agent.

The occasion closed with very earnest addresses on the part of the president and Bishop McTyeire, in behalf of the college.

The institution will again be opened on the first Wednesday in September. This has been its best post-bellum commencement. It begins its next year under higher auspices. The Board of Trustees were in session three days devising plans for the extinguishment of the debt, and to fill its halls with students.

Your plan of cheap board and soldier's fare meets with very general favor. We learn that the Mississippi University has eighty students who board themselves. The board at Auburn instructed the Executive Committee to find rooms for any number of young men, and ascertain the price at which students can subsist themselves, and publish such facts through our church papers. They offer tuition to indigent and worthy students at thirty dollars cash per annum—taking their note for thirty dollars more, to be paid when they are able. It is supposed economical young men can live at six or seven dollars per month. This is so at Emory and Henry College, and the Mississippi University. Board can be had in very good private families at from fifteen to eighteen dollars per month, and many would prefer this.

The temper and bearing of the matriculants of this school give us the happiest augury of its future and the future of the country.

As Bishop McTyeire said in the meeting of the trustees, the subjects chosen by the young men show the general tenor of their thoughts: "Uses of Adversity," "True Greatness," "Self-Help," "Conquest of Difficulties," "Labor the Price of Success."

Centenary Institute, Mobile Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed one of the most interesting commencements, at the Centenary Institute, that it has ever been my pleasure to attend. In accordance with a long-established custom, the church at Summerfield, and many of the visitors met at the church, on the Sabbath previous, to hold a commencement class meeting; and every one went away with a solemn pledge to renew his covenant with God. At eleven o'clock a large and intelligent audience had collected at the college, to hear an appropriate sermon by Bishop Wightman. In the afternoon Dr. Hamilton preached a most instructive and searching discourse on the subject of serving one's generation, founded on Acts xiii, 36. Monday and Monday night were occupied by the young gentlemen in delivering their speeches, and in dialogues, all of which did them great credit. Tuesday was appropriated to the young ladies of the junior class, and to an address to the young gentlemen of the male school, by Mr. George Craig, of Selma. Wednesday was commencement day, when eight young ladies received the first degree of the Liberal Arts, corresponding to the degree of A. B. in our male colleges. I do not deem it advisable to go into detail, but I wish to call attention to two noteworthy characteristics of these performances. First, there was remarkable purity, both of style and of sentiment, marking all the exercises; and secondly, a most clear and distinct enunciation by the whole school, but especially by the young ladies of the graduating class, in reading their compositions. We were struck with the great success in every department of elocution.

The Board of Trustees was fortunate enough to secure the services of the same gentlemen who were in charge of the schools last year, and they have accommodated the charges of the institution to the times. Tuition was fixed at sixty dollars per year in the academic course for both schools; music, sixty dollars, with five dollars for the use of the instrument; board, exclusive of lights and washing, sixteen dollars per month, which rates will compare favorably with those of any other school of similar grade in the South. The Centenary Institute ought to be sustained by the Methodists of Alabama. Instead of sending children to North Carolina or Virginia, why not send them here, where they will enjoy just as good facilities for learning, and at the same time our own institutions will be sustained. Summerfield offers superior advantages, both by reason of its teachers and of its surroundings. Professor Vaughn, at the head of the female college, is justly regarded as one of the most accurate scholars in Alabama. He excels in his capacity to teach, and he has the happy art of exciting his pupils to vigorous exertion by the affection which they have for him. Of Capt. Massey, principal of the male school, it may be said that he is a finished scholar, a perfect gentleman and a successful teacher. The thought uppermost in his mind, and I know what I say, is how he shall give to each young gentleman committed to his charge a Christian education. When his name was proposed for re-election, one of his patrons said he had rather pay Capt. Massey two hundred dollars for teaching his son than fifty to any other teacher he ever knew. Another, who had four sons under his tuition last year, said: "I had rather pay Capt. Massey two hundred dollars than to send to any other man I ever patronized, for nothing. He begins with the heart, and aims to educate it as a necessary condition for the proper training of the intellect." I deem it but justice to the church, whose schools these are, and to these gentlemen, as well as to those who are looking out for a place for their children, to make these statements; and any one will have but to come here and make inquiries among the patrons of the school to find these statements corroborated. One word more for the Centenary Institute. To say nothing of the expenses, which I believe are less than those of any other high school in the country, this community seems to be the very place for schools. The high Christian influence brought to bear upon the young; the deep interest manifested by the church for their conversion and proper training, as many pious mothers and fathers in the land, who have been converted here, will testify; the healthfulness of the place, and the good society, all combine to make the claims of the Summerfield schools high in the estimation of the public. I therefore earnestly bespeak a careful examination of the claims of Centenary Institute from all who are contemplating a liberal education for their sons and daughters.

ONE WHO KNOWS.

JAPAN.—By the arrival of the Pacific mail steamer China at San Francisco, on June 26th, we have news from Japan to June 5th, or more than one month later than the last dispatches received in London via Shanghai. The news is of great importance. The Tycoon had formally accepted the conditions of the Mikado, who for some time has been with his army before Yeddo. These conditions demand from the Tycoon the cession of nearly half of his private territory, the disbandment of his army, the surrender of his navy, and his retirement to Mito. He accordingly left Yeddo for Mito on May 12th, on foot, in token of humility. Thus Yeddo passed into the hands of the Mikado, who appointed a new governor for Yokohama. The British minister had already presented his credentials to the new governor. But after the withdrawal of the Tycoon from Yeddo a singular change seems to have taken place in the situation. A coalition of Daimios in his interest was organized, which was joined by all the powerful Daimios of the North. The admiral of the fleet refused to surrender, and had sailed northward. One of the adherents of the Tycoon had gained several important victories over the forces of the Mikado, and it was even reported that the retreat of the Mikado from Yeddo was cut off. Affairs have become still more complicated by a proclamation of the High Priest of Kioto, which warns the Mikado that he has of late interfered too much in secular affairs, and that if he continued in his novel policy he would be called upon by the priesthood to abdicate. Of this proclamation 170,000 copies have been circulated. Thus, in addition to the war between the Mikado and Tycoon, which is to reconstruct, on an entirely new basis, the form of civil government, we have the beginning of a war between Church and State.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Died, in Franklin parish, Louisiana, on the 18th of December, 1867, of typhoid pneumonia, Mrs. Sophia M. Cox, wife of Charles P. Cox, Esq., in the sixtieth year of her age.

Sister Cox was born near the town of New Haven, New York, on the 17th of April, 1808, and was married to Mr. C. P. Cox in 1829. But few of her sex, who have lived as quiet and retired a life as she, could have had the satisfaction of seeing the result of her efforts in the distribution of so much well-timed charity, both as it relates to the soul and body, time and eternity. Hers was the home of the friendless and the orphan, and no object of want ever passed her with only the cold comfort of sympathizing words; but the more substantial relief contemplated in the apostle's admonition: "To do good, and to communicate, forget not."

Peculiarly adapted by nature for making friends, and most generous at heart, she moved in a large circle of friends, who now mourn their loss. The church has lost one of its most useful members; her husband a devoted wife, the orphan a mother, and society an ornament. For thirty-five years she was a member of the M. E. Church South, and that period is made glorious by many acts of kindness and faithful efforts to promote the cause of God. All who knew her knew her to be one of the most efficient aids to the ministry that the church afforded. The penitent was sought for, and the mourner directed to the Saviour. She administered a gentle reproof to the wicked which made them fear to sin; she gave to the young and thoughtless a word of kind advice that caused them to respect and love her; and gave to the minister a word of encouragement that inspired him with new zeal. Her house was ever the home of the minister, and all those sons of Levi who have had the good fortune to fall in there remember pleasantly her many acts of kindness. Her patience was never exhausted in doing good to them "that are of the household of faith."

The calm and glorious character of her death is a convincing proof of the entire satisfaction afforded by Christianity to the dying sufferer. Her system prostrated by protracted fever, and her body racked by torturing pains, she preserved entire consciousness until death. Though speaking but little, when asked if she had messages for her absent friends, she replied: "I have much to say, but am too weak. Tell them to seek God now, and not to wait until death approaches. I feel that Jesus is very precious to my soul." Her last words were a prayer for her husband, who had never made a profession of religion, and was now much distressed: "I pray that God may enable you to forsake your sins."—May this prayer be answered. To describe the scenes of such an hour surpasses the power of my pen. To see a large circle of relatives and friends standing around the patient sufferer, watching the last sands of life as they drop from the glass of time; to see the aged and care-worn companion of forty years, himself tottering on the very brink of the grave; to see the grandchildren, objects of her special care and Christian patience; to see attendant friends and old family servants, all plunged by one fell swoop of the destroying angel into the very depth of profound grief, is enough to make stern men, who have seen death in every form, and witnessed it unmoved, to shrink back from the scene, being convinced that it required no small amount of grace for one to meet death so calmly and to die so triumphantly.

Every heart beat in sympathy with the distressed friends, and every eye proved that such sympathy was real and heartfelt.

A FRIEND.

TOO CERTAIN.

"Father, I am tired of reading the Bible. I have read it so often that I know everything in it."

"Everything, my son? Do you think you could not find one chapter that would contain something you have never yet noticed?"

"Yes, father, I think so. I am sure I know all that is in the historical parts of the Bible."

"Well, let me try you. When were a large number of men fed with a few loaves of bread, and a supply left when they had done eating?"

"Why, father, surely I remember Christ's feeding several thousand persons, at two different times, with a few loaves and fishes."

"Very well; those are two instances. Now tell me a third."

"There is no other in the Bible."

"You are perfectly sure of that, are you? Suppose you reflect a little before you answer again."

"Yes, father. I have thought, and I am certain there is no other miracle of the kind mentioned in the Bible."

"Well, my son, open your Bible at the fourth chapter of the Fourth Book of Kings."

"The Fourth Book of Kings! Father, there is no such book."

"Hand me the Bible. What does this title say?"

"It is the Second Book of the Kings, commonly called the Fourth Book of the Kings."

"Well, there is one thing learned by the boy that knew the Bible so well. Now turn to the fourth chapter, and read from the forty-second verse."

"Here it is, sir: And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God—"

"Who was that man of God?"

"I must look.—It was the prophet Elisha."

"Now proceed."

"And brought the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat. And his servitor said, What, should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat; for thus saith the Lord, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof. So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord."

"That will do for this time, my son. I have never wished to make the reading of the Scriptures tedious by requiring you to read them continually without giving you other books to read. But I wanted to convince you how mistaken young people are apt to be in their ideas of their own knowledge. There are thousands of children—yes, and of men and women too—who would read with great interest many passages of the Bible if they found them in a fresh and beautiful volume, which they believed to contain nothing but what is published for the first time. Remember this, and let me advise you to read the four books of Kings, and to make a list of all the passages you will find there, which, like the one you have just read, are as new to you as if you had never heard nor read them."

GOLD IN ALASKA.—The following is an extract from a letter dated San Francisco, June 7, 1868:

The news from Sitka is astounding, if true. The reports from the recent gold discoveries of Alaska have produced great excitement here, as also as reported in Oregon, Washington Territory, and British Columbia. The reports, it is true, are brought to Sitka by Indians, but they came from the whites, who are collecting the gold, with commissions to bring up pans, etc., for placer mining. As a consequence, their reports are accepted as true at Sitka, and many are starting for the diggings. Here there is some incredulity as to the immense richness of these mines, but the reports are accepted with some deductions for possible exaggeration. It is well known that small parties of Russians have long worked gold mines in Alaska, notwithstanding the discouragement and opposition of the great Russian American Fur Company. At all events, numbers of our people will go.

These Indians report recent discoveries of vast mines of the best anthracite coal, specimens of which they are said to have brought to Sitka. So soon as Congress establishes a Territorial government in Alaska, and extends there the homestead and pre-emption system, there will be a great immigration there. It is not only the gold mines, but the coal, iron, lead, copper, grazing and agricultural lands, fisheries, fur trade, splendid timber, ice trade, magnificent harbors, rivers, etc.

THE population of Paris is stated to amount to 1,780,000 persons.

DEATH OF NEANDER.

No more striking illustration was ever given of the ruling passion, strong in death, than in the last hours of the beloved Neander. His thoughts, even when reason wandered, were on his work. Mrs. Conant gives the following sketch:

A wine bath had been prepared for him as a last resort. Refreshed and strengthened by it, he was borne from the darkened room where he had lain hitherto into his study, that cheerful little apartment opening to the sun, which had been so long the workshop and the paradise of the man of thought. Here for nearly twenty years he had studied and written. From this spot had gone forth those great works which have delighted and instructed Christendom. Ere long he murmured, dreamily, as if at the close of a long, fatiguing walk with his sister, "I am weary; let us now make ready to go home."

Just then the rich sunset glow, pouring through the window, lighted up the shelves from which looked down upon him the masters of thought with whom for so many years he had held silent but high and enduring communion. Raising himself by a sudden effort from his pillow, he commenced a regular lecture upon New Testament exegesis. Soon a new image passed before his restless fancy. Imagining himself at the weekly meeting of his beloved Seminarium, surrounded by his fondly-attached theological pupils, he called for the reading of a dissertation, shortly before assigned, on the material and formal principle of the reformation. He then dictated the titles of the different courses of lectures to be delivered by him during the next session; among them, "The gospel of John, from its true historical point of view."

His last thoughts amid the struggles of death were devoted to the great labor of his life. Beginning at the very passage of his church history where sickness had arrested his progress, he resumed the thread of thought, and in spite of interruptions, continued to dictate in regular periods for some time. At the close of each sentence he paused, as if his amanuensis were taking down his words, and asked, "Are you ready?" Having closed a division of his subject, he inquired the time. Being told that it was half-past nine, the patient sufferer repeated once more, "I am weary; I will now go to sleep!" Having by the aid of friendly hands stretched himself in bed for his last slumber, he whispered, in a tone of inexpressible tenderness, which sent a strange thrill through every heart, "Good-night!" It was his last word. He immediately fell into a sleep, which continued four hours, when his great spirit, in the quiet of a Sabbath morning, passed gently into the land of peace.

MUFFLING THE THROAT.—What is the best mode of protecting the throat from colds where a person is very susceptible to them?

The common way of protecting the throat is to bundle and wrap it up closely, thus overheating and rendering it tender and sensitive, and more liable to colds and inflammations than before. This practice is all wrong, and results in much evil. Especially is this the case with children, and when, in addition to the muffling of the throat, the extremities are insufficiently clad, as is often the case, the best possible conditions are presented for the production of sore throats, coughs, croups, and all kinds of throat and lung affections. It is utterly impossible to entirely exclude cold air from the neck, and if it is kept overheated a portion of the time, when it is exposed some form of derangement of the throat will be very apt to occur. The rule in regard to clothing the neck should be to keep it cool as comfort will allow. By doing so you will suffer much less from throat ailments than if you are always fearful of having a little cold air come in contact with your neck. Any one who has been accustomed to have his throat muffled should be careful to leave it off gradually, and not all at once.—Herald of Health.

ENGLAND'S DEFENDERS.—It appears from the army estimates laid before Parliament that the strength of the British army—exclusive of the forces in India—is 135,660; of the militia, 134,037; of the volunteers, 154,680; of the yeomanry cavalry, 16,185—total, 441,561. To support this force Parliament was asked to vote about £15,000,000. The Pall Mall Gazette supposes that in any sudden emergency not more than fifty per cent. of these troops, in round numbers a quarter of a million, could be brought into the field.

THOREAU says: "When you knock at the Celestial City, ask for God—none of the servants!"

HE shall be immortal who liveth till he be stoned by one without fault.

SECTARIANISM.—There are as many church registers as there are church houses. But there is only one Lamb's Book of Life for all the ransomed sinners of the world. That is the place for your name. It is not Methodism nor Presbyterianism nor Lutheranism, nor any other ism of men; but it is the life and power of the Son of God we preach. The different denominations are but symmetrical and convenient apartments in the one great sanctuary of the Lord. These distinct organizations are harmonious counterparts. Yet men separate themselves into sects, and magnify their consistent differences into conflicting doctrines. They build theological walls around themselves—the closer, the safer, as they vainly imagine; and they begin, in their stifled atmosphere and necessary shade, to doubt the orthodoxy of their neighbors. They put colored glass in intervening windows, draw down the blinds, bolt the doors, and nestle together, as though all outside Christendom were turning infidel, and as if they, secluded company alone of all the earth, held fast the faith once delivered to the saints. Such a faith, so moakishly bound, needs a new deliverance!

Now, when you find yourself up in arms in defence of your creed, pause a moment, and consider whether, in all your life, you have ever been so brave in defending the Bible. You become excited when you hear your Luther, or your Calvin, or your Wesley, or your Campbell criticised; but you will stand silent and unmoved when the name of your Jesus is blasphemed! Unless you can recognize prosperity in other churches as heartily as in your own, and rejoice at the conversion of sinners under anybody's preaching and under any church's roof, you may write "sectarian" as a fit suffix to your name. You have been tempted through self and sect to enter a refuge of lies. 'Ist and 'ism are warp and woof of the enemy's tent covers, and you have been deceived. You are attracted by the sound of your church name more than by all the cries of Calvary! Verily you have your warning, and must bear the awful consequences of trimming your Christianity to a discipline, or catechism, and of wounding your Lord in the house of his friends.—The Gospel in the Trees, by A. Clark.

SINGING WITH THE SPIRIT.—Mr. Spurgeon, in a recent sermon upon praising God, delivered himself of these sentences: 'I have noticed one thing—I have jotted this down in the diary of my recollections—that you always sing best when you are most spiritual. Last Monday night the singing was better than it was on Sabbath evening. You kept better time and better tune; not because the tune was any easier, but because you had come up to worship God with more solemnity than usual, and therefore there was no slovenly singing, such as pains my heart and ear sometimes. Why, some of you care so little to give the Lord your best music, that you fall half a note behind the rest; others of you are singing quite a false note, and a few make no sound of any kind. I hate to enter a place of worship where half a dozen sing to the praise and glory of themselves, and the rest stand and listen. I like that good old plan of everybody singing, singing his best, singing carefully and heartily. If you cannot sing artistically, never mind, you will be right enough if you sing from the heart, and pay attention to it, and do not drawl out like a musical machine that has been set agoing, and therefore runs on mechanically. With a little care the heart brings the art, and the heart, desiring to praise, will by-and-by train the voice to time and tune.'

WALKING AS EXERCISE.—There is nothing like it for physical development. It is the most natural sort of 'calisthenics,' and the systematic pedestrian has but little use for Ling or the gymnasts. Mr. C. F. Shey remarks on the subject: 'Such exercise should be active, neither strolling nor sauntering out of doors, 'to take the air,' as ladies term it, nor gardening, nor lounging about; but adopting a good brisk walk, at a pace of at least three miles an hour, ever stopping short of fatigue. People will often tell you they take plenty of exercise about the house, and they are on their feet during many hours of the day. This is fatigue without exercise. What we want for health is exercise without fatigue, for fatigue is exhaustion, and it is to be obtained only on the terms which I have mentioned. I do believe there are many maladies, or at least many forms of indisposition, which, with a strong will, may be walked away, provided the exercise be taken systematically, and rendered a prominent feature in the daily treatment. The distance walked should be increased daily, and a claim made on increasing exertion. I doubt whether horse exercise, however agreeable, is equal in sanitary value to exercise on foot.'

HOW TO MAKE A CONGREGATION DECLINE.—Absent yourselves from the public ordinances whenever you take a notion. Others will learn from your example that they need not be very conscientious about attending on public worship.

Talk in discouraging terms about the prospects of the congregation. This will make people keep a good distance, for no person wishes to connect himself with a sinking cause.

That you may be able to talk thus, take little or no interest in the welfare of the congregation yourself, excepting as you can find fault with something.

Take care that your church (or lecture room) be moderately cold and uncomfortable. This will keep you from being crowded out of your seats by strangers, for none will attend but those who have the spirit of martyrdom.

Place your church at the outskirts of the town or village, and let it be accessible only through much mud. Why, if people love the ordinances, this will not keep them away.

When you are asked for a small contribution to put your church in as decent repair as you keep your own private dwelling, be sure to complain that you have always to be giving money. If you are a poor man, with nothing but a farm and a few thousand at interest, it would be unreasonable to expect you to do much. Let others see to it.

Take care to raise an opposition in the church to something, and spend your zeal and labors upon that, and be sure to side with members of other churches against your own. They will take you by the hand, and praise you for your zeal and piety, and the members of your own communion will become dejected and discouraged.

Hand this to your co-laborer to read. It may stimulate him in your joint operations to diminish your church.—Reformed Messenger.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES.—A pleasant little picture of the Princess of Wales, drawn by a young American lady in London, and sent for publication to the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post: 'Here comes the Princess of Wales!' We all sat up very straight, trying not to look curious and pleased, and conscious, and feeling that we failed miserably in the attempt. One young person donned her eye-glasses, and wished that circumstance and high breeding would have allowed the use of opera-glasses instead. Meanwhile a stylish landau rolled toward us, drawn by two handsome prancing bays. The coachman and footmen were dressed in plain dark livery—the whole equipage and its appointments being as simple, unpretending and perfect as one could well imagine. Two ladies were seated in the carriage, one of whom turned her calm, quiet gaze full upon us—it was the princess. She had an oval face, pale and pathetic, with a quantity of hair, of that neutral tint called light brown, drawn away from the smooth, frank brow. Her blue eyes are large, sad and questioning; her nose slightly aquiline, and her mouth is very sweet and sensitive. Not beautiful, and hardly to be called even pretty, except, perhaps, under a flattering gas light, with the brilliant adjuncts of a splendid toilet, she yet has a tender, womanly, flower-like face that would, in any rank of life, cause a good man involuntarily to accord her his protection, and a good woman to give her her love. She was dressed quite simply, wearing a blue velvet paletot, with a bit of swan's down at her throat, a black lace hat, with blue velvet flowers and strings, and dark gloves.

PULPIT INGENUITY.—A preacher in the neighborhood of Hartford, Conn., not undeservedly popular, had just finished an exhortation strongly recommending the support of a certain very meritorious institution. The congregation was numerous and the chapel was crowded to excess. The discourse being finished, the plate was about being handed round to the respective pews, when the preacher made this short address to the congregation: 'From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is one thing that I am afraid of, that some of you may be inclined to give too much. Now, it is my duty to inform you that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be immediately waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it thoroughly understood that no person shall think of putting anything into the plate who cannot pay his debts.' We need not add that this produced a most overflowing collection.

THE TRUE NOBLEMAN.—Goodness sanctifies his greatness, and greatness supports his goodness. He improves the higher ground on which he stands, thereby to do God the more glory.

THE FAMILY OF THE LATE JOHN C. CALHOUN.—Edward A. Pollard, in a recent article upon the distinguished South Carolinian, states the following facts regarding the family of the deceased:

At his death he left five sons and two daughters, all grown up, and of these only the eldest daughter is now living. Four sons died of consumption within a short period of each other, one daughter of fever, and the eldest son, who had attained middle age, died of apoplexy during the recent war. Only the widow and daughter are now left in occupation of Fort Hill, the homestead embowered in trees near the banks of the Seneca, and formerly looking over many hundred acres of river land in the highest state of cultivation. This residence, once the seat of the most elegant hospitality, and thronged with noble company, has of late been sadly invaded by the sheriff's officers and the auctioneer; and many persons have learned with painful surprise that, to satisfy a paltry debt of a few hundred dollars, the library of the dead statesman was lately sold under the hammer, being the only property that could be offered by his poverty-stricken family without depriving themselves of the necessaries of life. The house and land were not sold, as, happily, by a military order of Gen. Canby, there is reserved from execution, to every family in South Carolina, a house and twenty acres of land attached to it. The proceeds of the sale of the library—one of the choicest private collections of books in the South—were pitiful indeed. Whole shelves of books were knocked down for from $4 to $6 a shelf; and then other personal property had to be sold to eke out the claims of the creditors.

HE THOUGHT HE NEVER PRAYED.—The Rev. Mr. Kilpin passed a very profane man, and having omitted to rebuke him, he awaited him in the morning at the same place. When he approached, Mr. Kilpin said:

'Good morning, my friend; you are the person I have been waiting for.'

'Oh! sir,' said the man, 'you are mistaken, I think.'

'I do not know you, but I saw you last night when you were going home from work, and I have been waiting some time to see you.'

'Sir, you are mistaken—it could not have been me. I never saw you in my life before, that I knew of.'

'Well, my friend,' said Mr. Kilpin, 'I heard you pray last night.'

'Now, I assure you that you are mistaken; I never prayed in all my life.'

'Oh!' said Mr. Kilpin, 'if God had answered your prayer last night you had not been here this morning. I heard you pray that God would destroy your eyes and ruin your soul.'

The man turned pale, and, trembling, said:

'Do you call that prayer? I did, I did.'

'Well, then, my errand this morning is to request you from this day to pray as fervently for your salvation as you have done for damnation; and may God in his mercy hear your prayer.'

The man from that time became an attendant on Mr. Kilpin's ministry, and it ended in his conversion to God.—The Christian.

THE REASON.—A bishop who heard that the sun always shone on the cottage of a poor man in a certain valley in his diocese, determined to find out the cause of this wonder.

"Is it true," he asked of the poor man to whom the cottage belonged, "that the sun always shines on your roof?"

"It is true," replied the peasant.

"But what is the reason?" inquired the bishop. And none could answer.

"Do you pray more than others?"

"I live by the labor of my hands, and have but little time for prayer."

The bishop thought again. "Do you fast more than others?"

"My work is hard, and I can fast but little."

"Well," he replied, "but perhaps you give more alms than others?"

"I have but enough for my family, and can scarcely find any poorer than myself to whom I may give."

So the bishop turned and went away, sorely grieved that he could not explain the wonder. But before he had gone far a thought came into his mind and he returned. "One question more: Do you love our Lord Jesus Christ at all times?"

The poor man cast his eyes to the ground, and answered: "I trust I do."

"Ah!" replied the bishop, "now I know why the sun shines always on this house."

How admirable is that religion which, while it seems to have only the felicity of another world, is at the same time the highest happiness of this.

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1868.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by EXPRESS. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

For marriage and obituary notices see eighth page.

Tennessee Female College.

It will be enough for our Alabama friends to know of this institution that its president is the Rev. R. K. Hargrove. Mr. H. was for some time stationed at Mobile, but recently at Lexington, and we regret that his great usefulness as a preacher should be lost to the pulpit. But he is eminently fitted for presiding over a college, and has spent several years in teaching, first at the University of Alabama, then as president of the Conference Institute at Summerfield. We can recommend any college over which he presides to the most favorable notice of our Methodist and other friends. For terms see advertisement.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from Mr. Geo. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite the post office, Nos. 29, 30 and 32 of Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion—a highly illustrated folio, full of overwhelming feats and pictures of battles, made memorable by Northern heroes only!—whole campaigns, continuing through four years, against emending masses of mere desperadoes! It occurs to us that after awhile an explanatory supplement will be necessary to the perfection of this costly publication.

Also Nos. 316 and 317 of Harper's Library of Select Novels.

LOVE OF MARRIAGE, by William Black, and DEAD SEA FRUIT, by M. E. Braddon.

THE SERVANTS OF THE STOMACH, by Jean Mace.

THE HISTORY OF A MOUTHFUL OF BREAD, and its effect upon the organization of men and animals—each 12mo., from the publishing house of MESSRS. Harper & Bro., New York. These last we will notice more particularly next week.

THE San Francisco Spectator says of Judge Shattuck: 'The many inquiries we receive concerning Judge Shattuck evince the lasting hold he has upon the esteem and affection of the people he served so long and so nobly. His health is feeble, but somewhat improved. He is residing near Sonoma, and devotes himself mainly to farm matters. A communication from his able and once active pen would be very welcome to the readers of the Spectator.'

CENTENARY.

Once every year we go up to Jackson, as a plough to the share. How so many preachers and good people manage to keep an edge without going there we cannot imagine. With the Commencement begins upon the steamboat, so soon as we find that her prow is fairly up stream. There is always a slight parenthesis ephered at Bayou Sara the place of transition from watercraft to land-carriage. The distress of hiring a buggy threatened to be greater than usual, when relief suddenly came: the Rev. J. A. Godfrey, sitting upon high springs and driving two famous ponies, appeared. The whole itinerant system came into view in a single moment and, for the hundredth time, we thought, there is nothing like it. It is a grand sight: a presiding elder in good health and good spirits, and well fixed for traveling! His sweep of one-seventh of the territory of a State approaches the original grandeur of an Asbury circuit: 'In charge of all the preachers and exhorters, and leaders and people, unites in it the venerableness of a patriarchate with the dignity of a judgeship. We delight to see a man magnify this office, its fatigues, its cares, its poverty and its privations. These reflections did not all quite conclude before we found ourself seated beside the elder himself.

The first action of the first Methodist Conference in America, 1765, or thereabouts, was in reference to horses. The only resolution in the general minutes of that year is that "every preacher shall own his horse." Very proper and significant was that early recognition of an itinerant's right to property in a horse; and ever since that time our preachers have been famous for knowing a horse when they see him. Well, we only wish that every presiding elder had a couple of just such andalusian ponies as we saw before us. They were of light build, without a particle of surplus fat or bone, capable of seven miles an hour in a hot day, without flagging or the least distress; day in and day out, able to perform more than the best blooded horses of Kentucky or Virginia. We had a couple such during the war, looking to be worth fifty dollars apiece, but able to go from Opelousas to Arkansas, and with more life from grass than other horses get from corn.

A Methodist preacher is fine company on the road. He knows the history of everybody; and every house passed and field are suggestive. Then, likely as not, he has seen a few things on some other circuit, and, better than all, he can tell what he knows. Generally he is the best natured man in the world, and has a good stock of pleasing incidents with which to beguile the way. We learned a great many things in that twelve miles ride from Bayou Sara to Jackson and back again. We find ourself often fearing lest the stock of regular old-style itinerants should run out; it is merely an over-anxiety, we suppose, like Paul's fear of being "a cast-away;" but sooner than that should come to pass, we had rather see every theological school in the country disbanded.

At Jackson we found a delightful home in the family of Professor Wiley—an open home always, but very wide open on our commencement. Jackson is noted for the heartiness of its welcome and the elegant abundance of its tables. The past year has borne severely upon its inhabitants, as upon every other parish town in the State.

People have not been able to send their sons or daughters to school—a patronage upon which the town largely depends. But the crops look promising and relief is at hand. By meeting the present condition of affairs promptly, we think that the citizens of Jackson can look for a full attendance upon the college and the schools which support it. The price of board has been reduced in Greensboro to sixteen dollars a month. It is less than that at Emory and Henry College. If board can be so reduced that board and tuition would not exceed two hundred dollars, we believe that Jackson would be full of students the next year. This is the price elsewhere, and with such a food crop as we now have secured, this part of the State can afford to board at as low rates as any part of the South. Our people are everywhere slow, exceedingly slow, to take in or to accept the situation. They stand greatly in their own light. The college tuition is reduced to seventy-five dollars per year for a full course; English and modern languages, sixty dollars; English only fifty dollars. A father of ordinary means could send his son to college at an expense of two hundred dollars without doing injustice to the other children of the family: but hardly if the expense be five hundred dollars. He might send two or three boys at the rate of two hundred dollars, when he would not send one at the higher figure.

The college buildings are in much better repair and condition than we expected to find them; but it is necessary that several thousand dollars should be put upon them promptly, to prevent more serious damage. We do not despair of finding some noble-hearted Christian who, with his substance, will be willing to aid us in fully restoring the beauty and efficiency of this institution.

The services of the Sabbath and those of commencement day were held in the large college chapel. The occasion was graced with a fine audience of young people and citizens from the immediate neighborhood: but we were disappointed in not seeing gentlemen from a distance who should have been there, and whom we reckon to be among the strong friends of the college. The harder the times, the more certainly did we expect them. The programme of the principal hour was: Hope, Lighthouse of the Soul, S. S. Norwood; Improve the Moments as they Vanish, T. N. L. Anderson; The Chivalry of the Age, J. L. Perkins; Scientia Pabulum Animi, T. S. Miller; From the Sea of Damp Emerges the Star of Grandeur, W. Y. Dixon; Our Relation to Republicanism, C. B. Lallins; Soda Mens Eterna, a poem, C. Parlange. These interesting speeches were relieved by vocal and instrumental music, most delightfully rendered by some four or five young ladies and young gentlemen under the leadership of Professor Wiley. The president of the board and the president of the college were then pressed into service, and at the close of their remarks the audience retired, quite fresh, at eleven o'clock at night.

The faculty continues the same as last year, excepting the principal of the preparatory department—Mr. Miller having resigned in consequence of continued feeble health.

Among other excellent things done by the board, not the least was conferring the degrees of Bachelor of Arts upon the Rev. Winans Drake, of the Mississippi Conference, and the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. Linus Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, and upon the Rev. Thomas E. Bond, Jr., of the city of Baltimore. "Honor to whom honor," etc.

We left Jackson in its holiday company, and its pleasant hours, wishing that all the world was not in quite so much of a hurry, or life quite so much of a treadmill.

The Stiletto Wasp of Jackson.

While at Jackson we had the opportunity of examining this most remarkable insect, in the presence of Professor W. H. Magruder, Rev. Dr. Watkins, Rev. J. A. Godfrey, Professor Wiley, Col. D. C. Hardee and other gentlemen. It very much resembles a large yellow wasp in size and color. Attached to its abdomen is a sting, which is by measurement three and a half inches long. This is a flexible, smooth, black, gutta percha looking shaft, as large as a fine needle. It projects behind the insect nearly its whole length, is perfectly straight, and without any sheath. Under the microscope it is flat, like a dirk blade, and in one of the edges has a groove running its whole length, probably for the purpose of lubrication. Springing from a distinct point of the body are two other long, flexible, feathery shafts of a reddish color, looking much like the sting, probably for the purpose of enabling the insect to withdraw its sting after striking. We saw two of these insects, one perfect, the other imperfect minus its sting. This sting we saw sticking in a piece of sweet gum wood, into which it had been driven a full inch. The sting protruded on one side of the wood two inches, and was visible coming through on the other. It had been out a quarter of an inch, but had been broken off by accident. No needle could be driven by a hammer where this sting had been driven by this terrible insect. It was in an attempt to strike a boy that it struck the tree, and remained fastened by its own sting. A few weeks ago Mr. George Brannon was out in the woods near Jackson, cutting wood. His little son was near him, and was presently attacked by this insect; defending himself from one or two of its passes, he then saw it coming with great speed at him, and jumped directly behind the tree, against which the insect drove itself. The little fellow exclaimed: "Ah, I have you now, old fellow." Mr. Brannon coming up and seeing the insect fastened by so long a sting, had the good sense to cut out the chip and bring it to Jackson.

As the sting is in a right line, projecting nearly its whole length behind the insect, it has to throw its tail over when about to strike. This accounts for its striking the tree instead of the boy. It was probably just turning as its object moved to one side, and its instinctive calculation struck where it expected to meet the boy.

EXIT ZION.

We suppose that since the history of the world began hypocrisy was never detected and made patent upon so stupendous a scale as when the African Zion Church presented itself, before the General Conference of the M. E. Church North, as ready to come over with one hundred thousand church members, and unite its whole fortunes with Northern Methodism upon the one simple condition of equality. There was nothing in the way to an immediate consummation of such a union: the supreme legislative bodies of both churches were then in session, and there was a distinct, positive proposal from the colored church to the white; the doctrines of the two churches were identical; their discipline only differed in the term of the episcopacy, which the colored brethren were willing to waive, so that absolutely there was nothing in the way but the color of the skin. The same offer from any body of white men would have been accepted in half an hour.

Some of the most prominent men of the Chicago Conference had announced that "color blindness" was of the very essence of Christianity, and others had denounced the "demon of caste" as the presiding genius of the South, that should be exorcised wherever found. The doctrine of equality before the law, before the throne and before the altar, the perfect equality of all who have been "made of one blood," has found a place in every sermon of the Northern Methodist pulpit during the past ten years, as nearly as any other doctrine, not excepting that of justification by faith only. Men have been lifted from the dunghill and placed among the princes of Israel, merely by the force and advocacy of this one idea. The more completely it took possession of the man, other things being equal, the more speedy his promotion to honor. The great consideration gained, merely by working a single thought, had simplified success until the entire mass of common-place mind, by action and reaction upon itself, became consciously heroic. Fully one-half of the men who were in that General Conference were indebted for their seats to some new variation of this, the ebon dogma, and to that alone.

The secret history of the committee appointed upon the great proposal will, of course, never transpire, and imagination, we suppose, will never do justice to the sense of over-fullness which must have oppressed the very bowels of the brethren—like a boy we have seen disgusted, the rest of his life, by a single overbait of persimmons. We suppose that every natural instinct revolted, that the ideas of color and odor and form revolved through the perplexed brain of each committee-man, as in connection with the idea of "a universal brotherhood," until he felt that though the idea might be true, doubtless was, yet that in himself there was a constitutional inability, possibly the remains of the old Adam, that prevented him from rising to the height of this great argument, that [illegible]. Then, too, when he thought of those at home, his wife and daughters, and many of the saints, and all the sinners, white people, why no matter what he could stand himself—and with more religion there was no telling what a man might stand—they were not prepared for it; and it is poor legislation that attempts to move fifty years in advance of public opinion. The committee was much in the predicament of the preacher, at Chicago, that relieved the perplexity of the General Conference by proffering to entertain at his own house those colored delegates that everybody else refused. On the next day he called the notice of the conference to the fact that he had taken the brethren to his house, and that he was delighted with them, and so was his wife, but that the Irish cook refused to cook for the "naygurs," and he was obliged to return them again to the conference. Ahem! So the committee reported that the time was far spent, and the General Conference should appoint another committee, who should report upon the proposal four years hence, at the next General Conference. Exit Zion.

The rejection of this great offer was so complete, unexpected and adroit that the plenipotentiary of Zion could not realize what had been done. He was satisfied, he said, in taking his farewell, with the action of the brethren if he "could only understand what it was they had done." He and all the thousands of colored Israel had believed that inasmuch as the "mouth" of Northern Methodism had been "open unto them" for twenty years, that her "heart" was also "enlarged." Alas! poor man, he had yet to learn that the mouth and the heart are two very distinct organs. The colored men of Zion are now slowly taking it in—a true conception of the stupendous lies which the action of the General Conference gave to all the professions of the M. E. Church North in regard to the black man.

It is curious now to see the Northern Advocates, one by one, cautiously coming to the surface with some slight attempt at vindication against Zion. The Methodist seizes upon an item in an organ of the Zion Church after the following style:

"Our brethren of the African M. E. Zion Church are not all, by any means, convinced of the blessedness of union with us. The Missionary Record, of Charleston, one of their Southern organs, has some pungent paragraphs on the subject. We take one as a specimen: 'It will be a long time before the sentiment of the M. E. Church will be so changed as to fully recognize the black man as an equal; it will not be until the faculty of Baker Institute, in the city of Charleston, are so purified that the black students and teachers can eat their meals at the same table—not one in the kitchen and the other in the dining room. If the great patrons of equality in South Carolina cannot take their ministerial pupils on an equality with themselves, when will they of the Northern States accept such a dogma as negro equality in their churches?—black bishops presiding over white preachers, and rich, aristocratic members of the great M. E. Church. Never, never, never! Our Zion brethren may wait another four years, and then hear the report of that committee. The terms will be: You will join our great Methodist Church, throw away your whole system of government and creed, and be governed. The curtain will fall. Exit Zion.'

"There is no mistaking the meaning of that passage."

The editor of the Western Christian Advocate is much more honest in meeting the difficulty. He recommends all the colored people to get together in a church by themselves:

"It is useless to talk about ignoring all distinctions of color in the church. This is simply an impossibility. Practical men, white or black, do not look for such a thing. A plain recognition of the fact that black men are black, is a necessity, and it violates no law of humanity or Christianity. There is in it nothing of the spirit of caste, nothing that savors of prejudice, or that is offensive to the truest sense of justice and equality. We are aware that impracticable theorists declaim against this, but we are just matter-of-fact enough to believe that it is best in this particular to obey the laws of affinity; and, therefore, we believe in keeping up churches, circuits, stations, districts and conferences for our colored brethren. We care not so much whether they are under our control or not, so they are Methodists, and united among themselves."

"This is sensible, and gives up the whole ado and humbug about the colored man at once. He is not a white man. The two races cannot be made one by any effort of charity, for charity carries a mantle, not a blanket.

GRAND RATIFICATION.

To give some slight notion of this wonderful gathering, we may say that about fifty thousand men, women and children were on the streets, and scarcely one single black person could be seen. The square was a mass of human beings, bearing torches and banners, and listening as best they could to distinguished speakers. The platform was full of the political leaders of the people, appropriate symbols and ensigns of the Democratic party. The Crescent says of the illumination:

All the public buildings were illuminated, and a great proportion of the private houses were lit up. A more minute detail of the various decorations will be found elsewhere; suffice it to be said here that, in every instance, they were as handsome as the sorely-depleted pockets of our people will now permit of, and that their worth must not be estimated from their pecuniary value, but rather from the indications that they gave that the white people of our State, impoverished, down-trodden as they are, have yet left the spirit to conceive and the money to pay for a demonstration wherein they may, in some degree, display that hatred of tyranny and thirst for freedom which, in the last few years, have been so little gratified, but which now, as ever, form the animating principles of our lives.

Everything passed off quietly and successfully. The procession was immense. Resolutions were passed, of which we give the most important:

Resolved, That we cordially indorse the nominations of Horatio Seymour for President, and Frank P. Blair for Vice President, and pledge ourselves to give to them the vote of Louisiana. In Horatio Seymour we recognize a man who has illustrated a life of unspotted personal honor, by the support of sound principles, with unwavering constancy, great abilities and persuasive eloquence. The great office sought out the most fitting man, and found him in its worthiest and most unambitious citizen. In Gen. Frank Blair we know a gallant soldier for the Union in war, who honored his flag by never permitting it to be strained by any act of injustice, cruelty or outrage; and a magnanimous citizen in peace, who hastened to bury the memories of strife and bloodshed—generously stretched forth his arm to shield the fallen brave from insult and wrong.

Resolved, That the Constitution under which the State of Louisiana is now received as a member of the Union, and the authorities which exercise its powers, have been imposed upon the people of the State, in violation of their rights under the Federal Constitution, by the exercise of absolute authority from without; subverting the old and lawful government, and creating a new one, without our consent, by proscriptions and disfranchisements of the population, by the creation of a multitude of ignorant voters, and the manipulation of adventurers from abroad, sent in to speculate for power on the dishonor and degradation of the State.

Resolved, That the distrust and alarm with which the advent of this fraudulent government was anticipated have been more than justified by its lawless course since the assembling, at the Mechanics' Institute, of the so-called General Assembly, composed, in part, of newly enfranchised blacks, incapable to comprehend the duties of legislation, and of stragglers from other States—men totally without property or permanent interest in the State are masters of all the property; and their every act, thus far, shows the disposition to make all considerations bend to the maintenance of their ascendency, and the seizure to themselves of all the employments and offices of the State as the spoil of victory. They have excluded members from both houses, lawfully elected, without the show of cause; imposed unlawfully disqualifying oaths, and manifested the fixed purpose to treat elections as void which result against their partisans.

Already they have seized on the police force of this city, and are packing it with partisans; they are bringing forward huge monopolies with which to gorge favorites at the public cost; and they have legislation in progress to force upon the citizens of the State an amalgamation of races, not by consent, but by constraint of law, from which the habits fixed for generations revolt as unnatural; and they threaten, in the same temper of insult and intolerance, to remodel our school system and make it a source of perpetual discord, and in all probability destroy its efficiency for the education of our children.

Resolved, That in the name of the Democratic party of this State, we earnestly appeal to all white men, who have an interest in its welfare, to unite with us in averting these dangers by rescuing the country from the dominion of that party which, for its own selfish purposes, has caused and is seeking to perpetuate them; and to all who, in this hour of danger, shall unite with us in preserving the State from the calamities with which it is threatened, and which it is easier to prevent than to arrest, we, forgetting all past dissensions, cordially extend the hand of friendship and fraternity. We also address ourselves to the more intelligent of the colored people of the State, toward whom we have no feelings but those of kindness, and we earnestly entreat them not to permit a few obscure, needy and unprincipled adventurers to produce feelings of hostility toward the white people of the State, among whom they were born, and whose real interests are inseparable from their own.

WHO DID IT?

The prostration of the marine, mercantile and manufacturing interests of the country is so thorough that the whole North is asking: Who are the authors of this present state of things—who did it? The prompt answer heretofore has been, "the South." So long as men refused to reason, this answer was satisfactory; but now they go a step further and ask: had the South any good ground for taking up arms? And it is admitted that if she could have had any adequate notion beforehand of what the Black Republicans were after, she had—that is, the destruction by force of all her property in slaves. It is evident that the war is becoming exceedingly unpopular throughout the North, and that the present amount of outrage which the Southern States are suffering at the hands of the war party has produced a great reaction in the minds of Northern people. This is visible in the tremendous enthusiasm expressed in the great cities of the North for the nominees of the Democratic party. The foundations of the whole country seem to be moving toward the overthrow of the military despotism which weighs so heavily upon the liberties of the people. The demonstration in this city on Saturday night was something tremendous. Every white person that could walk must have been abroad. It was as emphatic a statement as could be given by speeches, rockets, banners, music and illuminations. This campaign will determine forever the question: who did it? It will hold to a just responsibility those fanatics of Church and State who are ready to imbrue their hands in a brother's blood to maintain an obstruction at the South which they refuse to recognize at the North.

CHILDREN.—All parents should understand that children's shoes, with metal tips, will wear at least three times as long as those without. The new Silver Tip is decidedly ornamental, and is being extensively used on children's first-class shoes. Sold everywhere. july25 1tr

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than if any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health. A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENT—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability. july25 W. H. N. MAGRUDER.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLlege, Mansfield, De Soto parish, La.

The following are the terms for a session of four and a half months, payable one half at entrance and the remainder on the 1st day of December:

Board, including washing, fuel and room-rent, in gold	$67 50
Tuition in English and Latin, in currency	25 00
French, in currency	15 00
Music, in currency	30 00
Use of instrument, in currency	7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency	2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Traveling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a coverlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

A VALUABLE GIFT.—80 pages.—Dr. S. S. Fitch's Domestic Family Physician describes all diseases and their remedies. Sent by mail free. Address DR. S. S. FITCH, may2 7mr 714 Broadway, New York.

This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $250 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.:—I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely.—The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Yours, very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', Mass., June 9, '64.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than formerly. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair. With respect,

WM. S. EDDY.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

OF THE

Central Pacific Railroad Comp.,

BEARING SIX PER CENT. PER annum. Principal and interest expressly payable in

GOLD COIN

OF THE UNITED STATES.

Great National Pacific Railroad Line,

representing the first claim thereon, and which rest upon a valuable and productive property furnished by an equal amount of the Government Bonds, and a similar amount of private capital, net earnings, donations, etc. They have thirty years to run, are already taken in large amounts for steady investments both in this country and in Europe, and are favorably regarded as being among the very offered on this continent, and are believed to be secure against all ordinary contingencies.

The Bonds are $1,000 each, with semi-annual coupons attached, payable in New York city in January and July, and are offered for sale at

103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,

in currency, from the date of the payment of the last coupon. At the present rates of gold they yield with the prospect of a steady appreciation of the premium upon the Bonds.

More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment,

The Company have now built and in successful operation 150 miles of road, on both slopes of the Sierra Nevada mountains, including by far the most difficult and expensive portion of the whole. They have also an unprecedented force, extending the track into the Salt Lake basin, the middle of which will be reached in autumn, making more than 330 miles in operation. Several important tributary branch and connecting roads are projected and now being built, and the prospect is fair that the continuous will be completed early in 1870, or about two years from this time.

The net earnings from local business merely, for the past year, upon less than 100 miles, operating under temporary disadvantages, amounted to $1,087,901, in gold, over the operating expenses; and the gross earnings for the first quarter of the current year were 50 per cent. greater than for the same period in 1867. It is estimated that the net earnings for 1868 will reach $2,500,000, which, after deducting interests payments (estimated at less than $1,000,000,) are applied to construction purposes. Besides further subscription to the capital stock and other resources, the Company will be receiving from the United States Government its 30-year six per cent. Bonds, at the rate of $32,000 per mile, and are therefore enabled to carry forward the enterprise with the utmost confidence and vigor.

☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price.

We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.

Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic. Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. HELMBOLD.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

H. T. HELMBOLD, druggist, of eighteen years' experience, and manufacturer of Helmbold's Genuine Preparations.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

GOING TO SLEEP.

BY EMILY HUNTINGTON MILLER.

Come hither, my baby, my darling,
My lily, my wonderful rose!
The white-bosomed flowers in the garden
Begin their soft petals to close;
The bees have gone home from the clover,
The swallows are under the eaves,
And down in the orchard the robin
Broods over her nest in the leaves.

Come, baby—my beauty, my darling!
Your eyes they are heavy with sleep;
Your little red mouth has grown silent,
And scarcely its laughter can keep;
Lay off the white robe from your shoulders,
Unclasp the small shoes from your feet—
O, daintiest blossom of Eden,
I kiss you, my lily, my sweet!

Do you feel the cool wind coming softly,
And see the young moon in the sky?
The clouds sailing over the sunset,
The bats flitting silently by?
Do you hear how the cattle are lowing
Along the green lane by the hill?
And the brook running over the pebbles
With music that never is still?

Now hush! while I sing to you, baby,
A song of the angels above,
That come on invisible pinions
To watch o'er the children they love.
So all through your beautiful dreaming
The voice of your mother shall creep,
Lest, hearing the harpings celestial,
Your soul should fly homeward in sleep!

Little Corporal.

WORK FOR LITTLE ONES.

There is no little child too small
To work for God;
There is a mission for us all
From Christ the Lord.

'Tis not enough for us to give
Our wealth alone;
We must entirely for him live,
And be his own.

Though poverty our portion be,
Christ will not slight
The lowliest little one, so he
With God be right.

The poor, the sorrowful, the old,
Are round us still;
God does not always ask our gold,
But heart and will.

Father, O give us grace to see
A place for us,
Where, in thy vineyard, we for thee
May labor thus.

THE BIRD CHARMER.

One day when crossing the gardens of the Tuileries, in Paris, I saw in the distance a group of people.

Being desirous to know what it was that they were regarding with so much interest, I hastened on, and found that the object of their attention was "the bird charmer," of whom all the world has heard, and who was now about to give their daily repast to his feathered friends.

With his hat on his head, and his cane under his arm, he stood by himself in the grand walk, near the railings of the private gardens; and taking some small pieces of bread from his pocket, threw them one by one in the air.

The sparrows soon came, and as each piece was thrown, one or the other caught it before it fell, and went off with it.

Sometimes several of them flew at one piece, and disputed for the possession. At others, in their impatience, they flew close to the face of their benefactor, as if to demand their share.

Shortly several pigeons, who, no doubt, had seen their friend from a long distance, arrived, and alighting on the ground, the bird charmer put a morsel of bread between his lips, and held out his hand; one of the pigeons came and settled on it, and took the bread from his mouth; then, gently thrown off by a slight movement of the hand, perched on the pedestal of a statue close by, while another pigeon took its place.

Several birds came thus in succession; and some, while waiting their turn, perched familiarly upon the other arm of the charmer.

The people who were gathered round, and the children who left their play to look at this amusing spectacle, did not in the least frighten the birds; indeed, they took no notice of them, and seemed to see only this man in whom they had placed their confidence, and who appeared to have absolute power over them.

What is the secret of the bird charmer, which makes him thus the master of these timid birds?

Nothing, certainly, but patience, gentleness, and the food which he offers them; he employs no other witchcraft.

No doubt he is very careful not to frighten them in any way, not to speak loudly, or to make any rough, hasty gesture. Thus reassured and enticed, the birds have become bolder by degrees, till now they regard their protector with the same freedom and familiarity that they do the trees upon which they feed, and where they build their nests.

In India, where the love of birds is carried so far as to take care of them in hospitals when sick or infirm, we find results yet more surprising. There the jays are so tame they fly freely in at the open doors and windows of the houses, and a species of sparrow will go and fetch any small article which may be named by their master.

A French traveler of the last century relates that one of the kings of Lahore had large hands of tame pigeons in his palace, which he had trained to take part in a mock battle.

He had taught them to range themselves in phalanx—to attack, pursue, rush into the thick of the fight, then to return to their ranks, all of which they did with marvelous precision.

The vast expanse of the heavens served as the battle-field for the evolutions of these beautiful aerial troops.

Their master gave the word of command in the Persian language, or sometimes by signals with a flag, which he waved in various directions, according to which they ordered the attack or the retreat.—Kind Words.

How Children Live in the South.

I want to tell the little boys and girls, who read the pieces in the children's column of this paper, about some of the children in the ruined South. Just where I live the boys do not go to school, but all day are cutting wood, hauling it in home-made wheelbarrows; grinding corn on heavy hand mills, drawing water, sometimes sweeping the floors, which have no carpets like your comfortable ones, digging in the garden, often plowing and hoeing the field, if their parents own land; sometimes walking a great distance to get some very common coarse food. Then, on rainy days, making rough benches to sit on; or, perhaps, they may find an old rickety chair to repair, put in a new bottom, or tie up the back. But they are always at hard work. And the girls help indoors, mind the baby, help wash and cook, wash the dishes—often they are only tin, as they are cheapest and not easily broken by little folks. They make the bread, and spread the bed, sweep the floor and kindle fires—while you, who are so much better off, may be, are grumbling at being called up "so soon," and think it right hard if you haven't what you like for breakfast, and wish it was Saturday, that you may stay from that tiresome school! They eat thankfully their plain corn bread, and if they only have enough of it, and anything to 'make it go down,' as they say, they are so glad, and ready again for any work. Not long ago a little boy came to my door and asked me to come and 'sit up all night with his mother.' I went walking through the 'cut off path,' through the dark forest, through the open fields, and wet roads, and many miles did we go; at last we came to the house. Once the family were rich—every comfort was piled around them. I knew, however, they had lost everything by the cruel war, but was not prepared to see destitution. On a bed on the bare floor lay the poor sick lady, and one single chair and trunks were all the sick room held? The sitting room, where the crowd of distressed children were huddled around their eldest sister, had an old carpet as their bed and only furniture. A dim firelight threw its fitful gleam on the sad group gathered to go supperless to bed, and their mother so ill! All night we watched to see that poor woman close her eyes upon this sad world of suffering, but morning found her still alive. And now I had to leave them, for my own little ones were waiting my return. With the last food in the house boiling in a pot, which did not hold half enough for that hungry crowd, I had to leave them. I never got back. The poor mother died, and there was not even a minister to bury her; a Christian gentleman read a burial service over her. I trust she is where there is no want. This is only one picture of our ruined South. And I tell this to you, that you might contrast your lot with ours, and be so grateful that our Heavenly Father has given you so many comforts. And again, if you wish to enjoy all you have, remember what the Bible says: 'If thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger.'—Lev. xxv, 35-6. All who read this can find some way of doing good if they try!—A Southern Mother.

FARM AND GARDEN.

LIQUID MANURE IN GARDENS.

But little attention has been given in this country to the use of liquid fertilizers, while in Europe they are classed among the gardener's important aids. In the market gardens around Paris the liquid manure tank is regarded as an essential part of the establishment. Brick tanks thoroughly cemented are sunk in a convenient part of the grounds, and considerable expense is incurred in arranging a system of underground pipes to convey into it the urine and other liquids from the stables, and the slops from the house. The manure from the hen-houses and dove cots finds its way to the tank, and privies are arranged for the laborers with movable boxes, the contents of which from time to time are emptied into the tank. There is hardly a farm or small place in the country on which there is not a great waste of fertilizing material, and the example of the French gardeners may be imitated with profit. A sunken cask may be made to serve as a receptacle for these usually wasted fertilizers, and the wash from the house be led into it by means of drain tile, or even a conductor made of boards. That attention is being turned to the subject of liquid manures is shown by several letters asking about the best means of distributing it. In Europe a wheeled apparatus made of boiler iron is used, but a barrel or cask mounted on wheels would answer every purpose, and this may be moved by hand or horse power, according to its size. The discharge pipe should be arranged after the plan of the street sprinklers used in cities. What is wanted is something to divide the liquid and distribute it along the row, much after the manner of a watering pot. The shape of this sprinkler will depend upon the surface to be watered. It may be a tin cylinder, with holes near the ends, and a proper length to water two rows at once. The sprinkler should be connected to the barrel by a short piece of hose, which will allow its height to be altered as needed. The discharge may be regulated by a valve placed over the orifice, upon the inside of the cask. A block of wood with a piece of leather on one side will answer for the valve; this is to be held in place by a leather hinge, in a manner that will allow it to be lifted by means of a string attached to it, and which passes out at the hole through which the cask is filled. The valve should we weighted with a piece of iron or lead, to insure its closing tightly. The discharge is regulated by pulling the string.

In July, 1865, we illustrated a pump which would serve for raising it, from the tank or reservoir, to the distributing apparatus. If the liquid is to be distributed by a sprinkler, care must be taken to use only the clear portions, as sediment of any kind would soon close the holes. The contents of a manure receptacle, like the one we have referred to, will vary in character, and no rule can be given as to the amount to be used. Excessive strength must be avoided, and if that in the reservoir is highly concentrated, it should be diluted. Manure wateringa should not be given in very dry weather.—American Agriculturist.

A WORD ABOUT BUDDING.

We have probably a dozen or twenty letters asking us how to bud. Some might consider it an annoyance to be asked to repeat, year after year, the elementary things of horticulture. We do not. The Agriculturist is for the general public, and what its readers ask for they shall have—so far as we are able to supply it. Now about budding. If our correspondents could go and see a nurseryman put in one bud, they would learn more about the operation than from all the descriptions that were ever written. If they cannot see the thing done, we will do the best we can to help them. The bud used in this kind of propagation is formed at the base of a leaf—in its axil, as the botanists say. It has within it all the possibilities of a branch. If left where it is, it might become a branch. Just as the seed is planted in the soil we take this bud—which is for our purposes a seed—and plant it, not in the soil, but in another tree. The mechanical operation is so simple that a boy or girl of twelve years can do it. Stocks fit to bud are the first requirement: i. e., those in full growth, and of which the bark will "run," or easily part from the wood. Buds well developed are the next. Cut the twig for the "stick of buds" from the variety desired to propagate; cut off the leaves, leaving the leaf stalks, and do not let it dry. Make a T incision in the bark of the stock, on the north side, and as close to the ground as a smooth piece of bark can be found; cut out a bud from the "stick of buds" with an inch or inch and a half of bark, lift the flaps at the angles of the T incision of the stock, and push this bud down under the bark; cut the bark of the bud off with the horizontal part of the T incision, and then bind it tightly with bass bark, corn husks, old rags, or whatever is at hand, of course leaving the bud exposed. In the majority of cases the bud will next spring be found alive and ready to grow, when all of the stock above it must be cut away. Now, we have briefly described what we have several times given before with figures. However much we may wish to do so, we cannot give the same illustrations over and over again, and those friends who do not find here sufficient directions to enable them to bud had better send for the American Agriculturist for July, 1866.—American Agriculturist.

Preserving Green Corn for Winter.

The canning of corn in families so generally fails that we cannot recommend the trial. The next best thing to canned corn is that which is properly dried. The first essential is good corn, and the next is to dry it carefully before it gets too old. Mrs. M. L. Gage, of Ross county, Ohio, communicates the following sensible ideas about preparing it: "It is a wonder that so few should have anything but field corn for table use; and for drying there is a still greater contrast between the common field and the garden varieties. I have been used for years to drying corn. Boil the green ears a minute or two, just to harden the milk, then cut from the cob and spread on a cloth in the sun for two days, taking it in at night; it will then keep anywhere. When cooked, it is better to soak it a few hours, and boil in the same water. In cold weather all that is wanted for a week or two may be wet. It cooks quicker and tastes better. A little milk and flour boiled in is almost as good as cream. I have not given up drying corn, but for two years past I have put some down in salt, which gives another variety, and is more quickly prepared. At first I had difficulty in freshening it, and then it was comparatively tasteless, but now I boil the corn in one water a minute or two, turn the water off, add a few sliced potatoes, boil until they are done, drain off the water, and add cream or butter. We think this preparation tastes more like summer corn than the dried corn does. In salting, I cut the green corn without boiling, and pack it, alternating one pint of corn and a small handful of salt. When the vessel is about full put on a cover that will fit down to the corn, and place a small weight on it, as it must be kept under the brine which it makes from its own juice. I have for the last two years been canning green corn with tomatoes. I use about one-fourth part corn, cooking the two together. I have never heard of but one case where green corn canned by itself did not spoil, but corn and tomatoes canned together is a perfect success."—American Agriculturist.

Preserving Fruit in Bottles.

An esteemed correspondent, who has tried various plans, sends us the following as the one found to be attended with the best success. This, of course, is intended for ordinary bottles with corks. Where some of the many patent jars are used, the sealing process is unnecessary: "Put the fruit in bottles, and add one eighth of its weight of sugar. Place the bottles, completely filled, in a boiler with a board or other material in the bottom, to prevent the heat breaking them. Fill the boiler with cold water nearly to the top of the bottles, and heat it to boiling. Dip the corks in melted sealing wax and drive them into the bottles. Tie the corks down with wire or twine, and then seal the corked bottles by turning the necks down twice into the melted sealing wax. When sealed, place them again in the boiler, and boil a short time. Put them in a cool place until wanted for use. The necks of the bottles must be heated in water before the corks can be drawn. The first boiling expands and expels most of the air from the bottle, coagulates the albuminous part of the fruit, and retards its fermenting tendencies. The second boiling, after the bottles have been corked and sealed, renders the free oxygen contained in the small quantity of incloaed air inert; the oxygen unites under the influence of heat with the organic matter, it is wholly converted into carbonic acid, and cannot act further in causing decomposition. To make the wax to seal the bottles melt together one pound of rosin, four ounces of beeswax, and three ounces of tallow."—American Agriculturist.

Since 1029, that is to say a period of 839 years, 130 famines have occurred in Russia, ten arising from climatic causes, being general and extending over the whole country. Partial scarcities, it has been remarked, are becoming more and more frequent. In the 13th century there were only three, while in the 16th there were eleven, and in the 18th thirty-four. The existing famine is the fortieth since the commencement of the 19th century.

SCIENTIFIC.

A New Electro-Motive Machine.

In response to an invitation extended by Prof. R. Ogden Doremus, a considerable gathering of scientific men took place at the lecture-room of the College of the City of New York, on the afternoon of the 10th inst., to witness the operation of a new electro-magnetic motor, devised by Mr. Laban Clarke Stuart.

Prof. Doremus opened the exhibition by a general explanation of the principles of electro-magnetism and their application to the production of power for industrial purposes, which he illustrated by several interesting experiments, and by small models of electro-motive devices hitherto invented. Mr. Stuart then showed the machine in motion, the apparatus being worked at a speed of five hundred revolutions per minute, by means of forty cells of the battery. When set to operate a pump it raised water to a height of about ten feet, at the rate of 15 3-10 gallons per minute, the speed being reduced to two hundred and fifty revolutions. This would indicate the apparatus to possess about one-twentieth of a horse-power, which is simply one-half of what is claimed for it by the inventor. "The motor consists of a central axle or shaft about three feet in length, and surrounded by a series of electro magnets so placed that the current of electricity is kept up in a continuous stream. The magnets are only magnetized twice in one revolution of the axle, instead of many times, as in most other motors that have been constructed. These features, the position of the electro-magnets with reference to each other, the continuous stream of electricity, and the infrequency of the magnetizing at each revolution, constitute the chief peculiarities of the motor as distinguished from others."

The apparatus operated in a very smooth and satisfactory manner, and as an illustration of one of the experimental applications of electro-magnetism was certainly of considerable interest, but its practical value in an industrial or business point of view may be readily deduced from the data given by the exhibitors relative to the cost of running, which was said to be at the rate of about thirty cents per forty-eight hours for each cell of the battery employed.—American Artisan.

Microscopy and Cholera.—At the last meeting of the Royal Microscopical Society in London, a paper of great interest was read by Dr. Thudichum "on the relation of microscopical fungi to pathological processes, especially to the process of cholera," in which, after explaining the hypothesis advanced by those who maintain the parasitic origin of cholera, he severely criticised the methods by which their conclusions had been arrived at, and showed the unsatisfactory nature of the conditions under which their experiments had been made. He showed further that the so-called fungoid bodies found in the "rice water" evacuations of a cholera patient were not of vegetable origin, neither were they specific forms, but were identical with those which were equally found in all other decomposing animal tissues and secretions. The results of a large number of personal experiments and observations, extending through various epidemics since 1850, were adduced to show that the choleratic process was the result of chemical, and not of vegetable, parasitic action. In concluding his remarks, which were listened to with great attention for nearly an hour and a half, Dr. Thudichum strongly urged that it was the duty of the State, in a matter so important to the welfare of this country and of its colonists, to establish an institute for the purpose of carrying out a series of pathological observations with a view to discover the true nature of this terrible disease.

Bronzing.—Several methods are practiced of bronzing small articles made of iron, zinc and other metals. One of the simplest is to mix bronze powder, which can be purchased of various tints, with copal varnish, and apply the varnish with a brush to the articles to be bronzed. Another way is first to varnish the articles with copal varnish, and while the varnish is wet to dust it over with bronze powder, and then bake the articles in an oven. The bronze powder sinks into the varnish in the baking process, and the surface is left very smooth. Another plan is to varnish the articles with what is known as French copal lacquer, which is sold, of various colors, in the stores, and let them dry either in the atmosphere or in an oven. What is called spirit lacquer is also sometimes used by dipping the articles into it, and after removing them setting the adhering lacquer on fire, and letting it burn till the spirit is all burnt out.—American Artisan.

We spend half of our lives in making mistakes, and waste the poor remainder in reflecting how easily we might have avoided them.

THE DEPTH OF THE OCEAN.

Until within a comparatively recent period, nothing was positively known concerning the depth or bottom of the ocean. Sailors had dropped the sounding-line, and had seen it carried out thousands of feet without touching bottom. So they believed the sea to be fathomless. There was a popular theory that the ocean's greatest depth corresponded to the highest elevation on land. Dr. Whewell inferred that the Atlantic contained valleys to be fathomed only by a nine-mile line; and less than a dozen years ago Mr. Darling maintained, before the British Association, that as the ocean covered three times as much area as the land, its greatest depressions must be three times as great as the elevation of the highest mountains. It would seem that these theories might be easily tested. Sounding was apparently a simple process: only toss over the plummit, and it would carry its line directly to the bottom. But it was found to be by no means so simple a process. Lieutenant Parker, of the United States navy, let go his line in the South Atlantic, and found no bottom, though ten miles of twine were run out. Subsequent investigation showed that the true depth was but three miles; and the discrepancy was accounted for by supposing the existence of under currents, which gathered the line into loops and carried it away.

Various contrivances for ringing bells, exploding shells, or indicating the pressure on a column of mercury, were proposed for ascertaining when bottom was reached; but all proved ineffectual. The plan which first gave satisfactory results was that employed in the United States navy. Vessels were furnished with sounding twine carefully marked at every hundred fathoms, and wound on reels of ten thousand fathoms each. It was made the duty of the commanders to avail themselves of every favorable opportunity to try the depth of the ocean, whenever they found themselves out upon "blue water." A cannon ball of thirty-two or sixty-eight pounds was used as a plummit. From the weight of the ball and the fineness of the twine employed, it was supposed that as soon as bottom was reached the strain would cease. Then, by breaking off the line and seeing how much remained on the reel, the depth could be ascertained immediately, at the expense of only one cannon ball and a few pounds of common twine.

The experiments first made with this "twine" were as unsatisfactory as those made according to other methods. Lieutenant Berryman reported an unsuccessful attempt to reach bottom with 30,000 feet; and Captain Denham reached bottom in the South Atlantic with 46,000 feet. The existence of under currents rendered all the results unreliable. But the law of descent was soon discovered; the average time of descending 400 to 500 fathoms being two minutes, twenty-one seconds; for 1,000 to 1,100 fathoms, three minutes, twenty-six seconds; for 1,800 to 1,900 fathoms, four minutes, twenty-nine seconds. It was evident, therefore, that while the sinker drew out the line at a decreasing rate, the currents would draw it out at a uniform rate; consequently, as soon as the rate became uniform, bottom had been reached, and the line should be cut. This law, however, enables the experimenter to guard against the grosser errors only, and very high authorities have denied that exact results can be obtained by it in deep water. The regular movement of a spiral-shaped wheel, when drawn through water, had attracted attention in England, and it was found that the motion could be precisely registered by a simple combination of cog-wheels. Such an apparatus, known as Massey's Indicator, was tested by the Royal navy, and gave such satisfactory results that it at once superseded the oldest method not only for scientific purposes, but also for ordinary use.

What, then, is the depth of the ocean? Modern investigations have greatly curtailed the ancient estimates. The average depth of the ocean is only about three miles, and the greatest positive cast in the Atlantic does not exceed twenty-five thousand feet. The deepest portion of this ocean lies between the Grand Banks and the Bermudas, where bottom has not been found.

Money.—There are 1,000,919,000 francs in gold in the vaults of the Bank of France. Such an enormous accumulation of specie has never before been known in that country. It is universally believed that Napoleon has collected it for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a conflict with the "military giant" of Northern Germany. Hence all France is in a fever.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
BROOKHAVEN, MISS

128 miles from New Orleans, on N. O. J & G. N. Rail Road.

The next session will open on Wednesday, the 11th of September, 1867.

There is a full corps of teachers: the instruction will be thorough; the discipline firm and strict.

The building is large and well arranged; the play ground ample; the location healthy.

The Institution is under control of the M. E Church, South.

The entire expenses in the Collegiate Department for board, tuition, books and incidentals (not including music and the ornamental branches) need not exceed $125 00 for term of twenty weeks.

Each boarder must furnish her towels, one pair of blankets and sheets.

For further information, address
REV. H. F. JOHNSON,

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
Washington county, Virginia.

The FALL SESSION of this institution begins on the 20th of August next

Our terms, for a session of five months, are as follows:

Tuition in Collegiate course, payable in advance.....$30 00
Fuel, room rent and contingent fee, payable in advance.....10 00
Board, at $13 per month.....65 00
Washing.....7 50

Tuition in the Preparatory Department is $5 less. Board is payable monthly in advance. Students supply their own beds and furniture for their rooms, and take their meals with the families boarding them.

We invite those seeking collegiate culture to consider the excellent advantages here offered.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove,

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it in confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

THE NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Is sent in the States of

ALABAMA,
MISSISSIPPI,
LOUISIANA AND
TEXAS.

Constitutes it as good a medium for reaching the people who trade with this city and Mobile as any offered in the Southwest.

Our Circulation Is Widening Daily

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00
Three	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00
Four	12 50	25 00	35 00	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1830,)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 11th, 1868.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board; the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

MARRIED.

At the Dryades street German church, on Tuesday evening, July 21, by the Rev. J. B. A. Abrens, Mr. H. Willman and Mrs. Minnie Brown.

May unsullied happiness always attend them!

OBITUARIES.

At her residence, six miles west of Clinton, Louisiana, on Saturday, June 20, 1868, Mrs. Martha Fauver, aged forty-three years. Early in life Martha Riley professed religion, and joined the M. E. Church in 1844. She married Washington Fauver, since which time her life has been one of consecration to God. Sister F. was modest and unassuming; she shrunk from any public demonstration of religious feeling. But all her friends and acquaintances bear testimony to the consistency of her religious character; and her death-chamber attested the genuineness of her piety, and the power of her faith in the Redeemer.

She said when first taken with the disease — of which she died — that she would not recover; and as the disease progressed to its fatal termination, each violent symptom was noted only as what she was expecting, and found her prepared for the worst. No murmur escaped her; she bore all her sufferings during that long weary week of her illness with patience and resignation to the Father's will. About three o'clock on Saturday evening all hope of her recovery fled from the minds of her physician and friends, and it was painfully evident to all that she was fast nearing the dark valley. She then called her husband and children and relatives around her; one by one, bade them a last, long farewell, giving to each an exhortation suitable to their condition, and requesting all to meet her in heaven, assuring them all that she was going there. Not a cloud seemed to obscure from her the glory of her home in heaven; not a doubt disturbed the tranquility of her soul; she expressed her desire to depart and be with her Saviour. About two hours before she died she fell into a gentle slumber, and thus quietly passed away from earth to heaven. One of her expressions to a much-loved relative deserves to be noted: "Whatever the world may say of religion, it will do to die with." Thus we have lost from the visible church one of our best women, and heaven has gained for many hearts a new attraction. May the great Head of the church supply her place. A bereaved husband and seven children mourn her loss, and the church of God below will miss her from its throng; but we will not murmur while she worships in the unclouded glory of the temple above. W. E. B.

Died, on the 6th of July, 1868, of consumption, (after an illness of about six months,) at his residence in Franklin parish, Louisiana, Rev. Stephen Tregarthan. Brother Tregarthan was a native of England, born October 23, 1813. He emigrated to this country about the year 1843, locating a while in Mississippi. He came to this parish about 1844, where he remained until the Master said: "It is enough; come up higher." In 1846 he was married to Mrs. Mary Howard, and in the fall of the same year he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1848 he embraced religion. Reading the Scriptures carefully, with comments upon them, he very soon became deeply impressed with the fact that there were higher attainments in the Christian religion than he had experienced; and that if he did not attain them he would be in greater danger of falling away from his steadfastness. He therefore set about this great work immediately, and in about two years he professed to have received the blessing of perfect love; and his life and character were a comment upon that doctrine, as taught by Wesley, Fletcher and others. After receiving this great blessing he felt that it was his duty to preach the gospel to others, and was accordingly licensed to preach a short time afterward by the Quarterly Conference of the Beouff river circuit, Louisiana Conference. Remaining in the local ranks, he exercised the functions of this office as a licentiate until the fall of 1860, when he was ordained a deacon, in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, by Bishop Early.

Surely death is no respecter of persons, or else our beloved Brother T. had not passed away; but should have lived to have honored the cause and church of God by his godly walk and conversation; to say nothing of his pulpit efforts, which were always plain, appropriate and good.

The community and church have sustained a great loss, as one of its brightest ornaments has exchanged the "cross for the crown," and the sorrows of earth for that joy and peace which are to be the inheritance of the faithful veteran of the Cross.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle's fought, the victory's won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

T. H. McClendon.

Quarrels would never last long if the fault were on one side only.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have no new features to notice in the general market since our last issue. Nearly every department of trade is affected by the prevailing dullness, and business in most branches is confined to limited jobbing and retail transactions.

The fluctuations in the New York gold market have caused some irregularity in foreign exchange, which commanded enhanced rates on Saturday, but lost part of the improvement on Monday. Domestic exchange has been firm, with rather an upward tendency, but without any quotable change. Operations in both have been of inconsiderable extent.

The weather was clear and warm on Saturday, but on Monday a heavy fall of rain during business hours materially reduced the temperature, and partially suspended outdoor operations, while on Tuesday it continued warm and cloudy throughout the forenoon, with occasional intermissions of sunshine, and a short but heavy shower, which set in toward the close of business, of about an hour's duration. We have nothing to add to our late remarks on the accounts from the country, which continue favorable, excepting in some districts where the crops have been suffering from drought.

The river has fallen two feet since our last report, and is now nine feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market was nearly at a standstill on Friday, but that it was represented as nearly as possible by 29 to 29½c. for Good Ordinary, 30c. for Low Middling, and 31c. for Middling, since which, owing to the scant supply and the heavy rain on Monday, operations have been on a still more limited scale. On Saturday, however, there was some inquiry, and had greater scope been offered to buyers, and factors been less stringent in their pretensions, a comparatively fair business might have been done; but a considerable part of the small stock on sale being held at figures above the views of buyers, the sales were confined to 150 bales, at prices too irregular to serve as a basis for general quotations. On Monday a heavy rain interrupted outdoor operations, and only 17 bales changed hands, while nothing transpired to establish prices. On Tuesday the movement was again almost suspended, the total sales reported footing up only 55 bales. The offerings were to an increased extent, samples of some 600 bales now in Mobile having been exposed for the purpose of effecting their sale in this market; but with accounts of a rather discouraging tenor from Liverpool and New York, buyers held aloof, preferring to await the result of further developments.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 222 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 468 bales, against 308 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 160 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 586,700 bales, against 707,564 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 292,051 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 35,165 bales to Great Britain, of 1,462 to France, and of 100,362 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Sugar.—During the past three days the market for Cuba sugar has been very quiet, but altogether there has been a better feeling prevailing, and rates have ruled comparatively firmer: There has been a fair jobbing and retail business transacted The only sale of any importance on Saturday was 40 hogsheads, on private terms. We quote Cuba sugar at 12¾c. to 13½c. per pound for Muscovado, 14 to 14½c. for Porto Pico; white, 15 to 15¾c.; yellow, 12¾ to 14½c.; brown, 12 to 12½c. There is but little Louisiana sugar for sale.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Mr. Davis goes to Richmond to consult his old family physician in regard to the injuries he sustained by the recent fall.

The Senate last night made a number of confirmations.

A tremendous rain is falling north of this city. The telegraph not working.

At Jessup's Cut the track was two feet under water. Railroad tracks covered for miles.

House.—Joint resolution authorizing officers and soldiers to wear, on state occasions, badges of the corps in which they served, passed.

The report of the conference committee on the Alaska bill, simply appropriating the necessary money, was passed.

The resolution to take a recess from Monday to the third Monday in September, after an exciting struggle, passed, several Democrats changing their votes. The final vote was 107 to 71.

The Reconstruction Committee reported a bill for the more speedy reorganization of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas.

During the debate Butler declared himself in favor of the bill, but hopeless, however, of its becoming a law—the resolution to adjourn on Monday would defeat it. He added that if the Republicans lost the Southern States, they could not object to their being counted against them; and if the Republicans won them, the President had said their governments were illegal, and their votes could not be counted, and the President held the purse, the sword and the Senate, so far as heard from. The New York World claimed that, if Congress adjourned, every Southern State would be carried for the Democratic ticket. Butler believed it. Congress was simply losing time considering this bill. If the reconstruction policy could stand, Congress ought to protect their action, their honor as legislators, and themselves. Butler's time here expired.

Beck appealed to the House not to pass the bill—not to consign those States to reckless adventurers, and not to arm a negro constabulary against peaceful white inhabitants, but rather leave those States under the protection of the troops of the United States.

The bill passed on a strict party vote, except John Banker, of Illinois, who voted with the Democrats.

The bill, as passed, is as follows:

Be it enacted, That for the better security of persons and property in Texas, Virginia and Mississippi, the constitutional conventions of each of said States heretofore elected under and in pursuance of an act of Congress passed March 2, 1867, entitled 'an act for the more efficient government of the rebel States,' and the several acts of Congress supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, shall have, and are hereby authorized to exercise the following powers in addition to the powers now authorized by law, to wit: To make removals and appointments of all officers of the provisional governments of said States respectively; to authorize the provisional governors of said respective States to remove and appoint registers and judges of election under said act of Congress, which registers and judges of election shall not be eligible to any elective office under such provisional government, and shall observe the provision of said act of Congress; to organize and maintain a constabulary force in each of said States to preserve the peace and aid in the execution of the laws; to provide by ordinance for the reassembling of said conventions from time to time, and for holding all elections authorized by said acts of Congress, and for ascertaining and declaring the result of such elections, especially the result of any election which may be held for the ratification or rejection of any constitution which said several conventions may submit to the people of either of said States, and to pass such ordinances, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, as they may deem necessary to protect all persons therein in their lives, liberty and property.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the several ordinances which may be passed by the constitutional convention of either of said States, as herein provided, shall be enforced by the provisional government of such State, until such State shall have adopted a constitution of State government, and the same shall have been approved by Congress; Provided, That nothing in this act shall deprive any person of trial by jury in the courts of said States for offenses against the laws of said States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the military commanders in each of said States shall give aid to the officers of the provisional government of each of said States in preserving the peace and enforcing the laws, and especially in suppressing unlawful obstructions and forcible resistance to the execution of the laws.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That on the fourth Wednesday after the passage of this act the said conventions of Mississippi and Virginia shall reassemble, and the said convention of Mississippi shall proceed to frame a constitution of government and submit the same to the people, under and in pursuance of the provisions of the said acts of Congress and of this act.

SEC. 5. That if in any one of said States any person shall, during the year 1868, vote for any candidate for elector of President or Vice President of the United States, shall act as an officer at any election for such candidate, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of high misdemennor, and shall be liable to indictment and conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, and shall, on conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year.

SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to prohibit any person from voting or acting as an officer of any election contrary to the provisions of this act, and for that purpose he shall employ the power of the army and navy of the United States so far as may be necessary.

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts, so far as the same may be in conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The funding bill has passed both Houses.

The bill reorganizing Mississippi, Virginia and Texas came up in the Senate. Mr. Buckalew took the floor to argue it, when Conkling said it was useless to try to pass the bill, and on his motion it was tabled.

The bill having passed removing the disabilities from Nelson Tift and General Young, they were seated as Representatives from Georgia.

The House filibustered on the tariff bill to adjournment. Both Houses are adjourned to the third Monday in September.

The Senate rejected Johnson and Jewell as assessor and collector for the third Louisiana district, and reconsidered the vote confirming Seldon for the second Virginia district, and rejected him.

There is so much confusion that it is impossible to give the position of several important bills, but all affecting the South, of an aggressive character, have failed.

The funding bill passed the House by 100 to 32.

There are numerous inquiries this evening as to the action taken by the President with reference to the funding bill passed by the Senate last night and by the House to-day.

Upon inquiry in the proper direction, it is found that the bill was presented to the President but a few minutes (say five minutes) before the adjournment of Congress, and at the time when the committees of the two Houses were waiting upon Mr. Johnson to know if he had any further communication to make to Congress.

Under the circumstances the President could not have had time even to carefully read the bill, much less to give it that consideration and scrutiny which a measure of such vital importance demands.

For this reason, if for no other, Mr. Johnson felt that he would not be justified in approving the bill, and therefore did not sign it.

There are other reasons, however, that would probably have induced the President, under any circumstances, to withhold his approval of the bill, and among them may be mentioned the fact that the bonds were to be exempt from taxation.

In anticipation of a probable necessity for an extra session of the Senate for executive business, the President had this morning prepared a proclamation, convening the Senators to-day after the regular adjournment, but when the Senate adjourned at noon it was found that nominations had been made for all the important offices vacant, and action taken by the Senate in some form, and that there was no probability of getting more definite disposition upon treaties submitted by the executive than had been already had, and, therefore, the proclamation was abandoned.

Among the important offices yet to be acted upon are the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the naval office of New York, the mission to Ecuador, and the marshal for the western district of Pennsylvania, for all of which nominations had been made but a short time before the adjournment of the Senate.

The Senate was engaged upon the nomination for Commissioner of Internal Revenue when the President pro tem.'s gavel fell at the hour of 12.

Just before that moment a vote had been taken to lay the nomination upon the table, which was lost by 20 ayes to 27 nays.

LONDON, July 27.—Political disturbances are again reported in Belgravia. A dispatch from Constantinople states that the Turkish government has ordered troops to that quarter to restore tranquility.

LISBON, July 27.—It is reported that a British gunboat had landed men at a Portugese colonial station on the coast of Guinea, and taken possession of the place. The Portuguese guards were made prisoners, and the flag was hauled down and the British colors substituted. The government has dispatched two men-of-war to the scene of the outrage.

LONDON, July 27.—Lord Cramworth is dead.

Further advices from Japan to the 30th June have been received. All the ministers of foreign powers in Japan had joined in a protest against the revival by the Mikado of the decrees against native Christians.

The civil war continued to rage with much violence. The troops of the Mikado were in possession of all the ports opened to foreigners by treaty.

A brother of Stnls Bashi, the ex-Tycoon, was at the head of the revolt against the spiritual emperor, and had a large army under his command, with which he was gradually advancing on Yeddo, in which city the party of the Tycoon is very strong. There had been some fighting between the hostile forces in the vicinity of Ysddo, but no decisive success reported on either side.

It was thought the war between the two parties, whose respective strength and resources appeared so evenly balanced, would result in a division of the country into two independent empires, governed respectively by the Mikado and the Tycoon.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—It is understood that the President considers the commissionership of internal revenue vacant, and will make an ad interim appointment in a few days. Efforts to reorganize the federal offices in New Orleans failed. It was found impossible to compromise conflicting party interests.

It is positively stated the President will continue to act as heretofore regarding the reconstruction acts. He will conform to the laws until modified by Congress or nullified by the courts.

The Chinese legation took formal leave of the President to-day. Burlingame is delighted with the treaty.

Howard is dismissing many bureau functionaries, giving them a month's preliminary leave of absence.

Mr. Davis, with his family, sailed on Saturday from Quebec for Europe.

The following order is issued from the War Department:

'The commanding generals of the second, third, fourth and fifth military districts having officially reported that Arkansas, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Alabama and Florida have complied with the reconstruction acts, including the acts of June 25, 1868, and that consequently so much of the act of March 2, 1867, and all acts supplementary thereto, providing for military districts, subject to the military authority of the United States, as provided, have become inoperative in said States, and the commanding generals have ceased exercising the military power conferred by the said acts, therefore the following changes will be made in the organization and command of the military districts and geographical departments:

'First. The second and third military districts having ceased to exist, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida will constitute the department of the South, Gen. Meade to command, with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia.

'Second. Gen. Gillem will command the fourth military district, comprising Mississippi.

'Third. Gen. Reynolds will command the fifth military district, comprising Texas, headquarters at Austin, Texas.

'Fourth. Louisiana and Arkansas will constitute the department of Louisiana, Gen. Rousseau commanding, headquarters at New Orleans. Gen. Buchanan will continue in command until relieved by General Rousseau.

'Fifth. Gen. George Crook relieves Gen. Rousseau in the department of Columbia.

'Sixth. Gen. Canby is reassigned to the command of the department of Washington.

'Seventh. Gen. Edward Hatch, colonel ninth cavalry, relieves Gen. Buchanan as Assistant Commissioner Freedmen's Bureau in Louisiana.'

In accordance with the concurrent resolution of Congress, Secretary Seward proclaims, reciting the facts and circumstances, and concludes: 'And I further certify that the said amendment fourteenth has become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution of the United States.'

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Col. Wolfley, confirmed as Assessor of Internal Revenue at New Orleans on Monday last, has received his commission, and will leave for that city the latter part of this week.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Reliable report represents that Col. W. M. Smallwood will probably be appointed postmaster at New Orleans, in place of the present incumbent, who, it is reported, is to be suspended.

Gen. Hobart, it is understood, will be assigned as Special Treasury Agent to run the Customhouse until a successor to Mr. Kellogg has been appointed and confirmed. This arrangement will be satisfactory to the conservative element of Louisiana, so far as it is represented here.

General Blair's Letter of Acceptance.

The following is a copy of Gen. Blair's letter of acceptance of the Democratic nomination for Vice President, which was received in Washington on the 21st:

Gen. George. W. Morgan, Chairman of the Committee of the National Democratic Convention:

GENTLEMEN: I take the earliest opportunity of replying to your letter notifying me of my nomination for Vice President of the United States by the national Democratic convention, recently held in the city of New York.

I accept, without hesitation, the nomination tendered in a manner so gratifying, and give you and the committee my thanks for the very kind and complimentary language in which you have conveyed to me the decision of the convention.

I have carefully read the resolutions adopted by the convention, and most cordially concur in every principle and sentiment they announce. My opinions upon all the questions which discriminate the great contending parties have been freely expressed on all suitable occasions, and I do not deem it necessary at this time to reiterate them.

The issues upon which the contest turns are clear and cannot be obscured or distorted by the sophistries of our adversaries. They all resolve themselves into the old and ever-recurring struggle of a few to absorb the political power of the nation. This effort, under every conceivable name and disguise, has always characterized the opponents of the Democratic party, but at no time has the attempt assumed so open and daring a shape as in this contest. The adversaries of free constitutional government, in defiance of the express language of the Constitution, have erected a military despotism in ten States of the Union; have taken from the President the power vested in him by the supreme law, and have deprived the Supreme Court of its jurisdiction. The right of trial by jury, and that great writ of right, the habeas corpus, the shields of safety for every citizen, and which have descended to the United States from the earliest traditions of our ancestors, and which our revolutionary fathers fought to secure to their posterity forever in the fundamental charter of our liberties, have been ruthlessly trampled under foot by the fragment of a Congress.—Whole States and communities of people of our race have been attainted, convicted, condemned and deprived of their rights as citizens, without presentment, trial or witness, but by Congressional enactment of ex post facto laws, and in defiance of the constitutional prohibition denying to a full and loyal Congress the authority to pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law. The same usurping authority substituted as electors, in place of the men of your own race thus illegally attainted and disfranchised, a host of ignorant negroes, who are supported in idleness with the public money, combined together to strip the white race of their birthright, through the management of the Freedmen's Bureau and the emissaries of conspirators in other States. And to complete the oppression, the military power of the nation has been placed at their disposal in order to make this barbarism supreme. The military leader, under whose prestige this usurping Congress has taken refuge since the condemnation of their schemes by the free people of the North in the elections of the last year, and whom they have selected as their candidate to shield themselves from the result of their wickedness and crime, has announced his acceptance of the nomination, and his willingness to maintain their usurpations over eight millions of white people at the South fixed to the earth with his bayonets. He exclaims, let us have peace. "Peace reigns in Warsaw," was the announcement which heralded the doom of the liberties of a nation. "The empire is peace," exclaimed Bonaparte, when freedom and its defenders expired under the sharp edge of the sword. The peace to which Grant invites us is the peace of despotism and death. Those who seek to restore the Constitution by executing the will of the people, condemning the reconstruction acts, already denounced in the elections of last year, and which will, I am convinced, be still more emphatically expressed by the election of the Democratic candidate as President of the United States, are denounced as "revolutionists," by the partisans of this vindictive Congress. Negro suffrage, which the popular vote of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Connecticut and other States has condemned as expressly against the letter of the Constitution, must stand, because their Senators and Representatives have willed it. If the people shall again condemn these measures by the election of the Democratic candidate for President they must not be disturbed, although decided to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and although the President is sworn to maintain and support the Constitution. The will of a fraction of a Congress, reinforced with its partisan emissaries sent to the South, and supported there by the soldiery, must stand against the will of the people and the decision of the Supreme Court, and the solemn oath of the President to maintain and support the Constitution. It is "revolutionary" to execute the will of the people. It is "revolutionary" in the President to keep inviolate his oath to sustain the Constitution. The false construction of the vital principles of our government is the last resort of those who would sway and supersede our time-honored institutions. The nation will say the Constitution must be restored and the will of the people again prevail. The appeal for the peaceful ballot to attend this end is not revolution. They make war and revolution who attempt to arrest this quiet mode of putting aside military despotism and the usurpations of a fragment of a Congress asserting absolute power over that benign system of regulated liberty left us by our fathers. This must be allowed to take its course. This is the only road to peace. It will come with the election of the Democratic candidate, and not with the election of that model warrior whose bayonets are now at the throats of eight millions of people in the South to compel them to support him as a candidate for the Presidency, and to submit to the domination of an alien race of semi-barbarous men. No perversion of truth or audacity of misrepresentation can exceed that which hails this candidate in arms as an angel of peace.

I am, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

FRANK P. BLAIR.

THE new fifteen cent fractional currency notes are soon to be put into circulation. They are nearly as large as the twenty-five cent notes, and have pictures of Grant and Sherman upon their face.

IT is stated that Northern men have purchased real estate in and around McMinnville, Tennessee, to the amount of $84,688, during the past year.

IF we had no faults ourselves, we would not take pleasure in observing those of others.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

MR. EDITOR: I will send you a few lines from the Coosa River Mission, Jacksonville District, Montgomery Conference, that your readers may know how we are progressing in the way of Sunday schools. I was successful in starting four schools last spring, and three of the four are doing well, and bid fair to accomplish much good. The other is rather on the decline for want of books. I think I will be able to remove that cause in a few days. On last Saturday, the 11th of July, I began a two days' meeting at Mount Zion, and protracted it until Tuesday night. The result was ten conversions and ten accessions to the church. These converts were students in the Sunday school, and they were all converted in less than one hour. I think this is the beginning of better times. I hope we shall have a revival all around on this mission.

The Northern Methodists are still operating in our midst. They are doing us but little harm now. When they first sent their political friends here they were successful in leading a few good members off from our church. But with them they got some that were clogs to the wheels of Zion, and left us a better membership. The way is open for us to build up with a better material than we lost. I have no local preachers to aid me on this work, and I hope that all that read these lines will remember me at the throne of grace, that I may be successful in doing the work that is assigned me. Your's in Christ.

HENRY YOUNG, P. E.

JASPER DISTRICT.

FAYETTE C. H., Ala., July 17, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: This epistle will inform you and, if published, your numerous readers that the Jasper district is in good condition spiritually. The preachers are all at work on their respective fields of labor, and I must say that they are a heroic body of men, "willing to spend and be spent" for souls and the church. Just think of a man of ability absenting himself from his family half his time, for half the year, for less than one hundred dollars, and you will have an idea of the modern heroism among the ministers on this mountain district.

Our district meeting came off last week, with a larger attendance than could have been expected. These meetings have done and will do great good to the church. They are most assuredly telling on this district.

A plan has been set on foot to make the district self-sustaining! It can be done if the people will assist, and they say they will if they can. So you may expect the thing to be accomplished.

We are all still of the opinion that the district should be divided, and divide it we will if you will all help us; and if we could we would do the work without help.

A word or two about the radicals in these parts. Forty or more of the members who left us a year or more ago have returned. They say that a deception was practiced upon them, and now that their eyes are opened they could not be satisfied without returning. I can safely say that we are in no danger of suffering in this district from this quarter. Our only fears are that the preachers will be driven from the fields of labor for the want of support. W. L. THOMPSEN.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, MOBILE.

MOBILE, July 23, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has been very gracious to St. Paul's church. He began to revive his work here on the 29th of April, and has continued to bless us ever since, having converted about one hundred and thirty. One hundred and seven have applied for membership in the church. When I have more time I will give you a more particular account of the manner in which the meeting has been conducted, and of some interesting events connected with it. Your's, etc.,

MY FIELD.

BY MARY ELLEN ATKINSON.

The night had come; the moonlight shone
Athwart the field where I had sown my seed;
Fond I should ever behold
Waving its harvest gold.

Sought ever throwed that seed was hidden there:
In pallid light lay furrow-line and bare;
No blade, no leaf was seen
Signing its promise green.

And on the shore the little shallop lay
Which in the morn must bear me far away,
Where I might never know
Whether the seed did grow.

And if I wept, 'twas none but God could see
How much the hope of harvest was to me.
He sent his angel down
My trembling trust to crown.

His gentle angel led me by the hand
Until we stood upon the bare, stern land.
And then he turned and smiled—
With eyes serene and mild.

"Behold," he said, "to still thy human fear.
In one short hour will God unfold the year."
And as he spoke the word
The barren clods were stirred.

And tiny blades crept out into the light,
And grew, and grew, before my wondering sight,
And then the ears were seen,
Long-bearded, full and green.

And while I watched the waving grain, behold
The heads bent down with weight of ripened gold;
The angel said: "The Lord
Shall give thee this reward.

"Fear not to get thee hence across the sea,
In harvest-time I'll bind thy sheaves for thee.
Thy field may ripen late;
Fear not, but trust and wait."

A little cloud sailed by and hid the moon;
My angel comforter was gone too soon.
A tremor blurred the air;
Again my field lay bare,

Except that near me, close beside my feet,
Remained one handful of the golden wheat;
God's token that for me
Rich harvest yet should be.

And in my bosom, cherished, loved, behold
These precious ears of sacred harvest gold.
Such fruit my field shall bear—
I leave it in God's care.

TALLADEGA CORRESPONDENCE.

TALLADEGA, Ala., July 15, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Sometimes the narrative is useful, as well as entertaining. We are not unfrequently much profited by dwelling on the recent incidents of life, extracting their good lessons while new and fresh.

A few weeks since I was much benefited by a visit to a neighborhood in Tallapoosa co., known as the "Pearson settlement."—Walter Raleigh Pearson, son of the widow Susan Pearson, and aged about twenty-two years, died last April. His life was remarkable for the illustration, in an eminent degree, of all the Christian graces, including habits of assiduous study, and a lofty aim in literature and religious usefulness.

His death was one of signal triumph. After giving to all his dying charge he said: "And now I wish you to send for Uncle Duncan to preach my funeral sermon, from the 55th, 56th and 57th verses of the 15th chapter of First Corinthians."

On the fifth Sabbath in May I was at the place appointed. An immense congregation was assembled to hear, no doubt, as they hoped, a sermon befitting the text and the occasion. With the love I bore him, the sorrow at losing him, the vast multitude of intelligent and profoundly interested hearers, together with the burning, thrilling sentiments of the text, I was well nigh overpowered. The whole was suggestive of the following exordium, viz: "It is not often that we have an opportunity so favorable to religious improvement as the present; so awakening to close heart and life examination. Ordinarily, when we read such passages as the text, we fail to enter entirely into their full spirit. Their importance, it is true, always appears great, but then it is at a distance, like some far-off treasure or pleasure, to be enjoyed at a remote future period. But the pious life, closed with so triumphant a death, of him whose virtues we to-day commemorate, serves not only to unlock the treasures of the text, and reveal its vast wealth, but brings them almost within our grasp."

Verily it was a day of power. The word fell not back to us in the lying utterance of the deceiving and weak, but [illegible] strength in living power. Praise be to God which giveth us the victory!" O how he fought his fight, conquering sword in the face of his pursuers, [illegible] standing on the yonder side of the bridge of blood which spans the deep, dark, surging river with his feet upon the abiding shore, as if to defend and encourage the precious ones who had hung upon his expiring heart, again he cried out: "Thanks be to God," etc. Sweet as was his life, yet like the dying swan, his notes were sweetest in his death-song.

This section of country—Pearson's Chapel, Sunny Level, and the churches around, covering an area of ten or twelve miles—is eminent for the healthy growth of religion, as taught by Methodists. This fact is not widely known, because there is neither a railroad nor stage running either through or near it. Much good would be done the M. E. Church South by a visit from a bishop.

That faithful preacher and presiding elder, Rev. Joseph O. Curry, holds his district meeting, this week, in the midst of the above-named section—Hillabee Camp Ground. It is to be hoped a bishop will be present.

Out of the hands of the sainted Willis D. Matthews, this circuit—Pinckneyville—fell into the care of Rev. Largus R. Bell, who has much strengthened the stakes and enlarged the borders of the church by his faithful pastoral labors, and his efficient and improving pulpit efforts. It were not proper here to say of him all that is even strictly true; yet I may admonish the preacher who will follow him to look well to his bow and quiver.

Of the local preachers of this circuit, it is due to say that most of them are students, and all are pious, punctual and laborious.

The Fayetteville circuit, I think, is improving under the administration of our indefatigable presiding elder, Rev. L. M. Wilson. Both the ities prosper, viz: the spiritual and temporal. He is a very efficient man, as well as preacher, making himself felt wherever he goes, and seems to tax all his energies for the good of the church.

I regret very much that we are about to lose from the itinerant ministry the Rev. H. Clay Stone. His college, conference and army friends, however, will be glad to know that since he cannot itinerate longer, he has adopted the next most certain mode of doing good—teaching. He has been unanimously elected president of the Plantersville Institute.

This is hailed with much delight by his friends and acquaintances here, as he is known to be eminently qualified for this important position. Here he was born, reared, educated and converted. Here he lived in wealth and ease, and was used, as educated by his father, to dispense liberally of his substance to the church. From the war he returned here, well nigh stripped of all earthly possessions. He addressed himself to the plow and the hoe, and since the surrender has wrung from the earth, with his own manual labor, a support for his family.

He presents a picture profitable to contemplate, viz: a Christian minister enjoying wealth, yet humble and laborious, and in poverty showing the loftiest independence and dignified, gentlemanly deportment. He is the coming man to whom the church may look to bear her standard throughout these fertile valleys. I bespeak for his school such patronage alone as merit demands.

I close with a word about myself. I am still trying to be in labors abundant, although I have not been able to do as much the present as the last year. I failed to meet my Fayetteville appointment last Sabbath—not from sickness, but [illegible] weather. I hope, however, during the fall to make up for any lack of service.

DANIEL DUNCAN.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

TORTOLA, British Honduras, June 21, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to state in the columns of your paper that I had not contemplated returning to the United States on account of a change in my opinion of British Honduras. At one time I conceived the hope that a better day was about to dawn upon that unfortunate country; and then under that impression, for considerations so peculiar as to have, perhaps, little or no bearing upon any other individual who might wish to embark in agriculture, I did entertain for awhile some idea of removing up into the wheat and stock region of northeastern Texas. But soon the illusion was dispelled, and I abandoned the idea.

Having despaired of being able to live under that ill fated government, with any satisfaction, for many long and troublesome years to come, if ever, I bade adieu to my native land more than twelve months ago, and on the 4th of July last I transferred my allegiance to the British government, and united my fortunes with this colony. For the same reasons which impelled me to leave that country, and the inducements that caused me to adopt this, I now expect to remain permanently in British Honduras as the country and home of myself and family. I have already given my opinion, formed from patient investigation, of the pleasant salubrity of this climate and the abundant resources of the soil, and I yet believe that this is the best refuge to be found for our unhappy Confederate people, who can here enjoy quiet protection, and repose in prosperity. But I only propose to furnish facts, and leave every one to decide what will be best for himself.

Mr. McCutchon, late of Louisiana, now in charge of Mr. Mathe's sugar plantation in this colony, is making at this time over six thousand lbs. of sugar per acre, where the trumpet trees have grown up thick, while the cane has become so old as to have long sprouts from the joints. Mr. Beshaw, on the same river—Sittee—has coffee trees, only two years old, now loaded with berries, while there is a full stand of plantains on the same ground, (as shade for the young coffee trees,) also loaded with fruit. Mr. B. has also just gathered a crop of corn that will compare favorably with any grown in the United States. Two crops of corn can be made annually on the same ground. Mr. Price, from Louisiana, informed me that he made tobacco on New river that classed second best in the market at London, and sold for $26 per cwt. Two crops of tobacco can also be cut the same year. Mr. P. also informed me that he had made fifteen bushels of rice per acre at one crop. Mr. Oswald informed me that at least twenty-four bushels per acre can be made in two crops the same year, as the stubbles ratoon after the first crop is cut off.

Some fifteen good families, experienced planters from the Gulf States, have recently settled a neighborhood down here between the rivers Moto and Rio Grande. They have located a village, called Toledo, at a good landing on the sea-coast, and opened their farms back in the country, where there is a large quantity of very rich land, well watered, to be had at $1 50 per acre, ten per cent. cash, and the balance on two, three, four and five years' time, without interest. These lands are surveyed into sections by Messrs. Young, Teledo & Co., who have three parties now surveying and opening plain lines around each section, which can be easily and satisfactorily examined. Since about the middle of March we have cleared our fields, and are now planting mainly corn, rice, potatoes, yams, plantains, etc., in order to make plenty of breadstuffs the first thing. We will then aim to extend our planting operations to tobacco, sugar, coffee and the various fruits. We are sanguine of success. But let the results be what they may, I intend to give them to the public honestly about next October.

We are now employing Spanish laborers at $8 per month, who work by task. But the House of Assembly has recently enacted that the colony will pay one-third of the cost of introducing laborers into the country, provided the one-third does not exceed $25 per head. Mr. Mathe has some Chinamen indentured for three years, at moderate wages, and Mr. McCutchon says he finds them to be good laborers. As any number of them can be obtained from China, our best policy will be to get them for a term of years. All that is requisite to develop the vast agricultural resources of this country, and render it immensely wealthy, is plenty of labor, which may be brought from China by those who have the capital to operate with; and those who lack the means of employing labor, at present, can accumulate funds much more rapidly here than there. White men are laboring here successfully in the fields. The proceeds of two or three hours' work here, in the morning and evening, will more than double that of a whole day's work there, as less cultivation is required and the yield is larger. D. W. FOSTER.

THE BRISTOL CONVENTION. — MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE AND OTHER INSTITUTIONS.—THE APPALACHIAN PLATEAU AS THE SEAT OF EDUCATION FOR THE SOUTH.

MR. EDITOR: A trip from Knoxville to the Bristol convention, one hundred and thirty miles, made in daylight, afforded a fine opportunity of seeing the country of upper East Tennessee. The general features are the same as those of lower East Tennessee, i. e., from Chattanooga to Knoxville, one hundred and ten miles, modified by the continual ascent of the streams to their sources. At Loudon the Tennessee is crossed by a bridge 1,800 feet long; at Bristol it flows under a culvert which sustains the railroad embankment by a single arch. In that distance it falls six hundred feet. But as you ascend the valley the mountains, in like manner, become higher, and, opposite Greenville assume proportions that mingle the sublime with the beautiful. The Alleghany or Blue Ridge range, at this point, is seventy-five miles across, and a whole day's ride is required in passing from one side to the other, between the habitable slopes. Nevertheless, two railroads are slowly ascending this barrier, the one from Morristown, by the valley of the French Broad river, to Asheville, North Carolina, and the other from Johnson's depot, sixty miles beyond. On the other hand, three roads are projected across the Cumberland range, with a view to penetrate Kentucky and reach the Ohio. One of these, from Knoxville, has reached the neighborhood of the Kentucky line; the other two, from Morristown and Bristol, have not yet been let to contract. The main trunk line, which forms the base of Norfolk and Liverpool steam navigation enterprise, extends from Memphis, via Chattanooga, Knoxville, Lynchburg and Petersburg, to Norfolk, a distance of eight hundred miles. Every section of this magnificent line was represented in the convention. About four hundred delegates attended. T. A. Nelson, of Memphis, was president. Laudon C. Haynes, the orator of Tennessee, made the opening speech. Gen. Mahone, of Virginia, Gen. Maney, of Nashville, Gen. Hoke, of North Carolina, M. J. Wicks, of Memphis, and other prominent ex-Confederates participated, but not a breath of politics stirred in the convention. It was a reconstruction meeting of the right sort, designed to repopulate and regenerate a section of the country eight hundred miles long, and rich and beautiful all the way. Preliminaries being settled, an able committee reported in favor of the organization of a company, on the spot, for the immediate establishment of a line of steamers from Norfolk to Liverpool, to carry the products of Southern soil direct to Europe, and to bring back the living freight of emigration to our own shores. A board of directors was appointed, three hundred thousand dollars were pledged for a beginning, and the convention adjourned with the greatest enthusiasm.

There were many preachers, teachers and public men at the convention, in addition to the commercial element, which largely predominated. We had our schemes and consultations also, the great drift of which was that this beautiful, plentiful and healthful country should be made the educational centre of the South. Accepting an invitation from President Arbogast, I spent one night at the Martha Washington Female College in Abingdon, Virginia, fifteen miles beyond Bristol. No excursion of my life has been more pleasant than this little trip into the noble State of Virginia. Was it fancy or reality that made the ground I then for the first time trod seem like enchanted ground? Was it the muse of history or of the imagination, was it the memory of dead heroes and statesmen, or the association of some of the best of earth that are yet living, who acknowledge this proud domain for their birth-place, that caused the new-born emotions of joy and gratitude which overflowed my heart, as the evening twilight settled upon these softly rounded hills and smoothly laid valleys that surround the abodes of that princely and pious people? Be that as it may, every line was a line of beauty, every shade seemed classic, and every rural home a bit of Eden that had escaped the ruins of the fall. At dark we reached Martha Washington Female College. We were met and welcomed by friends from Alabama, who had found here a blest retreat from the cares of their disordered homes in the farther South, and were spending the summer with their daughters at school. The vacations are admirably arranged, so that young ladies from the Gulf States may spend the severe winter season at home, (including the Christmas holidays,) there being only a short vacation in the summer, which may be profitably spent in company with their parents in visiting some of the springs or other natural curiosities with which this region abounds. The college buildings and grounds, the property of the Holston Conference, are certainly the best piece of church property that I have ever seen. A palatial residence, sufficient of itself to accommodate all the departments of a first-class boarding school, grounds that a Shenstone might have envied, and internal domestic and scholastic arrangements complete—and withal as cheap as staying at home—make Martha Washington a most attractive and promising place for the work of education. I will not speak of Brothers Arbogast and Cunnyngham in terms of unctuous flattery, but I will say that they are men of culture, of piety, and of common sense enough to carry on successfully a school for young ladies that will be worthy of the magnificent location which it enjoys. I may say that they have done it already. The college has overpaid its expenses the past two years, and has greatly improved its facilities without increasing its debt. I am proud of this school as an institution of the church, and cheerfully recommend it to my friends in the South.

Emory and Henry lies ten miles beyond, but I had no opportunity to pay a visit. Inquiries caused me to learn that it too has a superior location, with ample means and facilities of instruction, and, what is marvelous in anything that belongs to the church, that it is out of debt and making money.

And now, Mr. Editor, I propose for a short space to discuss the not-yet-but-destined-to-be famous plan broached by you for cheap education, and to show that it is practicable in this region of the country. At East Tennessee University, which has an endowment of fifty-five thousand dollars, we furnish tuition at twenty-five dollars per annum, and the students board themselves as they choose. Some board in families at ten to fifteen dollars per month, others board in clubs at eight or ten dollars per month, and others bring provisions from home, or purchase in the market and cook for themselves. This reduces education to the minimum, and brings it within reach of a class of students who would otherwise be entirely cut off. But the old prejudice of Southern people against cheap things has to be encountered. You cannot believe that tuition is as good at twenty-five dollars as it would be if it cost fifty, nor board at fifteen as if it cost twenty. And yet I tell you that the teachers of Emory and Henry and of Martha Washington are making money at these rates; and it is not because they do not live well, for there is no country where so much attention is paid to good living as in this section.

I claim then, Mr. Editor, to have solved your problem. You wanted a plan for cheap education. I have given it to you; send them to the Appalachian valleys, where fruitfulness characterizes the soil, healthfulness the climate, and strength of body and mind seem to be inherent in the people. Let your readers refer to your advertising columns and look at "Martha Washington," where a young lady can have everything furnished for less than three hundred dollars—or to East Tennessee University, where we can give board and tuition for from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars per annum—and I think the desideratum will be found. And the best evidence of this fact, Mr. Editor, is that while many of our best institutions at the South are languishing for want of patronage, the vast multitude of colleges and schools in this section of the country (many of which are of inferior grade) are all doing well and making money.

Respectfully yours,

F. M. GRACE.

PRAY FOR THE YOUNG.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. —— relates that twenty years ago, sad and burdened, he was thinking of the young of his congregation, and praying for them, as was his custom. A mother came into his study and asked him to pray with her for her children. Both hearts were warmed. Afterward several others came, one by one, asking his prayers, and praying with him. Soon after sixteen of those thus prayed for became useful members of the church. M.

MISSIONARY NEWS.

EIGHT ordained Hawaiian ministers have offered themselves to go to the Micronesia mission by the next trip of the 'Morning Star.'

THE church and congregation in Tarsus, the birthplace of the Apostle Paul, under the charge of the American Board, have doubled during the last year.

THE Methodists have begun the publication of a missionary paper in India. Their field includes Lucknow, in northern India, and contains a population of fourteen millions. They have nineteen missionaries, eighty-three native helpers, and five hundred and fifty communicants.

A COMPANY of Baptist missionaries sailed not long ago for India, and the first letter from them brought the welcome intelligence that a revival on shipboard had blessed their labors while on the voyage. The larger part of the ship's company were converted, including the captain and his wife.

REV. THOMAS HASSALL died, March 29th, in New South Wales. He was the last link connecting the present generation of missions with the first missionary vessel, the "Duff." He was an infant on board that vessel, which carried his father as a missionary. When obliged to leave the South Sea Islands, several of the missionaries, and among them Mr. Hassall's father, settled in New South Wales.

UPWARD of forty-one thousand letters were recently sent to Germany from the New York post office in a single week. The number sent to Great Britain during the same time was less than forty thousand.

THE Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce adopted a rule, to go into effect July 1, that flour barreled is unmerchantable unless it is headlined. If otherwise sold the seller or owner must pay the lining.

THE CHRISTIAN FAMILY ALTAR.

The hour has come, the sacred hour of prayer,
And humbly round that cherished altar
A happy family now converse with heaven.
'Tis no unwelcome task. This holy hour
These worshipers e'er hail with fond delight,
That precious volume they have learned to prize
Above all other books lies open there,
And from the page reflecting heavenly light
The godly father now devoutly reads.
Sweet are the articles of sacred truth
To him who loves the audience hall of God.
Now from this Bethel swells the song of praise,
And in that hallowed melody each voice
Accordant blends.

The music ceases now,
And low before the mercy-seat they kneel,
And upward raise their hearts in fervent prayer.
The warm emotion of the father's heart
From its deep fount bursts forth as he commends
His cherished offspring to the sinner's Friend,
And for his household intercedes with heaven;
His bosom glows with pure devotion's flame—
A flame enkindled by a Savior's love.
He lifts the veil that hides eternal things;
He sees a Mediator on his throne—
Jesus! the name is precious to his soul,
And all his hopes around the cross entwine.
The hand of that disciple grasps a key
By heaven bestowed—a key that shall unlock
The treasure-house of God.

Lives there a man
Who cannot love this consecrated place—
The altar where a godly household meet?
Thence is sweet incense wafted to the skies;
On it, secure, a ladder rests, whose top
Reaches the shining battlement of heaven;
There, with Jehovah's choicest gifts to men,
Angels to earth descend. A power unseen
Illumes with his gracious smiles the place—
'Tis holy ground—a paradise below—
A green oasis in this wilderness—
The vestibule of heaven.

LETTER FROM NORTH LOUISIANA

MONROE AND ITS SURROUNDINGS.—WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT MIGHT BE—TRENTON AND ITS BUSINESS—A TRIP OVER THE PINE HILLS.—CROP PROSPECTS, ETC.

UNION PARISH, LA., July, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: You have been in that oldest of north Louisiana settlements—Monroe. Very good; you need not read this part of my letter. Leave it to those who have never traveled up or down that most beautiful of all Southern rivers, the Ouachita. (Why not spell as pronounced—Washataw.)

You have never, I am sure, in all your journeyings, looked upon a lovelier site for a large city than Monroe. And what prevents it from rapidly rising to a city of great commercial importance? There is around it a soil as rich as that toward which "Lot pitched his tent"—a vast area of alluvial lands, immense plantations of inexhaustible fertility. A railroad is nearly finished between it and Vicksburg, which, if completed, would link it, east and west, with the finest agricultural regions of the South. Even the local trade ought to quadruple its business. Why, then, does it remain in statu quo—its growth consisting mainly in the erection of negro huts? The answer is found in the fact that the property-holders are blind. They demand the most exorbitant prices for building lots, and the most unreasonable rents. You pay as much for a store-room or dwelling here as you would for one of the same dimensions in the most desirable quarter of the city of New Orleans. A reduction of one-half in the prices of lots and rents would double the size of the town in twelve months, and increase its business perhaps fourfold.

The Catholics have a strong hold upon the place. The business is mostly in the hands of the Jews. The Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and Episcopalians have one house of worship, which they hold jointly—a "union church," which is just no church at all.

Old as the town is, the Protestant Christians have never accomplished much there. The Methodists, especially, have never succeeded in their efforts to organize a church until the present energetic minister, Rev. Horace Jewell, was sent to the work. His success has been beyond all precedent and expectation. There is now a good society, constantly growing, with a Sabbath school, which is greatly blessing the community. No town in the State can boast better society, in proportion to population, than Monroe. The Protestant denominations can call out, on the Sabbath, congregations which, for intelligence and refinement, can nowhere be surpassed. The Episcopalians are served by Rev. T. B. Lawson, a minister of profound learning, and perhaps the most thorough church historian within the limits of that church.

The Methodists are served by Rev. Mr. Jewell and Rev. Mr. B. Chapman. The first named is a preacher of fine pulpit abilities, and then his agreeable manner, his earnest zeal, render him popular with all classes. His colleague, Rev. Mr. Chapman, is fresh from the University of Alabama. He began preaching when only about thirteen years of age—he is now about twenty-one. He went through the war, serving for a year in the Washington Artillery, and then as chaplain to the twenty sixth regiment of the Mississippi infantry. His scholastic attainments are equaled by very few of his age; and as a pulpit orator he must soon, if faithful, take rank with the first in the land.

The Baptists are served by the venerable Father Maguire, now far advanced in life—for a great many years identified with the church in this country. His zeal is not lessened by the weight of years, nor is his usefulness in any degree diminished. The Presbyterians have no regular minister, I think, but have religious services occasionally.

One mile north of Monroe, and on the opposite bank of the river, (the west,) is Trenton, the great cotton port of north Louisiana. There is, perhaps, not a point in all the South, of no greater population, where so much business is transacted. There is only one street to the town, and that is not a very long one, but is compactly built up into large stores, much larger than you find anywhere outside of a great city. In the shipping season, I am told, this street is perpetually blocked up with wagons, carts and drays. The parishes of Union, Claiborne and Jackson ship cotton from and trade at this point. Much of the trade from Morehouse and Ouachita has been recently diverted from Monroe to Trenton. The merchants here are far-seeing, enterprising men, and they pour out their money as free as the air upon every project that promises to increase the prosperity of the place. Some of these merchants have immense capital, and rival your Carondelet street cotton buyers in the extent of their ventures in the same "staple." When you look in upon Trenton, as you some day may do, if you want a dinner, breakfast or supper such as you will hardly find elsewhere, just claim the hospitalities of Sam. White, of the "White House" Not that White House over which the unimpeachable "Andy" presides, but the Trenton White House—one of the very best hotels in the length of the land.

Going north from Trenton you enter a hilly, broken region of country and a dense growth of yellow pine. Much of the land is poor and sandy, but occasionally you see a farm of good clay soil with a luxuriant growth of corn and cotton. As I passed up (June 30) there was a great uneasiness occasioned by a drought, which had then been continued for four weeks.

The corn was twisted and stunted, and I felt that the "staff of life" must utterly fail in this region without speedy and copious rains. Another week has gone by, and still the heavens withhold the rain, and at the point from which I write (Union parish, thirty miles north of Monroe and Trenton) the drought is very severely felt. The corn must fail entirely unless the rains come within a week. This is now July 2d; perhaps the glorious fourth, among its other glories, may bring us a glorious rain.

I hear of nothing very encouraging in the churches through the counties of Louisiana over which I have passed. Everything is at a stand-still save and except the Sabbath school interest. This seems to have greatly enlisted the people of Union parish, and in town and country schools have been recently organized, and are being conducted with great success. This may be hailed as a promise of good things in a not distant future.

The people are impoverished and crushed down under an accumulated weight of disasters, providential and political, or rather fanatical, but "hope, the charmer, lingers still behind." "Cast down but not destroyed, persecuted but not forsaken," they struggle on. May they soon see the dawning of a brighter day.

PILGRIM.

COMMODORE M. F. MAURY.

A Virginia paper says: It will be gratifying, not only to the friends of science, but to the entire people of Virginia, to learn that this distinguished naturalist is soon to return to this State, and that he has been appointed to superintend the Physical Survey of Virginia by the Board of the Military Institute.—General F. H. Smith, in his report to the Board of Visitors, at their late meeting, announced his appointment to this important service in the following terms:

'I have the pleasure to announce to the Board of Visitors that Commodore M. F. Maury, LL. D., has signified to me his acceptance of the chair in the Department of Physical Science, recently tendered to him by the board. He is expected to sail from England on the 1st of July, and will be prepared to enter upon his duties soon after his arrival.

'Under the instructions of the Board of Visitors, Commodore Maury has been placed in charge of the Physical Survey of Virginia, as proposed in its last annual report, with the view of preparing a complete physical history of the State, to be accompanied by an accurate geographical map. Such a work would embrace the entire physical geography of Virginia; its minerals and ores; its earths and soils; its forests and plants; its animals, fisheries and oyster beds; its water power and agricultural products; its climatic and meteorological phenomena.

'It may be confidently stated that Commodore Maury will bring into the work a larger experience than can be found in any officer in this country. The organizer, and for many years the superintendent, of the National Observatory at Washington, his fertile genius has made his name illustrious by his wonderful discoveries in the winds and currents of the ocean. Collating the logs of the merchantmen as they traversed the ocean, he constructed those wonderful charts and sailing directions, which are now used by every maritime nation, and which have contributed so much to the trade and commerce of the world. Before these charts were known the average passage to California was one hundred and eighty-three days, and the round trip from England to Australia took two hundred and fifty days. Now, fifty days are saved in the first, and one hundred days in the second; so that at a meeting of the British Association in London, in 1853, Earl Harrowby, the president, estimated the saving to British commerce by these charts to be equivalent to the annual sum of £2,000,000; while Hunt's American Merchants' Magazine for 1854 made the estimate £500,000 as annually saved to the United States.

'To these valuable contributions to the cause of physical research, Commodore Maury subsequently added the demonstrative proof of the existence of a telegraphic plateau between the coast of Ireland and the shores of New Foundland, on the bed of which a cable might rest in safety and repose, for the transmission of the electric current; thus leading the way to the successful establishment of the ocean telegraph between England and America.'

STARTLING STATISTICS.—Commissioner Wells states, in his Internal Revenue Report for 1867, that the aggregate amount of sales for the year, as returned by the licensed retail liquor dealers in the United States, reached the enormous sum of one thousand four hundred and eighty-seven millions of dollars. Remembering, too, how largely this retail traffic is carried on by unlicensed dealers, and in low and vile places, it is probable that nearly or quite as much was sold without any returns being made.

BRICK CLAY.—Pure brick clay, after being submitted to the action of the frost, is said to be one of the best materials for the compost heap, and for top dressing is better than leaf mold or sod. Its excellence consists in its absorbent power, by which it takes up and retains for a long time all the enriching qualities of the compost heap.

A thin coating of this clay, fresh from the bank, spread on the grass in the fall, is said to be almost equal, in its effect, to that of a coating of well rotted manure, especially on a light soil.—Ex.

JUNIUS.

What manner of man was Junius, so far as can be ascertained from his letters, public and private? What manner of man was Francis, judged by his writings and speeches, his connections and his life? These are the points on which it is necessary to come to some sort of understanding at starting.

The language of Junius is uniformly that of a man of rank and fortune, filling an independent and influential position in society. This is particularly discernible in his private letters. He must have had ready and constant access to the best sources of information, official, social and political. He must have been a man of distinguished ability and conscious superiority; so distinguished indeed, and so conscious, that it is difficult to imagine him hiding his light under a bushel, and never attracting notice by a spark. He must have had ample leisure, for when charged by Horne Tooke with writing under a variety of signatures, he admits the charge, and asks: "Is there no merit in dedicating my life to the information of my fellow subjects? What public question have I declined? What villain have I spared? Is there no labor in the composition of these letters? Mr Horne, I fear, is partial to me, and measures the facility of my writings by the fluency of his own." These writings founded a style, the traces of which are discernible in English literature to this hour, and they bear internal evidence of the amount of time labor bestowed upon them.

Francis was a man of good education, who, by diligent study early in life, may be supposed to have acquired the knowledge and scholarship needed for the compositions in question. He also, for two short periods, held appointments which brought him in contact with official men of eminence, but these led to nothing, and in the twenty-third year of his age (December, 1762) he dropped into the position of first clerk in the war office, which he retained till after the conclusion of the Junius letters, 1772. He had no private fortune; he was always dependent upon patronage or place, and he is constantly looking to India or America as a last resort. When about twenty-two he made an imprudent marriage which (no unusual consequence) lowered his society and led him to exchange habits of study for habits of dissipation. He was addicted to high play at whist, and he occasionally speculated in the funds, till stopped by a loss of six hundred pounds, in 1770. He was regarded as the ablest of the subordinates at his office; and in the middle of the Junius correspondence he complains of being "almost overwhelmed with official business." The manner in which he employed his spare time and holidays may be collected from his private letters, e. g.:

"JANUARY 4, 1769.—I am just returned from spending a riotous fortnight at Bath. Gravier and two others filled a post-coach, which was dragged with no small velocity by four horses. We traveled like gentlemen and lived like rakes."

"JANUARY 30, 1771.—Tilman dined with me yesterday, and swallowed a moiety of two bottles of claret. * * * * We lead a jolly kind of life. This night to a concert; on Thursday to a ridotto; on Saturday the opera; and on Tuesday following a grand private ball at the London Tavern."

"JULY 26, 1771.—To-morrow, Godfrey, Tilman, another gent. and I set out upon a tour through Derbyshire, and propose to reach Manchester. I wish you were of the party."

They did not return till the 13th of August, the day on which appeared the celebrated reply of Junius to Horne's letter of the 31st July. This reply, therefore, must have been composed and sent during the tour. On the 31st July, the day when Horne's letter appeared, Francis writes from Derby to his wife: "The Duchess of Bedford would not let us see Wooburn Abbey, which we all greatly regret." There are frequent references in the correspondence to Junius, of whom Francis speaks carelessly and naturally; and the leading events of the day are mentioned in the same manner. There is not the slightest indication of newspaper writing or literary occupation of any sort; and the interest which he takes in politics is of a narrow and limited kind, arising either from speculations in the funds, the chance of an increase of official fees by war, or the hope of advancement through Calcraft in case of Lord Chatham's return to power. The part assigned him by Mr. Merivalo in the combination against the ministry, in 1770, is subordinate and almost humiliating. He only approached the great man through Calcraft. His business was to collect material for Calcraft; to stimulate him by use of the plentiful resources of his own wit, courage and information; to act, in short, as the jackal's provider, who was himself providing for the lion; and was this the haughty, terrible and dreaded Junius in the lurid splendor of his meridian? When we hear of him in this guise, not even admitted to the antechambers of the great, we are reminded of a scene in "The Rehearsal:"

"The army's at the door, and, in disguise, Desires a word with both your majesties."

Francis never had wit at any time; neither wit nor courage was required or displayed in collecting materials for Calcraft, and these materials appear to have been scanty and common-place. Whilst describing Francis, Mr. Merivale had Junius in his mind. So had the writers who had drawn pictures of Francis as an ardent, eager political student, bursting with indignation at the degradation of his country, and devoting days and nights to rouse the dormant energies of his countrymen.

Early in 1771 Francis found that there was little to be expected from politics. In the "Autobiography" he says: "The prospect on every side was gloomy and dispiriting. From that time I never ceased to form projects for quitting the war office. India was the only quarter where it was possible to make a fortune, and this way all my thoughts were directed." According to every plain, common sense interpretation of words and actions, what follows is intelligible enough. When a move took place in the war office, he declined the offer which "my Lord Barrington was so good as to make me with many obliging and friendly expressions," and resigned his clerkship. There is an interval of about a year and a half between his retirement and his Indian appointment, for which he was mainly indebted to Lord Barrington. He was about six months abroad, and the literary performance which he meditated on his return (December, 1772) was not exactly of a nature to call out the powers or satisfy the aspirations of Junius.

"The hopes of employment were yet distant and uncertain. The interval was to be amused, and if possible with credit. Monsieur de Pinto's "Essay on Circulation" had fallen into my hands abroad. I thought I might reap some benefit from giving a translation of it, with notes to the public. I went over to the Hague, in May, (1773,) to consult the author, who received me with transports of joy."

The completion of this work was interrupted by his Indian appointment, June, 1773. The date and circumstances are utterly inconsistent with the hypothesis, adopted by Lord Campbell and favored by Mr. Merivale, that the appointment was the price of silence. He left England for India in March, 1774. The last of the public letters under the signature of Junius appeared on January 21, 1772. The last private letter Woodfall received from the writer is dated January 9, 1773.

There is literally nothing in the life or correspondence of Francis to connect him with Junius during the Junian period; and this is the period to which we must mainly look for indications of identity in character, opinions, taste, language, knowledge and capacity. In the case of all other candidates, the practice has been to ascertain how far their political creed, their interests, or their likings and dislikings, agreed with Junius; and a single marked contradiction or discrepancy has repeatedly been held fatal to a claim. The Franciscan theory bristles with contradictions and discrepancies. They are cumulative, whatever (what Mr. Merivale calls) the convergent lines may be. We will specify a few.

Francis had every reason to be kindly disposed to Wood, Welbore Ellis, Lord Egremont, Lord Barrington and Calcraft. He was bound to them, not only by the common ties of gratitude, but by that species of it, the most binding of any, which has been defined a lively sense of favors to come. To weaken their influence was to destroy his own prospects. Yet, if he was Junius, he systematically assailed them all; wrote the most damaging things of Calcraft at the very moment when they were eagerly co-operating, and most rancorously abused Lord Barrington when that nobleman was the mainstay of his fortunes, the most steadfast of his patrons, and the kindest of his friends.

Now take the amities and antipathies. One of the few political men of note supposed to be favored by Junius was the first Lord Holland; and Lord Macaulay includes the strong tie between them amongst his five marks of stigmata. It is clear from the "Autobiography" that, dating from 1763, Francis "heartily concurred" with his father in regarding Lord Holland as a "scoundrel" who had ill-treated them.

Junius, waiving his early objections to the private character of Wilkes, adopts his cause warmly, engages in a long confidential correspondence with him, consults him about the collected edition of the "letters," and takes a particular interest in his paper war with Horne Tooke. Francis never speaks otherwise than slightingly of Wilkes, and in reference to their paper war writes to his friend Braggs, at Gibraltar:

"Wilkes and Horne have brought their villainy and folly before the public."—January 29, 1771.

"Wilkes and Horne are at open war in the newspapers. Nothing can be more contemptible, in my own opinion, nor less interesting, than the whole of their correspondence. Horne's dislikes and rancor are wretched beyond all description. The other rogue stands his ground." May 30, 1771.

There were no two men to whom Junius would have been more unlikely to refer spontaneously than Sir William Draper, whom he had stung to madness, and Sir John Burgoyne, whom he had described (14th February, 1770) as "sitting down, for the remainder of his life, infamous and contented." On December 11, 1787, Francis, being put on his defence in the House of Commons for having been one of the managers of the impeachment of Hastings, stated that the persons whom he had consulted as the best judges of points of honor were Sir William Draper and Sir John Burgoyne. Draper was dead, but Burgoyne rose and handsomely responded to the appeal; which, if Francis was Junius, is the strongest example of gratuitous folly and brazen impudence on record. Why aggravate the consequences of a discovery which was always on the cards? The worst men do not accumulate baseness on baseness, or infamy on infamy, out of mere wantonness; and there is no ground for ranking Junius amongst the worst men; no ground for distrusting his solemn avowal in a private letter to Woodfall: "After long experience of the world, I affirm before God I never knew a rogue who was not unhappy." His tone and conduct to Woodfall are uniformly kind, generous and considerate. Nor was he habitually rancorous. He readily repairs the injustice of which he had been guilty to Vaughan; and in the private letter, number eleven, he writes: "The only thing that hinders my pushing the subject of my last letter is really the fear of ruining that poor devil Gansel, and those other blockheads."

Again, the unbroken attachment professed by Francis to the person and principles of Lord Chatham, to whom he was acting as amanuensis in 1761, and as lion's provider under Calcraft in 1770, is utterly irreconcilable with several passages of Junius, especially with the guarded panegyric, implying disagreement, of August 13, 1771.

Here, therefore, (including the misstatement of the law point,) are no less than eleven discrepancies or contradictions, without a title of affirmative evidence to set against them. Nor has any one attempted to account, on the Franciscan hypothesis, for the persistent hostility, obviously envenomed by intimate personal knowledge, displayed by Junius toward the king, the princess dowager, the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Grafton and many other persons of distinction, with whom a clerk in the war office, living like Francis, had nothing in common.—London Quarterly Review.

POWER OF A GROWING TREE.—Wolton Hall, England, had at one time its own corn mill, and when that inconvenient necessity no longer existed, the mill-stone was laid by in an orchard and forgotten. The diameter of this circular stone measured five feet and a half, while its depth averaged seven inches throughout; its centre hole had a diameter of eleven inches. By mere accident some bird or squirrel had dropped the fruit of the filbert tree through the hole on the earth; and in 1812 the seeding was seen rising up through that unwonted channel. As its trunk gradually grew through this aperture and increased, its power to raise the ponderous mass of stone was speculated upon by many. Would the filbert tree die in the attempt? Would it burst the mill-stone or would it lift it? In the end the little filbert tree lifted the mill-stone, and in 1863 wore it like a cerinoline about its trunk; and Mr. Waterton used to sit upon it under the branching shade.

DEVELOPMENT OF SOUTHERN COAL FIELDS.—The coal fields of Alabama are attracting attention. They are three in number: the Coosa river district, covering about 2,000 square miles; the Cahaba river district, covering about 5,000 square miles; and the Warrior river district, which is said to embrace no less than 50,000 square miles. The quality of the coal produced from the first two is very fine; the third is rather inferior, and less accessible. Very little has hitherto been done in developing these districts.

IN three years a man in the Isle of Man raised seven bushels of barley from a single grain.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE.

SHARON, July 20, 1868.

To the Mississippi Conference and Public;

The commencement of Sharon Female College, on the 16th instant, was creditable to the institution and the conference. During the unprecedented severity of the times it has maintained itself well, with uninterrupted recitations in all its branches of study. The health of the school and of the town and neighborhood was never better.

The several classes stood a very good examination. The junior class acquitted itself well in moral and mental philosophy, mathematics, chemistry and geometry. The music class, under the tuition of Miss Cross, showed excellent proficiency.

Professor Hunnicutt is in every way well qualified for the head of such an institution, and will open the next session in the last week in September next, and, it is hoped, with a liberal patronage. The institution is well-deserving at the hands of the conference and the public.

Sharon is seven miles from Canton, and therefore near enough to the railroad to have its advantages, and far enough off to be free from its many disadvantages. I have never known a more quiet, peaceable, moral, church-going community, and I know of no place more healthy.

The boarding department of the college will be managed well. I have no doubt it will be found a first-class boarding school, and most all reasonable expectations.

R. ABBEY,
In behalf of Visiting Committee.

THE Rev. J. W. Mathis writes from Aberdeen, Mississippi, July 14, and again July 18, that the health of Bishop Paine does not improve, but rather grows worse—that is, he becomes weaker from day to day. He is almost as helpless as an infant. His physicians have little or no hope of his recovery, and his other friends have almost despaired. He may live some time—he may die very soon. This intelligence is sad beyond words to express it. Let the entire church pray to the Father in Heaven that our beloved bishop may be divinely sustained in his afflictions.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE CLOSET.

How few have a place where the soul can meet God without disturbance. Rich men build large houses with many convenient and roomy chambers, all fully finished and furnished for sleeping, eating or sitting for company, for children, for the servants—elegant and luxurious apartments; but in all there may be not one for "the Master." "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet; when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret." Alas, there is no spot in the whole house set apart for prayer! Between company, the children and the servants, it is only in the dead hour of night that perfect quiet reigns, but at all other times the whole house cannot furnish one room where prayer can be made, or the Scriptures be read secure from interruption. The poor, too, suffer this privation,—crowded in chambers where there is scarcely room to move, and none to spare. They find within God's curtains alone their only moments for solitary thought—when the night, softly descending, shuts man in from every eye but one.

And yet it is in the closet, those places and hours of prayer, where the great work of life is to be done. Frequent, uninterrupted communion with the Father of our spirit is the employment to which all else should be tributary, and all labor of the field, of the office, of the workshop, is to the end that time may be gained for this refreshing entertainment of the soul. All who have been eminent in the favor of God have been noted for much private prayer. The Saviour, who set every good example, and taught by action, enfolded himself in the double solitude of the night and the mountain, and "continued" in prayer for many hours. The prophet Daniel, amid high concerns of state, always kept one window open toward Jerusalem, and poured his soul out in that direction "three times a day." Luther prayed in proportion to the amount of work on hand; the more work the more prayer.

The providence of God has frequently secured privacy for his people by their exile or imprisonment. And the world is much indebted to the sublime solitudes of the Midian desert, of the Isle of Patmos, and of "Arabia," for the grand inspired compositions of Moses, of St. John and St. Paul, as well as to the prisons that furnished to the Reformer and to Bunyan ample leisure for their great writings. Sometimes protracted sickness, or severe bereavements by pain and anguish, turn the world into a desert, and, as it were, transport us in spirit to solitudes where the soul can think of nought but God and its own wants. The bleak, shrubless black mountains of Horeb were necessary to draw off the wandering imagination of Israel from its ideal haunts to the contemplation of the true God. Amid a congealed heaving ocean of naked rock his voice might be heard, his light seen. Long, too, must needs be the way, and sterile the landscape, to wean man from the earthly; and then often only at the end of the earthly journey, when his soul is driven into the lovely heights of the dark mountain, does he see for the first time the glory of his Lord. We all die upon solitary peaks; happy the soul that from the last point of earth can discern heaven.

This secret life with God is but the growth of that attraction which constitutes the strength and joy of the saints in light: "There is one Lord;" truly so, when to him, who bought them, all are knit. It is the unanimity of a common love that makes the "innumerable assembly" possible, that constitutes the law and government of heaven. It is the citizenship of the City of God which we perfect on earth in the hours of the closet. Here the soul is learning to be in company; for the final home of the good is thronged with life in its purest, noblest forms. The fear of being alone with God must be changed into the desire to be alone with him; then shall we be fit for Paradise—then only. And to the child of God there is no pleasure comparable to that which he experiences while conversing with God in prayer. He looks forward to the place and to the hour appointed with delightful anticipation, as Adam, ere he fell, counted the moments until God's evening voice should be heard in the walks of Eden; and how often has the closet of the good man proved to be an Eden restored! Such was the room where Fletcher prayed, the house-top of Simon in Joppa, the heights of Carmel, or the banks of the Ulai. O, reader, if you are about to build a house, do not forget to have in the design a room for private prayer; or if you live by a forest, let the shaft of the tallest tree guide thine eye and heart daily, kneeling at its base; or let the shadow of thy field fill thee with holy meditation, when at eventide it reflects the lingering glories of descending day.

NEW BOOKS.

THE SERVANTS OF THE STOMACH, by Jean Mace; reprinted from an English translation. Harper & Bros. New York: 1868. Pp. 311, 12mo. This is one of the "Series of Letters to a Child on the Life of Man and Animals," by the author. The writer possesses, in an eminent degree, the scientific knowledge and the tact requisite to combine instruction with amusement. He awakens the greatest interest in young readers to know the hidden wonders of the phenomena of life, and then discloses to them, from the depths of science, the processes of motion, nutrition and sensation, in a style united to the apprehension of a boy or girl. We welcome every book on physiology or anatomy within the comprehension of children. They receive with avidity any information in regard to their own powers, and a boy is almost as curious about what is going on in his stomach as he is about the "insides" of a watch. We have seen eyes sparkle at the author's announcement of the mysteries of the duodenum. And then the intelligence of the pylorus in letting nothing get out of the stomach that should stay in—it surpassed belief! These books are far better to interest young people than the miserable offspring of fancy that draws out imaginary adventures of fiery youths and fair maidens, as uniform and endless as the fortunes of Spencer's knights. If "nature abhors a vacuum," with what horror must she regard a garret full of old novels! Yet we have seen young persons whose heads contained several garrets full of exhausted trash—and nothing else.

M. Mace has come to the rescue in another work of the same kind as the above.

THE HISTORY OF A MOUTHFUL OF BREAD, translated from the French by Mrs. Alfred Gatty. Harper & Bros. New York: 1868. This is from the eighth French edition, and fully displays the superiority of the French in sprightly statement, happy art of relieving dry fact with a crystalline coating. Children take in science as easily as gum drops, when gotten up in this French style. Physiology and anatomy used to be studied only in a doctor's shop, where a long box stood upright in one corner, and several maps of the muscular and the nervous man were distributed about its walls. In the long box was the mortal skeleton of a man that was hung, like as not, for piracy! There was a wire, which came down through the centre of the dangling bones, which you had only to pull, and his jaws snapped frightfully together. Of course, it took a grown-up person to study to advantage with these unearthly surroundings; young people never ventured so far, excepting one pull and a scamper. Now they are brought face to face with all the bones by the genius of a smiling lecturer. He walks attended by a group of lads and lassies, and in a sweet atmosphere plucks truth for them, which has more of the fragrance of flowers than "anatomies." The type, press-work, paper and binding of these books are all that can be desired. Both works are for sale by George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

THE POPE'S ALLOCUTION.

The full text of this papal address will be found below. Its tone revives the memory of Hildebrand; not quite so potent as when he said: "In the name of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, I depose from imperial and royal administration King Henry, son of Henry, some time emperor, who too boldly laid hands on thy church," etc., for since then times have greatly changed. The present German prince does not lie quite at the mercy of the august "vicar of God," as his ancestor did; and the people of Austria will doubtless retain their legislative supremacy over their own territory, despite the triple crown of the Italian pontiff. But it is quite a revival of the old spirit of the popes, which out of so much decay ventures to "declare those decrees null and powerless in themselves and in their effect, both as regards the present and the future." It seems rather late in the day for the prince of a petty Roman domain to be interfering in the affairs of the government of Austria, by inciting its citizens to disregard its laws. The assertion of political supremacy is not on so grand a scale, but as distinct in this "allocution" as it was in the three bulls of Pius V, Gregory XIII and Sixtus V, which declare "the aforesaid Elizabeth to be a heretic," etc., * * * and "deprived of her pretended title to the kingdom aforesaid, and of all dominion, dignity and privilege whatever."

One is curious to know what has caused so serious a difference between Austria and Rome. Austria has for a long period propped the fortunes of the pope, propped them with bayonets—held him up in the chariot all day; though wounded sorely, fought the battle with a bold front; but now that the sun is going down—the Syrians evidently too many for them both—and blood is running out of the chariot, he leaves the ghostly pontiff to his fate, and escapes for his life. Francis Joseph was defeated at Sadowa because his people were not heartily with him. They were not with him because he had sold himself and them to Rome. By one of those treaties with the pope, called a concordat, he consented to give to the Roman priesthood supreme control over the education of the State, the exclusive right to control and celebrate marriage, to bury the dead and to dispense the gospel. The priests carried everything with a high hand, and a tyranny of the most oppressive kind ever devised by man asserted itself in every household, dictating who should and who should not marry, exacting large sums for the bare permission, so much that tens of thousands lived together as man and wife without marriage, because unable to comply with onerous conditions. No other form of religious service was tolerated but the Catholic—no, not a moment. Protestants could not have a decent sepulture, and all children were forced into the training rooms of the Jesuits. The uniformity of death is the highest achievement of all tyrannies, whether civil or ecclesiastical. That horrible order, which at some time has been expelled from every country but our own, brooded over the land until the glory of Maria Theresa threatened to go out, and Austria sank in decrepitude from the highest position among States to a third-rate power. The king is still a strong Catholic, but his subjects have given him to understand that the first condition of being delivered from his political foes is, deliverance for themselves and their children from the more dreaded presence of the exacting, insatiable and unscrupulous order of Loyola. There was no escaping the alternative; it was either Austria or the priests; one or the other had to go down. The Austrian Reichsrath has cut the concordat and permitted those terrible vampires to suck blood somewhere else. Hence the "allocution."

Our people will probably be surprised at the declaration of the Holy Father, that it is "in virtue of the care of all the churches entrusted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ" that he "reproves and condemns those abominable laws sanctioned by the Austrian government," which "decree that the whole supervision of education, literature and science, as also the inspection of schools appertaining to the State;" which "decrees that religious teaching in the public schools must be placed in the hands of the members of each secret confession; that any religious society may open private or special schools for the youth of its faith;" which binds "Catholics to allow the bodies of heretics to be buried in their church-yard if they have not one of their own." This is a true successor of the pope's, for he comes down to us with all the intolerance of Pope Boniface the VIII, who decreed: "We declare, say, define, pronounce it to be necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman pontiff."

Those who are disposed to apologize for this infallible utterance of Pio Nino need not trouble themselves. There is in it a confused roar of furious intent; but as the times go, it is a toothless document. Once it would have disturbed the slumbers of half the world, but now it may furnish all Europe with a good newspaper article—nothing more. Poor old man! Railways, telegraphs, lightning presses and polyglot Bibles will yet prove his death. His State prison and his political prison, and the prison of the inquisition at Rome, are already full. What more does he want? If he has any raw beans to spare let him graciously allow an ounce apiece more to those starving wretches—as the "vicar of God" ought to do.

THE PAPAL ALLOCUTION.

The following is a translation of the papal allocution delivered in the secret consistory, held on the 22d of June last:

"VENERABLE BRETHREN: We should never have imagined that, after the convention agreed to nearly thirteen years ago between us and the Emperor and Apostolic King of Austria, to the great joy of all well-minded men, we should be obliged to lament upon the miseries and serious misfortunes which, by the machinations of evil-disposed men, now afflict and annoy in a deplorable manner the Catholic church in the empire of Austria. In fact, the enemies of our divine religion have been unceasing in their efforts to destroy the said convention, and to do the greatest harm to the church, to us, and to this apostolic see. On the 21st of December last the Austrian government passed an odious law to be carried out and strictly observed in every district of the empire, even in those districts where the Catholic religion exclusively prevails. That law establishes free liberty for all opinions—liberty of the press, of all faith, and no matter what confession or doctrine; it grants to the members of every confession the right of establishing public schools and colleges, and members of every confession are allowed to be admitted on the same footing with the sanction of the State. Although we felt great grief on being informed of the fact, and wished to raise our voice against it, we nevertheless gave proof of forbearance, and we deemed it advisable then to keep silent, chiefly supported by the hope that the Austrian government, lending a docile ear to the just complaints of our venerable brethren, (the holy prelates of Austria,) would return to more wholesome ideas and adopt a sounder determination. But our hopes have been frustrated. In fact, the same government, on the 25th of May of this present year, issued another law which compels all the subjects, even the Catholic ones of the empire, deciding that sons born of a mixed marriage must follow the religion of the father, and the daughters that of the mother; and that under seven years of age they must follow in the stray path of their parents from the true faith. Moreover, the same law suppresses entirely the validity of the promises which the Catholic church, with reason and with the greatest justice, exacts and prescribes absolutely before the celebration of mixed marriages. It makes apostasy itself a civil law, both as regards the Catholic religion and the Christian religion generally; it suppresses all authority of the church over cemeteries, and Catholics are bound to allow the bodies of heretics to be buried in their church yard if they have not any of their own. Moreover, the same government, on the said 25th day of May of this present year, did not hesitate to promulgate a law on marriage which entirely cancels all the enactments agreed to in the convention already alluded to. This law restores the former Austrian laws, which are contrary to the laws of the church; it admits, and even confirms, that form of marriage, absolutely condemnable, called civil marriage, when the authority of any confession whatever refuses the celebration of the marriage on grounds which are not admitted as valid as legal by the civil authorities. By this law this same government has suppressed all the authority and jurisdiction of the church on matters relative to marriage, as also all competent ecclesiastical tribunals on the subject. It has also promulgated a law on education, which suppresses all the influence of the church over education, decreeing that the whole superior supervision of education, literature and science, as also the inspection of schools, appertains to the State, which finally decrees that religious teaching in the public schools must be placed in the hands of members of each separate confession; that any religious society may open private or special schools for the youth of its faith; that those schools shall also be subject to the supreme inspection of the State, and that the school books shall be submitted to the approval of the civil authorities; with the exception, however, of such books as are meant for religious instruction, books which must be submitted to the approval of the competent authorities of each confession. You see, consequently, venerable brethren, how necessary it is strongly to reprove and condemn those abominable laws sanctioned by the Austrian government—laws which are in flagrant contradiction with the doctrines of the Catholic religion; with its venerable rights, its authority, and its divine institution; with our power and that of the apostolic see, as also with our concordat already quoted, and with natural right itself. In virtue, then, of the care of all churches entrusted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ, we raise our voice in your most illustrious assembly; we reprove and we condemn by our apostolic authority the laws which we have enumerated, and everything, general or special, in those same laws, or in matters which refer to ecclesiastical right which has been decreed or attempted unjustly, in any manner whatsoever, by the Austrian government or its subordinates, whomsoever they may be. In virtue of this same authority which appertains to us, we declare those decrees null and powerless in themselves and in their effect, both as regards the present and the future. As regards the authors of those laws, especially those who congratulate themselves on being Catholics, and have not feared to propose, establish, approve and carry out the above laws and acts, we conjure and entreat them not to forget the censures and spiritual punishments which the ecclesiastical institutions and the decrees of the œcumenical councils inflict, as having been deserved ipso facto by the violators of the rights of the church. Meantime, we rejoice greatly in the Lord, and we give our well-deserved praise to our venerable brothers, the archbishops and bishops of the Austrian empire, who, with truly episcopal energy, have not ceased to warn their flocks of their duties boldly to defend and protect, by speech as well as writing, the cause of the church and the said concordat concluded with us. We also desire from our hearts that our venerable brothers, the archbishops and bishops of Hungary, following the example of their colleagues, will show themselves disposed to display the same zeal and the same ardor to protect the rights of the church and defend the said concordat against the attacks which are directed against it. Nevertheless, under these calamities, which in these sad times afflict the church everywhere, we do not cease, venerable brothers, with the deepest fervor and humility of heart, to pray to God that he may upset all the criminal designs of his enemies and those of his holy church, suppress their impious efforts, and, in his mercy, lead them back into the paths of justice and salvation."

THE Medical Society of Pennsylvania, at its recent meeting, resolved that, since the habit of intoxication by alcohol and opium does not seem to be materially controlled by the system of pledge-taking on the part of the people, or of punitive legislation on the part of their representatives, it is the peculiar prerogative of physicians to investigate the causes of this fearful practice, so far as they may exist in the human constitution, in professional usage, or common custom, and to recommend sanitary regulations to the legislature and the people, on the same principle that they would suggest preventatives or palliatives for any other public scourge. The society accordingly appointed a committee to report at its next meeting on the medical, social and civil aspects of intoxication by alcohol and opium, and the duty of physicians in the premises.

Mobile Conference Institutions.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY AND CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

Mr. Editor: The recent commencement occasions at these two institutions were seasons of unusual interest. The depressed condition of the country and the straitened circumstances of our people have put it out of the power of our friends to expend money for the education of their children, as heretofore, and also rendered most of them unable to redeem the pledges made to the university in better times. Under these circumstances some of us went up to the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees with no little misgiving as to the future. But upon comparing views and feelings, and eliciting the feelings of the professors and the community, our confidence and spirit took on a decidedly healthier and more buoyant tone, and we left Greensboro fully determined to live, and go through the trial of the hour. We became fully aware that we had been too modest—had not taken the requisite steps to bring the character and merits of the university before our people and the public. We made the mistake of supposing that the intelligence of both would enable them to appreciate its worth—the last thing the public can understand. There is no subject on which brag and humbuggery rise more fully to "the sublime" than on the subject of schools and colleges.

We have no intention of boasting extensively, but our professors have determined, at the request of the board, to visit different sections of our patronizing territory—show themselves, and present the claims of the university; and already the effects begin to appear.

The preparatory department is under their immediate care, thus making it the best school of the kind in the country, giving the pupils the benefit of the instruction of the same men through the whole course of their education. Under these arrangements, I hesitate not to give it as my opinion that as good an education can be obtained at the Southern University as at any other institution in the country; and in nine cases out of ten a better one than at the far-famed University of Virginia, for the simple reason that not one in ten who attend that institution can graduate, and thus get only an unsymmetrical training by graduating in two or three schools only. And then we take students through the year for less than half the expense of attending any college in Virginia.

Several of my friends, attracted by high-sounding names and vigorous puffing, sent their sons to Virginia, and the expenses in every case ran up to seven or eight hundred dollars; whereas arrangements have been made at Greensboro for board in private families, including everything, at such rates that the whole cost of the collegiate year shall not exceed two hundred and eighty dollars, and by boarding in the university boarding department the entire expense of the year will not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars. This, of course, does not include books, but everything else. Board can be had for sixteen dollars per month. The community is doing these things in order to sustain the university. Tuition is sixty dollars per term; contingent fee, five dollars. Now where can a young man procure a first rate education for anything like this sum per annum? Then the moral surroundings of the pupils are not to be lost sight of. Such is the tone of the moral and social atmospheres of the place, that not a single reprimand or even private reproof has been called for during two years. Instead of the drunken rowdyism so often marking college life, the people of Greensboro know nothing of the annoyances usual from college boys. When will Christian people and the public duly appreciate such advantages, and properly patronize such schools?

A pleasing feature in our recent meeting was the increased interest in the education of the young for the ministry. We have now one at Greensboro, and four at Summerfield, while several others have applied to know if they can be assisted. Our recent district meeting pledged this district to the support of a promising young man as long as it was deemed desirable; while at Greensboro the board of several more was pledged. We intend to have each district in the conference support at least one young man preparing for the sacred work.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE

appeared to great advantage in both departments. Though the attendance had been small through the year, the performances were of a high order. The speaking of the young men surpassed that of former years in clearness of enunciation and delivery, justness of emphasis, and propriety of gesticulation. So manifest was the improvement that I was led to inquire of Professor Massey how he had succeeded in bringing the young men forward so strikingly; and he informed me that he had accomplished it by going down to the very ground-work, and teaching them how to read, in the first place. He has a manifest talent for bringing boys out, inspiring self-respect and interest in their studies, and an ambition to succeed. I heard one of his patrons, who had tried different schools, say that he would sooner give him two hundred dollars a year to teach his son than to send him to any one else for nothing! He had succeeded in making zealous and earnest students out of several young men who had never before been interested in their studies. This is a mark of true excellence in teaching.

Prof. Vaughn is a man who would be known all through the South if he lived in Virginia. His attainments are remarkable, especially in languages. He teaches all the modern languages of Europe. His success as a teacher was clearly perceived by Bishop Wightman, as it had been long since by Dr. Garland—both of whom had daughters with him the past year. His own statement was, that he had realized more satisfactory results from teaching the past year than ever before. In short, we believe we have both schools at Summerfield as well officered as any schools in the country. That difficult achievement—reading compositions so as to be heard on commencement day—was done so as to elicit universal commendation. And withal, the expense is far less than at any other institution in the South, or North, of equal grade.

Board is only sixteen dollars per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Tuition in the literary department, including all the modern languages and Latin, sixty dollars.

In the music department, sixty dollars, and five dollars for use of instrument.

Painting in pastelle	$10 00
Painting in oil colors	50 00
Painting in water colors	50 00

Thus the whole expense of the collegiate year, exclusive of painting and books, is only two hundred and seventy-four dollars; while at all other schools of similar grade the expense will run up from three hundred and fifty to seven hundred dollars.

We thus furnish the best schools, at the cheapest expense, that can be had in the country.

J. Hamilton.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

Dear Brethren—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

W. F. Glenn
C. Jones.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting for the Jacksonville District, Montgomery Conference, will be held at Oxford, commencing on Friday morning, August 28th. The pastors on the several works will please come prepared to make the usual reports. Elected delegates and all official members are expected to attend. Ample accommodations will be provided for all.

L. M. Wilson, P. E.

DISTRICT MEETING.

Bishop William M. Wightman, D. D., L. L. D., will hold a District Meeting for the Wetumpka District, Montgomery Conference, at Tallassee, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., on Thursday, August 13, 1868. Preachers and delegates are urged to be present with full reports at the opening exercises. Bishop Andrew, D. D., is expected to be present. Rev. S. A. Pilley will preach the introductory sermon on Thursday night. Ample accommodations for all.

D. M. Hudson, P. E.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability. july25 W. H. N. MAGRUDER.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

Messrs. Joseph Burnett & Co.:—I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely.—The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Your's, very truly, SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

East Middleboro', Mass., June 9, '64.

Messrs. Burnett & Co.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the pains, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than former'y. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair. With respect, WM. S. EDDY.

Burnett's Cocoaine is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood. Instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and Immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. Helmbold.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

FLOWERS.

They spring unnoticed and unheeded,
Mid rocky wilds they bloom;
They flourish 'mid the desert bleak,
They deck the silent tomb.
They cheer the peasant's lowly cot,
Adorn the monarch's hall;
They fill each quiet shady spot—
O, who can tell them all!

Some o'er the mountains rugged hang
Their blossoms bright and fair,
And there in joyful beauty spring,
Fanned by the fragrant air.
Some 'neath the ocean's rolling wave
In silent grandeur grow,
Nor heed the storm which o'er them rave
But still in beauty blow.

Some where the eagle builds her nest,
Where man has never trod,—
Where e'en the clouds dare not rest
Upon the trembling sod—
Yes, there, e'en there, wild flowers grow
In richest dress arrayed,
And o'er the clustering eaglets throw
Their light and graceful shade.

Mid mountains of perpetual snow,
By icy girdles bound,
Some, rendered doubly beauteous, glow,
And deck the frozen ground.
And 'mid cold winter's angry storm
The snow-drop rears its head,
And shows its pure, unspotted form
When other flowers have fled.

Some on the breezes of the night
Their grateful odors send;
While others, children of the light,
To-day their perfume lend.
Some bloom beneath the torrid zone,
'Neath India's sultry skies;
Mid Iceland's mountains, chill and lone,
The forms of others rise.

The stately fern, the golden broom,
The lily, tall and fair—
All these in rich succession bloom
And scent the summer air.
In secret dell, by murm'ring rill—
In gardens bright and gay—
Within the valley—on the hill—
Flowers cheer our toilsome way!

Flowers image forth the boundless love
That bears his children all,
Which ever droppeth from above
Upon the great and small;
Each blossom that adorns our path,
So joyful and so fair,
Is but a drop of love divine
That fell and flourished there.

TINY DAVY.

At ten years of age Davy was scarcely taller than a flour barrel, and it was decided that he would never be able to look over that familiar article. A tiny, delicate waif, he seemed more like some pretty flower that had blown, by chance, in a kitchen garden, without any one to tend and nurture it according to its needs; for Davy's home was an almshouse, his toys the chips and blocks and rusty nails that collected in the yard from time to time, his playmates the rough ragamuffins who slept under the same roof as himself—hardy little fellows, who had inherited quick tempers and poverty in common with Davy, but to whom nature had added the further endowment of rosy cheeks and healthy frames she had denied to him. But, after all, Davy had his aspirations, his miniature day-dreams, his castles in the air. He aspired to be a man—to be a tall man, and wear a coat like the overseer's, and go wherever he pleased, and do as he liked, and read without spelling his words, like the clergymen who visited the almshouse, and to earn his own living. Wasn't it odd that he should have set his heart on this? Poor Davy! He really believed there could come a day when all the benefits of manhood should be his own; when he would leave the gloomy almshouse and its uncouth inmates, all but old Aunt Nancy—Aunt Nancy, who was everybody's aunt, perhaps because she had never been anybody's; who tucked him up on cold winter nights, and sung to him with her quavering voice, and cosseted him as well as her slender means would allow. He used to stroke her gray hair, and say: 'Dear Aunt Nancy, when I'm a man I will buy you a red gown and a rocking-chair; and you shall live in my house, and keep your myrtle-tree in the sunny windows; and your pussy shall sleep all day before the fire, and nobody shall tread on its tail—when I'm a man.'

And so Davy used to plan about being a man, till one day when the overseer set the other boys to piling wood in the yard. Davy was seldom given any such tasks, because he was such an infant; so he built mud forts, while the others worked away at the wood, some of them secretly envying the little engineer.

'Why don't Davy pile wood?' asked one, at length.

'Don't you see? Because he's too little,' was the reply.

'No, I'm not too little,' said Davy, who really seemed to sleep with one ear open, and eagerly resented being called little; so he caught at the sticks, almost as long as himself, and tugged and pulled and piled them with a will, till his hands were torn and his strength exhausted. Then he sat down on a log, and listened to the boys, as they talked of what they should do when they grew up—for they all seemed infected with the desire of 'growing up.'

One lazy little fellow fancied he would be a shoemaker, 'because he sits all day on a bench, and pegs away like a clock.'

'And that's awl!' put in the would-be wit.

'I am going to be a farmer, and have lots of apple trees,' remarked another, who was uncomfortably fond of apples; since he seldom got them.

'And I'll be a soldier, and have a gun that will go bang!' continued another.

'Humph!' rejoined a fourth, 'I won't be any of those things; I'll be a tailor—I will—and have as many new coats as I like.'

'Well, I mean to be like Mr. Blue; I heard some one say he was the richest man in town, and a banker; so I'm going to be a banker!' declared one more ambitious than his neighbors.

'A banker!' they all sang out, opening their eyes and mouths at the same time; 'what's that?'

'I don't know,' answered the young banker, rather brought to bay; 'but that's no matter. O, he takes money out of a bank!'

'Well,' said Davy, rising, and thrusting his hands into his empty pockets, 'I'm going to be a man to put money into the bank.'

'Pooh,' returned the tailor, 'you won't ever be a man; you're nothing but a dwarf.'

'Never be a man! Shan't I?' Davy asked of the others, all white and trembling at the idea.

'Keep still—can't you?' said the little shoemaker to the tailor; 'don't you know better than to twit a fellow? If he doesn't grow to be a man, he won't have to do a man's work—will he?'

'But that's what I want to do when I grow up.'

'You won't ever grow up, I tell you,' persisted the wicked tailor. 'You will never be anything but a baby, and by and by you'll be taken round for a show. There!'

Davy's eyes glowed like sparks, he shook like a leaf, doubled up his tiny fists, and declared war.

'Pooh!' said the tailor again, as as if he were blowing a feather, 'I am not going to fight you; I should knock you into a cocked-hat and cane in a minute.'

This was too great a blow to Davy's dignity, and he fled, and hid himself in a dim passage-way, where his wrath could dissolve into tears, and he take heart to disbelieve his mischance. While the great sobs tore their way up, as if they would bear his little life away with them, some one came along the passage and laid a gentle hand on Davy. 'Crying? What's the matter with my little man?' It was the clergyman, on his semi-weekly visit at the almshouse.

'I'm not a man. I never shall be a man,' cried Davy, forgetting all his awe of the great man; 'he said I shouldn't. I'm a dwarf, and he can knock me into a cocked hat and cane. O, I hate him—I do!'

'I had much rather be a dwarf than hate any one, Davy,' Mr. Kirk answered him.

'You—you would? Isn't it, then, so bad to be a dwarf?'

'Not so bad as to hate; not bad at all, only a little inconvenient.'

'But I don't know, sir; what do you mean?' sobbed Davy; 'I shall always be a little boy?'

'We all have a soul, you know, as well as a body,' began the good clergyman.

'O, yes, I feel it here!' said Davy, pressing a hand on his breast.

'Well, then, did you feel it just now when you hated some one?'

'O, I forgot it then; I only thought about—about my body.'

'Yes; so you see that, when you hate, it dwarfs your soul; and a dwarfed soul is a much greater misfortune than a dwarfed body.'

'Then my soul will grow, if I am not wicked? Will it grow to be a man's soul? as big as a man's?'

'Certainly.'

'I don't see—' said Davy; 'won't it grow too big for my body?'

'In that case you will be given a spiritual body,' said Mr. Kirk, feeling that the child could understand him; and then he went on to tell him that this present body was the temple of his soul, that through it all his worship must ascend to God; and, no matter how small or misshapen it might be, one should not despise it, nor grieve about it, if only one preserved it, unsoiled by ill temper and unholiness, a pure shelter for the wayfaring soul.'

So at last Davy dried his tears and forgave the naughty tailor, and tried hard to put up with being a dwarf. But, somehow or other, he couldn't enjoy himself as before; all his castles in the air were tumbling down about his ears, and he couldn't find heart to build more, nor materials even. It seemed to him every day harder to keep down the angry words when the others provoked him, and he would think, 'If I were only as big as they, I think I could do it,' and then he would remember that the victory would be so much the greater as he was smaller, and so he often stopped short in the middle of a cross word, and got the better of himself. He declined to have Aunt Nancy took him into bed any longer, decrying that if he couldn't have the stature of a man, he might at least have a man's independence in a measure; but Aunt Nancy brought the argument of tears to bear against his pride, and he relented. He marked off his height with charcoal against the white wall, and every morning ran to see if he had not gained upon himself. In his dreams the Jack's bean stalk grew into the heavens, and on some occasions he could hardly persuade himself, after waking and remeasuring, that he had not overstepped the black mark. Mr. Kirk surprised him, one morning, taking the gauge of his inches.—'You are thinking too much about it, Davy,' said he; 'which of us by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?' And Davy neglected to measure himself thereafter.

One day a stranger came to see Mr. Screwum, the overseer; and Mr. Screwum, having a great deal of sympathy for the towns-people who were taxed to support the almshouse, and very little for the towns-poor—Mr. Screwum, I say, made Davy over to the stranger for a certain time, to be exhibited wherever the stranger pleased—as the wicked little tailor had said, to 'be made a show.'

You may imagine the distress of poor Davy, so sensitive as he was; to be shown off by gaslight, nightly, to a thousand people; standing on the backs of chairs, acting in pantomimes, singing comic songs, dancing hornpipes till his head was lighter than his heels, cracking other people's jokes, and breaking his own heart.

It would have been strange, indeed, if the old Adam had not risen in him then; and often, when the audience expected something comic of him, he had half a mind to tell them, boldly, that it was probable that their eyes and ears had been given them for more Christian uses than to go out of their way to see and hear a dwarf make a fool of himself.

But all this was not to last long; he got a fall one day—a fall that injured his spine, the doctors said, and Davy was sent back to the almshouse; and there Aunt Nancy cared for him in her feeble but affectionate way; there Mr. Kirk came often, and read to him tender Bible lines; and there, last of all, came the little tailor, begging Davy to forgive him 'before he went to be an angel.'

And so, one evening, when the sunset yet smouldered in the west, Davy sent for Mr. Kirk. 'Poor Aunt Nancy,' said he; 'I had promised her such a pretty red gown and a rocking-chair when I grew up; and now, you know, I shall never grow up.'

'I will see to that,' said Mr. Kirk.

'But I shall be changed—you said?'

'We shall all be changed—in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.'

'And I shall not be a dwarf any longer? I shall be a man—shall I not? a man like you?' and he caressed the clergyman with his failing fingers.

'Dear child,' said he, 'not like me, but like Him; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body.'

'In the twinkling of an eye,' repeated Davy, smiling back on him from the threshold of eternity, and in a minute more the great gates had closed behind him, and the minister sat alone.

Davy had left the almshouse forever.—Mary N. Prescott, in 'Our Young Folks.'

A FEW WORDS TO A FATHER.—Take your son for a companion whenever you can. It will relieve the already over-burdened, anxious mother of so much care. It will gratify the boy; it will please the mother; it certainly ought to be a pleasure to you. What mother's eye would not brighten when her child is fondly cared for? And when his eye kindles, his heart beats, and his tongue prattles faster and faster, with the idea of 'going with father,' does she not share her little boy's happiness, and is not her love deepened by her husband's considoration, so just, and yet too often so extraordinary? It will keep him and you out of places into which separately you might enter. It will establish confidence, sympathy, esteem and love between you. It will give you abundant and very favorable opportunities to impart instruction, to infuse and cultivate principles, and develop and strengthen a true manhood. It will enable him to 'see the world,' and to enjoy a certain liberty, which may prevent that future licentiousness which so often results from a sudden freedom from long restraint.

NO FEWER than six women have recently been elected on the parochial boards in various parts of England.

FARM AND GARDEN.

DEEP AND THOROUGH CULTURE.

In all the processes of culture, the first and most prominent is the deep and thorough pulverization of the soil, or, in plain terms, deep plowing and thorough harrowing. In the absence of this preparation we have no assurance of a full crop. 'Not so fast,' says our friend Stockdown, 'for when I came into the country, thirty years ago, shallow plowing made us good crops, much better than we can have now with all your new-fangled notions. The fact is, the land is wearing out, and you must seed down and let it recover, and then turn up the sod, and you will be able to grow wheat and corn again. The land is worn out—I say worn out—and it must be seeded down.

We do not propose to admit any such fact—that our land is worn out, but that the hygrometric change of the atmosphere has wrought a new condition of things, to which we must conform.

Pasturing and plowing have been the means of drying the soil, and to enable it to hold the required amount of moisture it must be deepened; that is all there is of it. Shallow culture did very well when the air was so saturated with moisture that the nightly dews were like a small shower. We might, with the same propriety, tell our friend Stockdown that the heavens were worn out, for they no longer give the supply of dews that we were accustomed to. If we will plow deep and finely commute the soil, so that the rain will pass down through it, and thus retain the gases that are held in solution in the rain drops, we shall not only enrich the soil, but we shall have an ample supply of moisture for our crops. It is said that the soil is drying out. Most certainly it is, and for this reason we must stir it more often, so as to admit the air. This crust must be broken often if we would have the plants make rapid growth. Suppose we have a field of winter wheat, on which the winter rains have soddened the soil, we put on the harrow and stir the surface, and at the same time destroy a portion of the plants with the teeth of the harrow; yet the advantage is on the side of the crop. The same is true of spring wheat and oats; in fact, all the small grains.

We see it stated that in England the wheat crop is double that of ours; and yet very few of our farmers are aware that in England the land is deeply tilled; that the seed is planted in drills, and that the crop receives repeated weedings and hoeings, in which the steel rakes act a prominent part. When labor becomes cheaper or wheat dearer, or when experience shall have demonstrated that this hand-weeding and hoeing is profitable, then shall we also double the average of our wheat crop as certainly as do the wheat-growers of England. Cheap labor and dear wheat are potent powers to develop good culture.

Three horses are better than two to plow our corn fields, and we trust the experiment will be tried on the corn crop at least.

The plowing into lands of about three rods wide is another cheap method of correcting the dryness and the resulting heavy rains; for we all know that any long dry spells often come to an end by a small flood, which in turn saturates the soil and stagnates the roots of the grains, trees and vegetables. A few plowings toward the centre raise the bed and make a deep dead furrow, and thus imperceptibly increase the depth of the tillage.

If we look at the grain along the centre of the land that we have back-furrowed we see there the best grain, the longest heads and tallest straw; and yet the soil has not been deepened so much as drained. But, says one, why not the drain? Simply for the want of cash, labor and experience. But we can accomplish much with the plow, and these seed beds cost us nothing. The dead furrows are not filled with water, simply for the reason that the deep tillage has enabled the soil to hold the heavy rain, like a sponge, and it sinks deeply, and in time comes back by capillary attraction.—Saturday Courier.

TO CLEAR A HOUSE OF VERMIN.—'Burleigh,' of the Boston Journal, says:

'I tell you, ladies, a secret that may be worth your knowing—a remedy to clean a house of roaches and vermin has been found. So complete is the remedy that men offer to rid the premises of all these pestilential nuisances by contract. The article is sold under the name of French green and other high sounding names, and at quite a high price. But the article, in plain English, is common green paint in powder. Six cents worth used about any house will 'clear the kitchen,' and all its surroundings. These pests infest many houses in this city, ad nauseam, and we believe the ladies will thank us for suggesting so cheap an eradicator.

SCIENTIFIC.

Vegetable Parchment for Preserve Coverings.

Messrs. Thomas De la Rue & Co. are now supplying vegetable parchment, cut into suitable sizes for jar coverings, in small packets, and as this cheap and efficient substitute for animal membrane is rapidly coming into general use, we advise our readers to add these preserve coverings to their sundry wares. The vegetable parchment is in many respects superior to bladder for excluding air and moisture from preserves, and is much cheaper than the commonest description of skin. It is inodorous, and is not liable to promote fermentation, as, unlike animal membrane, it contains no nitrogen; it is less subject to the attacks of insects or mice, and is more elegant in appearance than bladder. Its use is attended with little trouble, for when the material has been wetted by immersion in water it is soft and yielding, and can be readily stretched and tied over the jar. As evidence of its fitness for covering preserves we need simply mention that since the year 1859 nearly six million pots have been covered with it by one firm alone. Vegetable parchment is merely unsized paper in which a remarkable physical alteration has been induced by the action of diluted sulphuric acid. Its formation appears to have been first noticed in 1847 by Poumarede and Figuier, who gave to the altered paper the name of papyrin. The discovery remained, however, without practical application until the year 1857, when it was patented in this country by Mr. W. E. Gaine, a gentleman whose attention had for many years been directed to the improvement of paper used for photographic and other technical purposes. The material was named by Mr. Gaine vegetable parchment or parchment-paper, and is now manufactured on a large scale by Messrs. De la Rue & Co. To insure the conversion of the soft unsized paper—which is familiarly known as blotting-paper, and technically as water leaf—into a tough material resembling animal parchment, many precautions are requisite. The sulphuric acid by which this strange conversion is effected must be of a certain strength, for if it be too weak the paper is dissolved, and if too strong it is charred. The proper degree of dilution is attained by mixing ordinary sulphuric acid, sp. gr. 1.845, with half its bulk of water. On passing the blotting-paper or water-leaf into this diluted acid, it is converted in a few seconds into a gelatinous, gummy sheet. This, on being passed into water, in order to remove the adhering acid, becomes within a minute a tough, elastic, skin-like substance, which, when thoroughly freed from acid, is the vegetable parchment of commerce. Freedom from acid is insured by repeated washings in water, and by immersion in a weak solution of ammonia, which converts any slight trace of acid that may remain into ammonic sulphate. The most curious fact connected with the formation of the vegetable parchment is that the chemical composition of the paper and of the sulphuric acid remains unchanged. The paper gains nothing and loses nothing, and if submitted to chemical analysis, after conversion into parchment, it is found to have the exact composition that it had originally. The change is therefore purely a physical one, and must be ascribed to a rearrangement of the molecules of matter of which the paper is composed. The practical difficulties connected with the manufacture of this material on a large scale have been very great, but they have been successfully overcome by Messrs. De la Rue & Co. Mr. Gaine's original patent expired last year, but in consideration of the great merit of the invention and the expenses incurred in working it, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council advised that the patent should be prolonged for five years, dating from December last.—Chemist and Druggist.

AN EXTRAORDINARY BLAST.—A remarkable blast was recently made at Lime Point, (near San Francisco,) where government is about to erect a fort. For this purpose it was necessary to remove a rocky hill which rose from two hundred and fifty feet to three hundred feet above the level where the fort is to stand. A small tunnel was bored into the hill for a distance of about sixty feet. At the end of the tunnel a chamber was excavated, and a charge of four hundred pounds of powder was put into it. The tunnel was then filled up with clay and sand for a distance of forty-five feet, where another chamber had been excavated which received a charge of three thousand five hundred pounds of blasting powder. This being in position, and a wire led from each charge through the tunnel to the outside, the whole tunnel was filled up with clay and sand to its mouth. The wires from the mines were connected with an electrical machine placed at a safe distance. The charges were fired simultaneously. There was no explosion, in the popular sense of that term. A little smoke and flame was seen to escape through the moving mass of rock, and the whole face of the hill in front of the charges was seen to move outward, falling down into the sea. There was no noise from powder, and not a stone was thrown fifty feet from its position by the force of the explosion. About eighty thousand tuns of rock were removed by the blast. It was not all thrown into the sea; much of it will have to be rolled down by hand. Still the result was very striking—eighty thousand tuns removed at a cost of two and a half cents per tun!—San Francisco Bulletin.

Recent Scientific Discoveries.

CARRE'S PNEUMATIC ICE MAKING MACHINE.—Last summer we described a pneumatic ice-making machine, the invention of M. E. Carre, of Moislaus. Our account attracted a good deal of attention, and brought numerous inquiries; and we recur to the subject now, as the machine was exhibited, for the first time in England, by Dr. Roscoe, at the conversazione at the College of Physicians last week, and was found to fulfill all the invention promised. It is, as we explained, a simple air-pump, under the receiver of which the carafe, decanter, or vessel of water to be frozen is placed. The action of the pump necessarily causes the rapid evaporation of the water, and consequent reduction of temperature. So far all is very simple; but now comes the most ingenious part of M. Carre's invention. To remove the atmosphere of aqueous vapor resulting from the exhaustion of the air, it is made to pass over the surface of some strong sulphuric acid, kept in agitation by a peculiar contrivance, so that a large surface is presented to the vapor. By this means rapid absorption of the vapor takes place, and consequently rapid evaporation and reduction of temperature; so that, in about three minutes, a decanter of water is reduced to a freezing point. An apparatus for congealing one decanter at a time costs only four pounds. There is but one drawback to the very extensive use of this ingenious apparatus, and that a little instruction would quickly remove. The sulphuric acid soon becomes too dilute to absorb the vapor of water. A chemist knows how to deal with his dilute acid, which only requires to be evaporated to be ready for use again. But with ordinary people it will always be a difficulty and a loss.—American Artisan.

A CONTENTED MIND.—'I saw the most splendid doll down town,' said Carrie. 'It was as big as baby, and it had such beautiful curly hair, and parian arms and feet—not old kid ones, as my doll has. I wish it was mine.' 'Better wish for a contented mind, Carrie,' said grandma. 'I must tell you a story:

'When I was about your age I was very fond of dolls, too; but we did not have such handsome ones as children have now-a-days. I never had any except a rag one, with bead eyes, but was continually wishing for a Gorman doll, made of wood, with a painted face. One day my mother told me to get ready for a walk with her, saying that, 'after I came home, she would give me money to buy a doll, if I still wished for one.' I was delighted. We went to the poorest part of the town, and entered a small house, hearing a little girl singing as we opened the door. I was surprised to find she was the only person in the house, and that she was blind. She sat in a chair by the fire, knitting, and seemed very happy. We sat down, and mother told her she had brought her little girl to see her, and asked if she did not feel very lonely when her mother was away. 'Sometimes, but not very often,' she said, 'for I like to knit fast, so that I can sell many stockings; then, if I begin to be lonely, I sing hymns, or repeat Bible verses.' I was very much interested in her, and asked her if she would like to have me come and read to her sometimes. She was delighted, and looked so happy as she said, 'No one has ever thought of reading to me but mother, and she has very little time.'

'On our way home, mother said, she would give me the money for a doll if I still wanted one, or I might buy something for the blind girl.'

'What did you do, grau'ma?' said Carrie eagerly.

'Oh, I bought a warm woollen dress for the blind girl, and I think that gave me far more pleasure than if I had bought a doll. I found it more blessed to give than to receive.'

MODESTY.—Nothing is more amiable than true modesty, and nothing more contemptible than that which is false; the one guards virtue, the other betrays it. True modesty is ashamed to do anything that is repugnant to right reason; false modesty is ashamed to do anything that is opposite to the humor of those with whom the party converses.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

And at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to The Good Samaritan, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of Cooking Stoves, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following:

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

☞ Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1830,)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with their patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 11th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

MARRIED.

In Greensboro, Alabama, on the 2d of June, by Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, Mr. DAVID J. CASTLEMAN, formerly of Virginia, to Miss BELLE SLEDGE, daughter of the late Dr. Alexander Sledge.

OBITUARIES.

Departed this life, on the 1st of July, at Rocky Springs, Claiborne county, Mississippi, Rev. THOMAS OWEN, of the Mississippi Conference, from cancer of the stomach, in the eighty-second year of his age.

In recording the death of much-loved friends it frequently occurs that the tender feelings of the heart lead the writer to dwell upon the life and merits of the deceased in the language of laudatory praise; but the subject of this sketch possessed so many attractive qualities, noble and generous traits of character, that his memory needs not the aid of eulogy.

In all the endearing relations of life he was exemplary, and deeply, dearly and affectionately beloved by all who knew him; and more, he was blessed with that rare beauty and excellence of demeanor, in his public and private career, which distinguished him as a minister of the gospel, as a faithful and devoted husband, and as an esteemed and much-beloved citizen.

He was the subject of early religious training and impressions; and although a part of his youthful days were passed in careless living, at an early age he was converted to Christianity, and soon after began to exhort. When an opportunity offered he was ordained a minister of the gospel of Christ. His prayer to God then was that his life might be prolonged ten years, if no more, that he might make some small reparation for past sins, ingratitude and neglect.

He soon became a faithful and zealous ambassador for Christ, and spent the remainder of his long life entirely in the service of the church, in trying to do good, and in endeavoring to plead the cause of heaven. Under the fostering care, guidance and blessings of the Almighty he was enabled to witness happy results from most of his efforts to do good.

During his long life of usefulness he received thousands into the church, and through his instrumentality many have been turned to righteousness, who will shine as bright stars in his crown of rejoicing.

As a minister he was regarded with much esteem and love. Although toward the close of his life he was much enfeebled by age and greatly debilitated from the ravages of the very distressing and painful disease with which he had suffered for many years, and from which he died, yet he never lost an opportunity to do good, to administer to the wants of the needy and suffering, and was ever faithful and indefatigable in his efforts to this end.

Reason and truth were the guides of his judgment, piety his most prominent feature of character, and the greatest happiness of his noble heart seemed to flow from fountains springing from the happiness of others.

The peculiar traits of character of the deceased were a mine of priceless treasure, on which memory will never cease to dwell. These benevolent and inestimable qualities were sanctified in his last illness by him who was ever the theme of his heart—Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

He suffered the greatest agony several days before his death; yet with steadfast hope, a firm and unwavering trust, he looked to Christ for grace to support him in his severe afflictions. Without a murmur he resigned his ebbing life to Christ, assured that the night of death would soon be followed by the dawn of immortal glory.

In the sweet comfort and blessed assurance that he died in the triumph of a blissful hope beyond the grave, his much bereaved companion bows in humility and with Christian resignation before the afflicting hand of the Almighty.

The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And, life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.
Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And, while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Saviour's joy.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The scant supply prevents any active movement in our leading staple, the sales of which continue on a very limited scale. Nothing of any moment has transpired in tobacco since the heavy transactions of last week. There has been rather more movement in Cuba sugar, but the business in Louisiana is confined to a trifling retail business. Western produce has exhibited no new features, and has generally continued quiet, without any material change in prices. Notwithstanding the prevailing dullness, there has been a fair business in several branches of the wholesale trade, particularly in dry goods and hardware, in the execution of country orders, which are received more freely by dealers in consequence of the fair prospect of the growing crop.

The weather has been seasonable and showery. Our accounts from the country indicate that the prospect for the growing crops continue highly encouraging, although in some localities there are complaints of too much rain. We hear of few complaints about worms. In a week or two it will be too late for them to do any serious damage.

The river has fallen six inches since our last report, and is now eleven feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed on Friday depressed by the discouraging tenor of the Liverpool accounts, but still quoted at 27½ to 28c. for Good Ordinary, 28½ to 29c. for Low Middling, and 30c. for Middling, predicated on the morning business, before the receipt of the afternoon's unfavorable messages. The business since has been at prices showing a decline of one-half to one cent from the above figures. On Saturday, with the cable messages quoting Middling Uplands at 10½d., against 10⅜d. on Friday, and the New York telegrams quoting at 30½ to 31c., against 31c. previously, the few buyers who came forward claimed concessions which factors would not admit, and the business was confined to 25 bales. On Monday, a further decline being reported at Liverpool and New York, Middling Uplands being quoted in the former at 9⅞ to 10d. and Orleans at 10¼ to 10⅜d., and Uplands in the latter at 30c., holders evinced a readiness to meet the demand at a fair reduction, and 250 bales changed hands, mostly on the basis of 27c. for Good Ordinary, 28c. for Low Middling, and 29c. for Middling. On Tuesday we did not hear of a sale. There was some little inquiry at the opening, but at figures which would not be accepted or for descriptions not to be found. There is no cotton left on hand, and it is difficult to fill orders even at ruling rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 275 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 218 bales, against 468 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 250 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 586,802 bales, against 708,556 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 289,389 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 24,032 bales to Great Britain, of 1,462 to France, and of 98,798 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	26½ to 27
Low Middling	27⅞ to 28
Middling	— to 29
Strict Middling	— to —

SUGAR.—Since our last review the market has been very quiet, with very little inquiry for round lots. The jobbing and retail business, however, still continues good at full prices. There were reported on Saturday sales (in small lots) of 80 hoxes Cuba sugar, Nos. 12 and 13, at 12 to 13¼c., and 175 boxes, Nos. 17 to 20, at 14¼ to 14¾c. per pound; also 10 hogsheads yellow clarified sugar at 16½c. What little Louisiana sugar there is remaining in market is retailing slowly at 13¾c. per pound for fair, 15¼c. for prime, and 17 to 17½c. for white.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A GEORGIA U. S. SENATOR IN PERIL.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The election of Miller to the Senate by the Georgia Legislature has disgusted the Radicals here awfully. They are determined that he shall not take his seat, and are already hatching a scheme to exclude him. If they adhere to this determination Mr. Miller must 'revert' to private life, for a contested election case in the Fortieth Congress inevitably results in the exclusion of the party who is entitled to the place.

THE NEW TREATY WITH MEXICO.

This treaty has at last been ratified. It is regarded as one of the most important ones that we have ever had with Mexico, inasmuch as it settles many claims of our citizens against that country which have been accumulating in the State Department for the last twenty years.

AFFAIRS IN TENNESSEE.

The threatening state of affairs in Tennessee continued also to excite alarm. The course of the infatuated Brownlow is heartily condemned by all Republicans here who have the slightest regard for the peace of the country. That it is his deliberate determination to provoke a conflict of arms in Tennessee, with the hope of thereby subserving the interests of his party in the Presidential contest, seems to be the general opinion of all outside of the party.

INSIDE VIEW OF GEORGIA POLITICS.

A prominent gentleman, returned here to-day from Georgia, reports that the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution was ratified through the influence of Georgia Democrats, who were determined to do whatever was required to secure representation in Congress. He further reports that the negroes have abandoned their carpet bag associates, and will vote in a body with the whites. Many of them have returned to the plantations of their former masters, and are going to work. It is believed in Georgia that the negroes throughout the South will co-operate with their former masters, and vote against all Radical measures.

MR. PENDLETON IN LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, July 31.—Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton arrived here at one o'clock to-day. He took a carriage to the Louisville Hotel. A band of music was soon there and serenaded him. He was called on by many of the citizens. Geo. W. Morris introduced him to the citizens from the balcony, where he made but a few remarks, thanking the citizens for the reception. He was urged to remain over and speak here to-night, but had to decline doing so. He left the hotel at two o'clock, in an open carriage, with Gov. Stevenson and two of our citizens, escorted to the Frankfort depot by a band of musio and citizens. His reception here was a very cordial one indeed. He speaks at Frankfort to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

FRANK BLAIR IN KANSAS.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, July 31.—Gen. Frank P. Blair, addressed an immense meeting, this evening, from the steps of the Mansion House, in this city. His speech was principally devoted to the action of the Radical party in the reconstruction of the South, and the record of Gen. Grant. He charged that the Republicans, having lost the confidence of the white people of the country, had resorted to the support of the blacks; that it was for no love of the negro race that they had enfranchised them, but only as a scheme to maintain themselves in power. He said he had nothing to say against Gen. Grant personally; that his military services would ever be remembered with pride, but that since he had entered the arena of politics his acts, politically, were proper matters for public criticism. That Grant had changed his views on the subject of reconstruction incontestibly—having at the close of the war urged the immediate admission of Senators and Representatives of Southern States, chosen then by the people of those States. But, he said, the secret of the adherence of Gens. Grant, Sheridan and other regular army officers to the Radical party, is, that the tendency of that party, which has overthrown the prerogatives of the Supreme Court, and executive branch of the government, is toward military despotism, which, being necessarily based upon military power, would give consequence to prominent officers of the army.

He said history shows that no party pursuing the course and using the means adopted by the Radicals can live, or receive the support of the people. He denied that the sentiments expressed in his letter, or his New York speech, were revolutionary; that the people of the United States, at the last election, had repudiated negro suffrage, upon which was based the whole reconstruction scheme, and that to overthrow, by proper constitutional means, the reconstruction acts, is but carrying out the will of the people.

He charged that the Radical party only are revolutionary. In reply to a remark from the crowd, he said: The Radical party have made copperheadism respectable.

DEVASTATING CONFLAGRATION.

OIL CITY, Pa., July 31.—One of the most destructive fires that ever visited the oil regions occurred here at seven o'clock this morning, destroying both sides of Main street from the post office to the National Hotel, including the Jones House and Charles Hotel, the Bergh House, Western Union and Pacific and Atlantic telegraph offices, and Dr. Porterfield's residence — in all two hundred buildings, rendering homeless nearly as many families. The oil interests suffered but very little. The loss by this fire will probably reach $150,000, with about $50,000 insurance.

STOECKEL'S RECEIPT.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The warrant for the payment of the purchase money for Alaska, amounting to $7,200,000 in coin, was to-day signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and transmitted to Baron Stoeckel, the Russian minister. A draft for that amount, payable in New York, was signed by Gen. Spinner this morning, and the following receipt given for it by the Russian minister:

"The undersigned, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of his majesty, the Emperor of all the Russias, does hereby acknowledge to have received at the Treasury Department in Washington, $7,2000,000 in coin, being the full amount due in coin from the United States to Russia, in consideration of the cession by the latter power to the former of a certain territory, described in the treaty entered into by the Emperor of all the Russias and the President of the United States, on the 25th day of March, 1867. STOECKEL."

"WASHINGTON, August 1, 1868."

'LITTLE PHIL.' SUED FOR ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, Aug 1.—Gen. Sheridan was arrested here to-day on the complaint of Mr. Dunn, for assault and battery. Dunn is postmaster at Fort Leavenworth, but was ordered off the Reserve a few days since for alleged misconduct, and refusing to obey the order was forcibly ejected; hence the action for assault.

WASHINGTON, August 4.—The debt statement will probably be issued to-morrow, and will show a slight increase.

A cabinet meeting was held to-day; four members present. Seward, Schofield, Evarts and Randall absent.

—The Express newspaper of this city appears to day under the ownership of Jonah D. Hoover & Brother.

Rumors relative to a change in the Internal Revenue Commissionership continue. In response to a second request to accept that office, ex-Gov. Cox, of Ohio, to-day sent a telegram persisting in declining the appointment.

Caleb Cushing has resigned his position as one of the commissioners to codify the United States laws.

Returns from all parts of Kentucky show an immense increase in Democratic majorities and falling off of the Radicals. Stevenson's majority will probably reach 60,000. In Louisville Stevenson received 8,244 and his Radical opponent 492.

WASHINGTON, August 4.—A Cincinnati paper says that the head of one of the robbing gangs at Seymour, Ind., the man who is said to have taken the largest share of the ninety-six thousand dollars stolen from the Adams Express Company, in May, has gone to Europe on a pleasure tour.

The commissioners of the Central Pacific Railway report an additional section of twenty miles, terminating 178 miles from the initial point at Sacramento, in good working order.

Private dispatches received here estimate the Democratic majority in Kentucky at from 50,000 to 70,000.

WASHINGTON, August 5.—Lieutenant Col. John F. Dean, of the staff of the Governor of Louisiana, to-day visited the President, and on behalf of Gov. Warmoth presented a copy of resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, requesting that Federal troops be placed at the disposal of the Governor of the State to prevent murders and domestic violence.

Col. Dean also presented a letter from Gov. Warmoth, addressed to the President, arguing the necessity of granting the request of the Legislature.

The President received the papers, but did not indicate what action would be taken upon them.

Probably nothing will be done upon the subject until a full meeting of the cabinet can be had.

The resignation of Mr. Rollins, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was accepted to-day, and sent by the President to Secretary McCulloch, to be by him delivered to Mr. Rollins.

WASHINGTON, August 6.—The Intelligencer publishes Seymour's letter in full by telegraph from New York. It covers a column and a quarter.

General Rousseau will not leave for his command until some time in September.

A Democratic conference at New York city indicates that Hoffman will be the Democratic candidate for Governor. He is the Tammany favorite.

Stevenson's majority for the Kentucky governorship will exceed 50,000.

Address of Confederate Generals to the Legislature of Tennessee.

We copy as follows from a special dispatch to the Louisville Courier, dated Nashville, August 1st:

The public pulse beats easier in Nashville. The interviews of the Confederate generals yesterday and to-day with the Military Committee of the Legislature were very harmonious, and will, it is now believed, be the means of preventing the militia being called out. In the conference this evening at the capitol the best feeling prevailed, and hopes were indulged in by a number on the legislative side that very soon the political disabilities would be removed from every white man in Tennessee.

Thirteen Confederate generals, from all parts of the State, who are now in the city, have addressed a communication or memorial to the Legislature, which will be published to-morrow, of which the following are the concluding features:

"We beg leave to say that the Governor, in his late message, wholly misapprehends our feelings and intentions, in declaring, in his late message, that we seek the overthrow of the State government or to do any other thing by revolutionary or lawless means. Neither we, nor our late associates, contemplate any such rashness and folly; nor do we believe there is in Tennessee any organization, either public or secret, which has such purpose, and we have neither sympathy nor affiliation therewith. Inasmuch as the supposed danger to the peace of the State is apprehended from that class with which we are considered identified, as an inducement and reason to enjoin your honorable body not to organize a military force, we pledge ourselves to maintain the order and peace of the State with whatever of influence we possess, and to uphold and support the laws, and aid in their execution.

"Trusting that the reciprocating of the sentiments by your honorable body will produce the enactment of such laws as will remove all irritating causes now distracting society; for when it is remembered that the large mass of white men in Tennessee are denied the right to vote or hold office, it is not wonderful or unnatural there should exist more or less dissatisfaction among them, and we beg leave to respectfully submit for your consideration that prompt and efficient action, on the part of the proper authorities, for the removal of the political disabilities resting upon so many of our people, would heal all the wounds of our State, and make us once more a prosperous, contented and happy people." The signatures are headed by Generals Forrest and Cheatham.

Hon. John M. Lee arrived from Knoxville to-day, where he had a long interview with Brownlow on the subject of enfranchising the whites. He gives an encouraging report, averring that the Governor will immediately send another message to the Legislature, leaving it open with that body to initiate measures looking to white enfranchisement, with the understanding, however, that the franchisement must not be extended before the coming Presidential election.

GOV. HAIGHT, of California, has recalled the arms of the State militia because they were being used to strengthen Radical organizations.

JUDGE ROBERTSON, of Kentucky, is the only living ex-member of Congress who voted for the Missouri Compromise in 1820. He is 80 years of age.

Mr. Pendleton upon the Bonds, Etc.

We copy as follows from his speech at Grafton, Virginia:

The Republican party is the party of usurpation. It is also the party of corruption. Read the report of the Commissioner of Revenue.—Count the number of clerks who are seeking in vain to discover the amount of peculation in the Treasury Department. Go to the War Department and see the mutilated archives, and ask why they were destroyed. Visit the penitentiaries and count the public plunderers who are confined there. [Hear, hear.] He reviewed the expenditures of the Federal government from July 1, 1865, to July 1, 1868, showing that the Democratic administrations had been much more economical. Moreover, he would ask why was it that the amount realized from taxes for 1869 would be less than the amount realized in 1866, considering that the rate of taxation was substantially the same. It is time that this Republican Congress had diminished in part or in the whole the tax on the manufactures in New England or on whisky; but they would not materially change the aggregate. Payment was more difficult than previously. Labor found no occupation, energy and enterprise were paralyzed, and all because a Republican administration curtailed the currency, distributing all values, checking all enterprise, throwing out of employment all labor. In the meantime the work of contraction is steadily pushed. Look at every monthly report of the Secretary of the Treasury. You will find that every month the debt that bears interest in gold is increased. You will find that every dollar that bears no interest at all, or that bears interest in currency, is converted as rapidly as possible into the bonds which pay interest in gold; and why is this? Is there too much currency in the country? Is speculation rife? No man will dare affirm it, and yet this work of contraction still goes on and value is coined for the bondholder out of sweat and tears, the blood and bones and muscles of the laboring man; and when we ask the reason we are answered by the declaration of the Republican Convention of Chicago, that the bonds must be paid in gold, according to the spirit and letter of the contract. I deny that it is according to either the spirit or letter of the contract under which the five-twenty bonds were sold. I say that neither the spirit nor the letter of the law under which these bonds were issued, nor good faith, nor good morals, nor exact justice to the bondholder, require that they should be paid in gold. They are payable in legal tender, and in this opinion I am sustained by the Democratic Convention of New York. [Applause] What the amount of indebtedness under the system of the Republican party would be he could not say. $3,500,000,000, we know, it is now. Less than that it certainly will not be. The interest upon that sum will be $150,000,000 in gold, and this amount is to be drawn annually from the people of the country during all your lives, and the lives of your youngest children, in order to carry out the dogmas of the Republican party. On the other hand, the Democratic party were opposed to extension and desired the immediate payment of the debt. [Hear.] It declared that the money collected from the people should not be squandered, but applied to the payment of the debt interest. It declares that the five-twenty bonds shall be paid in legal tender, and until they be paid they shall be subjected to the same rate of taxation as all property. It declares there shall be one currency for the government and the people, for the laborer and the office holder, the pensioner and the soldier, the producer and the bondholder.—[Cheers.]

And how is it practicable to pay this debt—three hundred and thirty millions—if bonds are held in the Treasury Department as security for the national bank circulation. Redeem them the very moment you have the option to do so with legal tender notes, and let them supply the place of the bank paper. This measure alone, with very little inflation of the currency, and without any addition to the taxation, will redeem the debt and save the twenty millions in gold which are now paid as a bonus to national banks. He also recommended the redemption, with legal tender notes, of the five hundred millions of the first issue of the five-twenties, payable this year, at the option of the government. He urged that such measures would stop the contraction and reverse the policy of the Treasury Department, and give stability to the money market. He strongly advocated the expansion of the currency, and pointed out the folly and uselessness of contraction, citing many instances in favor of his arguments for the reduction of the national debt. The accruing revenues would enable you, without further expansion, to pay off the residue of the five-twenties as they mature, and then to diminish still further the amount of interest, consequently the taxes. If then the currency were found redundant gradual contraction could be effected, and as it would come when the debt had been paid, when the necessity for large sums of money on the part of the government had ceased, when taxes were low, it could be accomplished without the oppression and disaster which now attend it. I have been represented as hostile to the bondholder. Gentlemen, you shall judge me. I am hostile to no class or interest in the country. I simply desire to be just—just to the bondholder, just to the people. I would live up with scrupulous fidelity to the terms of our contracts. I would pay the interest of the five-twenties in gold, because the government promised to do so. I would pay principal and interest of the ten-forties in gold, because the government promised to do so. I would pay the principal of the five-twenties in legal tender notes, because the bondholders agreed to receive them in payment, and as I would not repudiate an honest bargain to make money for the people, so will I not repudiate an honest bargain to make money for the public creditors. [Cheers.] He did not think that policy would give us a depreciatory currency, but, on the contrary, was of opinion that just as the public debt was thus discharged will the certainty of its ultimate redemption be more apparent, and its value be rapidly and steadily increased.—These bonds operate as a mortgage upon the property and labor of the country. There are two thousand millions of them. Pay off these two thousand millions, and will not the legal tenders be first in the proportion more valuable? I know the evils of a depreciated currency. I would not aid in depreciating our currency. I fought against it when it was proposed by the legal tender act, but since it was accomplished—since the debt was contracted in legal tender—since it may be lawfully and honestly paid in legal tender—I am in favor of continuing it until we can secure the people who have already suffered all the evils, whatever good may be expected from the system. But, gentlemen, I detain you too long. I have sought to bring in sharp contrast the two parties and their respective principles. Choose between them. [Cheers.]

THE practice of suttee is not entirely obsolete in India, notwithstanding the vigorous efforts of the British government to prevent it. A late case occurred in the Cawnpore district. The widow of a Brahmin wishing to immolate herself on his funeral pile, the pundit of the family was sent for, and advised the test to be applied, viz., that her hand should be placed over a lighted lamp, to see if she could bear the pain. The lamp was brought, the widow herself placed her hand over the flame, and kept it there until it was blackened and blistered, declaring that she felt no pain. She was then declared worthy to perform the sacrifice. After some difficulty, and two days' delay, a spot of ground was secured, the funeral pile was built, and the pundit made a speech to the women, lamenting that 'few wives now-a-days love their husbands as well as this woman loves her husband's spirit.' Having adorned herself with her jewels, the widow ran to the spot selected, seated herself cross-legged upon it, and gave instructions that her son should set fire to it. This son, a youth of about eighteen years of age, had brought a bundle of grass, with which to set light to the wood; and as soon as his mother was prepared he fired the grass. On the flames rising, the 'sutteo' half rose from her sitting posture, on seeing which the spectators murmured in dissatisfaction; but the woman immediately resumed her seat, and signed with her hand that she had no intention of evading the sacrifice. Shortly after some of the bystanders threw on more wood, the flames rose and surrounded the victim, and the sacrifice was consummated. The spectators then brought flowers and offerings of various kinds, threw them on the embers, and dispersed. A few days later the police heard of it, and arrested most of the guilty parties; but the son had escaped.

Gov. Seymour's Letter of Acceptance.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Gov. Seymour has written a letter formally accepting the nomination by the Democratic National Convention, in which he says the nomination was unsought and unexpected, but he was caught up by the overwhelming tide which is bearing the country on to a great political change, and he finds himself unable to resist its pressure. The resolutions adopted by the convention accord with his views. He delayed a formal acceptance until the adjournment of Congress, for the purpose of seeing what light the action of Congress would shed on the interests of the country. The Congressional party has not only allied itself with the military power, which is to be brought to bear directly upon the election in many of the States, but holds itself in perpetual session with the avowed purpose of making such laws as it shall see fit, in view of the election soon to take place. Never before has Congress taken a menacing attitude toward electors. Under the influence of Congress some of the States are proposing to deprive the people of the right to vote for Presidential electors; therefore has the first hold step been taken to destroy the rights of suffrage. He refers to the demands of the tax gatherers.

Men are admitted as representatives of some of the Southern States with the declaration upon their lips that they cannot live in the States they claim to represent without military protection. They owe their seats to the disorder at the South, and that very fact prompts them to keep it in anarchy. In vain the wisest Republicans protested against this policy. There is hardly an able man who helped to build the Republican organization, who has not, within the past three years, warned it against excesses, while many have been driven from the ranks.

Personally, the Presidential office has no attraction for him. During the war he had given 16,000 commissions to officers of the army, and he knew they demanded the Union they fought for.

The largest meeting of these gallant soldiers ever held indorsed the action of the convention. He does not doubt a triumph which will bring back peace and prosperity to our land, and give us once more the blessings of wise, economical and honest government.

MR. SWINBURNE'S ACCIDENT.—A serious accident befell Mr. Swinburne yesterday in the reading room of the British Museum. The poet was busy at one of the desks when he was seized with a convulsion, was thrown by it to the floor, and striking his head against an iron staple received a blow that nearly fractured the skull. The violence of the fit was so great that even after the blow he had to be held down upon the floor for some minutes. As it passed away he was taken into the open air, and in course of half an hour was able to be carried home. There is reason to fear very grave consequences from such an attack, complicated as it was by the blow on the skull. Mr. Swinburne has an organization extraordinarily nervous, and always seemed to me to exist by sheer force of will. He is pale, slight, undersized in body, with a head of immense development in the upper regions. Notwithstanding his physical weakness, he has great powers of application. His writings show a wide range of reading, and his conversation has no known limits. There is a very general belief among his friends that nothing he has yet published indicates the real scope of his genius, but there has, for some time, been an equally general apprehension that the demands he makes upon his strength would speedily overtask it, and that no adequate career could be expected for him.—London Letter to the New York Tribune.

THE group of islands called Samoa by the natives, and Navigator's Islands on many maps, has a population of 84,700. They were first visited by missionaries of the London Society, in 1836; though Mr. Williams and some Tahitian teachers were there a few years earlier. Now the whole nation professes Christianity; a third of the population can read; 5,000 adults have been received to church fellowship, and 4,000 more are candidates for the same privilege. Contributions for the support of native teachers amount to $10,000, and $5,000 in cash are contributed annually to the London Missionary Society. Where commerce was before unknown, an export trade of some $250,000 now exists.

A DOUBTER'S HYMN.

God of the heart! whose love immense
In each of us, half quenched, unseen,
Darts its pure light at times between
The prison-bars of sin and sense,

We know thou art, for there did move,
In guise of mortal nature, one,
Flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone,
Whose life and death were naught but love.

Durst we then hope that we, who plod
Up the steep path of wrong or right,
Yet bear within our hearts a light,
The earnest of the perfect God?

God of the mind! whose power is given
To some of us in part to trace
The glories of thy hidden face,
The secrets of the earth and heaven;

No man hath ever known thee quite.
We pant, O God! we pant to find
Some great apostle of the mind
To lift the veil and show us light.

But no; by turns we fling away
Each faithless guide, and learn that he
Who fain would pierce the mystery
Himself must grope to find the day.

And must we then in doubt and fear
Watch on, watch ever for each star
That glimmers on us faint and far,
And know the dawn will not appear?

And is the dream that human kind
Is marching on from age to age,
To claim its perfect heritage,
Mere vision of an idle mind?

We know not. But for him, we know,
Who loveth and who prayeth well
Some flash of God's own truth shall quell
The doubts that bow his spirit low.

Then hate not what thou hast of breath;
In thee hath dwelt, and yet shall dwell,
O man! a love that knows not death,
And reaches past the grasp of hell.

In thee shall dwell, it may befall,
The knowledge of the truth of things,
The mind to hold high communings
With him who is the cause of all.

OPELIKA HIGH SCHOOL.

OPELIKA, Ala., July 7, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: On Thursday and Friday, the 25th and 26th ultimo, I had the pleasnre to witness the commencement exercises of the Opelika High School, under the control and management of Rev. E. D. Pitts, assisted by his excellent lady and the accomplished Misses McNeely. The examination was conducted by the teachers of the classes respectively or Professor Pitts, under the eye and direction of a committee of competent literary gentlemen.

Any one who witnessed the exercises, though he were a stranger to Professor Pitts as a teacher, would soon have been convinced of his superior excellence as an educator. The thorough system manifested throughout, his mild yet rigid discipline, his thorough knowledge of the temperament, disposition and capacities, or, as phrenologists would have it, human nature or knowledge of human character, of the children entrusted to his care, and his thorough knowledge of what he professes to teach, his peculiar gifts in imparting instruction, and his known piety and devout life, all conspire to fit and qualify him as a competent and successful teacher.

The different classes responded promptly and readily to all questions propounded, and evinced a familiarity seldom if ever surpassed.

The examination could not be a thorough one for want of time; nor are any of our exercises in this line so. But all who attended were convinced, doubtless, that these classes understood what they had gone over. In fact it is one of Professor Pitts' great recommendations that he never suffers a student of his school to pass any part of his studies until he has mastered it. He requires that it must not only be understood, but then explained, analyzed, and the principles impressed on the mind of the student. His system of teaching, to my mind, recommends itself more highly than any other. The mind is trained to think—to think for itself—giving it a health, power and strength never possessed nor attained by those who learn entirely from memory.

It is not my purpose to give all the credit to Professor Pitts. He is certainly entitled to much. In fact I know not where to stop. But Mrs. Pitts, Miss Fannie McNeely and Miss Helen McNeely are as much entitled to credit in their respective duties, and are equally as industrious and energetic.

The exercises were attended by a large and appreciative audience, and time, it seems, never passed more pleasantly. All were interested.

It is encouraging to see a people take an active and lively interest in the schools of the country. It gives a zest to the energy and interest of the children that cannot be given in any other way.

On Saturday, the 27th ultimo, the young ladies read compositions. These were generally short, pointed and appropriate, and elicited commendatory remarks from some of the best literary minds in the land.

On Thursday and Friday nights we had a delightful time—an exhibition and concert on each night. Dialogues, speeches and songs, appropriate to the occasion, were rendered.

Professor Pitts had written to Hon. Joseph W. Taylor to deliver the commencement address, but owing to a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the State University, of which board Mr. Taylor is president, he could not comply. On Sunday morning Rev. James E. Evans, of Columbus, Georgia, preached the commencement sermon. His theme was: "The First and the Great Commandment."—Matthew xxii, 37, 38. It was a gospel sermon. He made no effort at display, but preached the unsearchable riches of Christ in a plain, Methodistic style. At night he preached to the children. The children all love "Uncle Evans," and gave him close attention.

Professor Pitts, I learn, commenced his school in this place in 1862. He continued to teach through the war. Last year the building in which he taught was burned down, but through his untiring energy, and with the aid of his friends, he now has a large and commodious building, with four rooms, but so arranged that he can, with little trouble, throw all into one large room, 60 by 80 feet.

Opelika is on a high, elevated point, is remarkably healthy, and has fine water. It is situated on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, twenty-five miles from Columbus, Georgia, and is one of the most accessible places in the State. Professor Pitts now has a large and flourishing school.

Respectfully, K.

LETTER FROM NORTH LOUISIANA.

UNION PARISH, July 22, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The third quarterly conference for Summerville circuit was held at Shiloh on the 17th and 18th instant, Rev. Samuel Armstrong presiding. There is no Methodist church at this place. The community around is made up almost entirely of Baptists. Our meeting was held in their church. Large congregations were in attendance, and in the main serious attention was given to the preaching. We had two accessions to the church, and closed the meeting with about a dozen penitents at the altar. The preacher in charge, by reason of extreme feebleness, was forced to close the meeting.

This effort to give Methodism a foothold at Shiloh we regard as something encouraging, though the surface of public opinion was never gashed by the axe of Methodism in this community before.

The pastors' quarterly reports show that accessions have been made to the church in every society but one in the bounds of the circuit.

The report on Sabbath schools is, by request, forwarded to you for publication.

The report of the stewards did not have much of the ring of the true metal about it.

Our crop prospects are mixed. The cotton never gave greater promise of an abundant yield.—Worms are reported in different localities, but if a single leaf has been eaten I have not heard of it. Therefore I incline to the belief that the "grass worm" only is in the fields. Even should the genuine army worm appear, the destruction of the crop cannot be such as it was last year, since the cotton is fully one month earlier than last season. On many plantations a pretty fair crop may be considered already beyond the reach of the worm.

A strange irregularity in the distribution of the rain has been observed this season throughout north Louisiana. Many plantations have had a plentiful supply of rain, falling just as it was needed, whilst others immediately adjacent have had no rain since the 1st of June. Hence on one farm the corn is as fine as was ever grown, while on another, hard by, the stalks have perished and fallen earless to the earth. Still we congratulate ourselves upon the fact that quite a sufficiency of corn has been made to meet the wants of the parish. In this fact we find abundant cause for gratitude to the giver of all good.

SABBATH SCHOOL REPORT.

To the Officers and Members of the Quarterly Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN—When I accepted the appointment from the presiding elder to supply this circuit there was not a Sabbath school in existence within its bounds. I have now the satisfaction of reporting four schools in successful operation, with a growing interest upon the subject in every community. The first, at Farmerville, numbers about one hundred scholars, and is under the direction of W. W. Gutherie as superintendent—an energetic and faithful officer—aided by a corps of diligent and efficient teachers.

The school at "Alabama Church" is under the care of A. C. Harper, a zealous and earnest Christian, who stands ready for "every good word and work." This school has about thirty scholars, and is increasing in numbers.

The school at Shiloh is conducted jointly by the Baptists and Methodists. Mr. Thornton Manning has had charge of this school, and though he is but a mere boy in years, still his dignified Christian bearing and scholastic attainments eminently qualify him for the place. This school has about forty scholars.

The school at Patterson's Church has about twenty-five scholars, and is under the direction of the venerable Drury Andrews. This school is also constantly adding to its numbers, and gives promise of great good.

In the absence of anything like a widespread revival spirit in our churches, this increasing concern for the spiritual welfare of the children affords abundant cause for rejoicing to every Christian heart.

Respectfully submitted.

H. T. LEWIS, P. E.

AN English medical journal has the candor to inform the public of two recent deaths from the use of chloroform, which was administered in one case preparatory to removing a tooth, and in the other for a very slight operation on the eye. The coroners, several of whom were physicians, had refused to take cognizance of these deaths, because they were "satisfied that chloroform had been administered with due care and judgment." Chloroform is undoubtedly a dangerous agent; and two cases, one of them of a physician in Ohio, have lately occurred in this country of death following the use of chloroform for the purpose of securing rest in cases of severe headache.

JOHN B. GOUGH declares his intention to retire from the lecture field at the close of the present season.

LETTER FROM MISSISSIPPI.

FAYETTE, Miss., July 22, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I rejoice in the brightening prospects of our church in many places, as indicated in your weekly reports of revivals, etc. I am glad to see that our bishops, missionary secretaries, book agents, editors, and presidents and professors of our colleges are often abroad in the land, blessing select portions of the church with their superior ministrations. But I confess to a feeling of sadness when I call to mind the fact that, except two or three connected with our educational interests, we are never visited by these high church functionaries in Jefferson county, Mississippi, though it is one of the oldest counties in the State, bordered on the west by the Mississippi river, and has had the uninterrupted pastoral services of Methodist ministers since 1799, and at one time or another had, or still has, a Methodist church and congregation in every neighborhood. The precious dust of hundreds of our sainted dead reposo in our burying places, and their descendants now constitute the majority of our membership. But few of them have ever seen one of the high officials mentioned above. They glide by us on the Mississippi river on our west, or the railroad on the east, but never have time to give us a call. I will not say that these, our chief ministers, are blameworthy. I know they have many calls to preach abroad, and much traveling and labor to perform; but still it does seem a little strange that no General Conference official has preached a single sermon in this old section of the church in Mississippi for half a century, except William Capers, who delivered an address at a transient week day meeting when he was one of our missionary secretaries. The diocesan of the Protestant Episcopal Church makes his regular annual visits to his two small churches in our county, and they are times of great attraction in the communities where they are located; but our people never see one of our bishops in their midst. I do not think that a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church has preached in this county since Bishops McKendree, George and Roberts, about half a century ago, used to travel on horseback from the Tennessee to the Mississippi Conference.

Now, Mr. Editor, I believe an occasional official visit, with a few telling sermons, from our chief ministers would greatly advance all the interests of the church, both secular and spiritual. We are tired of moving on in the same old track. The face of things around us has become too familiar. We need the excitement of variety. The people here do not know what superior preachers we have in our church. We want the prestige of the episcopacy to draw the multitude to the house of God. We need the presence and preaching of our missionary secretaries to rouse up the people to a sense of their obligations to the missionary treasury. An occasional preaching and business tour from those who control the literature of our church would greatly extend its circulation. I hope that class of our ministers whose official relations to the church require them to travel extensively through her territory will not hereafter entirely overlook the Fayette circuit. Up to the time of its desolation by the war it was one of our banner circuits in all the benevolent enterprises of the church. Now we are poor in earthly treasure, but we love the church as fervently as ever, and desire help from our chief pastors.

Your's affectionately,

J. G. JONES.

A C. B. DIVINE TURNED PROPHET.

MR. EDITOR: Some weeks since a celebrated carpet bag divine of your city published a long article in a Northern paper, perhaps the New York Methodist, in which he made several statements to show that the Southern Methodist Church was declining, and predicted its early extinction. It is no conjecture to say that the "wish was father" of the prediction, for the heavenly-minded man expresses the earnest wish that such may be the result. Such a desire on his part excites no surprise with those who know him. I have, therefore, no remarks upon it. But for his comfort and encouragement I wish to give him and the public a few facts.

Bishop Wightman has recently been on a visit through the Holston Conference, in which he traversed its entire length, I think; and instead of finding the members and friends of the Southern Church timid and overawed by the murderous Radicals, who make up the friends and members of the Northern Methodist Church, he found the most wonderful reaction going on everywhere. His trip was an ovation, and wherever he preached immense assemblies came to hear him. In Knoxville, right "under Brownlow's nose," hundreds surrounded the church, unable to obtain admittance.

One presiding elder informed the bishop that he had taken two hundred and fifty into the Southern Methodist Church in five weeks, mostly from those claimed by the Northern Church.

Again: in November, 1866—a year and a half since—Bishop McTyeire appointed the Rev. Mr. Long presiding elder of a district extending from Chattanooga to the Little Tennessee river, and in that territory there was then but one organized society. Now that same territory contains three presiding elders' districts in full operation. "On the decline?"

But more still: the presiding elder of the Zenia District, of the Illinois Conference, of the Southern Church, has taken in fifteen hundred members this year, and most of them, I presume, from the Methodist Episcopal Church North.

Dr. Rosel was appointed presiding elder to the Eastern Shore of Maryland at the last Baltimore Conference, and my information from him is that "the whole land is before him," and he only wants preachers to take possession of it, and go forward organizing circuits into the very heart of Pennsylvania.

Radical churches "stand on slippery places." "Be not high-minded, but fear."

Now how is it with the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church, with all its boasting? Its missionary society carries a debt of two hundred and sixty thousand dollars, and the supplies promised their emissaries and hirelings in the South are nearly cut off. The consequence is that Dr. Pearne, the Ajax of Northern Methodism in East Tennessee, has applied for a license to practice law, and so has his first lieutenant, Mr. Heiden. So others will go. It will be found, as the country is restored to peace and its rights, that a radical church is an exotic that cannot flourish anywhere in this latitude.

The Northern presiding elder of the Ashville District went to his quarterly meeting, a short time since, and found not a soul there to meet him; so he mounted his horse and left.

THE finest herd of polled or short-horned cattle in the world is owned by Mr. McCombie, of Tillyfour, in Aberdeenshire. His farm embraces one thousand two hundred acres, devoted to raising this most perfect of all breeds, in its highest stage of perfection. The Queen honored him with a visit three weeks ago. In one park she inspected seventy cows and heifers, many of them prize-winners. In another field sixty black bullocks were grazing, worth not less than thirty pounds per head. These cattle are all black, which is the fashionable color. Fourteen cups and upward of a hundred medals were shown, and the value of all the prizes could not have been less than seven hundred guineas.

RITUALISM.

The Dean of Carlisle preached a sermon in the cathedral of that city recently on ritualism. It was a sequel to a discourse upon the same subject delivered in the cathedral on the previous Sunday. At the close of his argument the dean said if he had believed, with some fond and foolish people, that the divisions of the Church of England were only a slight squabble about a little decoration, about a little more music, a little more singing, a little more dress, he should consider it as "hay, straw and stubble," not worthy of consideration, but he believed, in the depths of his heart, this thing meant much more. He believed the nature of it was deep seated in the artifices of Satan, in the mysteries of iniquity and corruption. He would not say it was a work of the Church of Rome, but of the dark ages; and whether it be a part of the whole—every fragment of drapery, every unusual bowing and crossing of the hands, the taking of the Lord's Supper in the hollow of the hand, or bowing to the altar—it was downright idolatry. Why would a man, going down the steps of the communion table, bow to the table? He must believe there was something there. What was it? It was because he believed the elements of bread and wine had been turned into the body and blood of Christ; it was because he thought a sacrifice had been offered there. He believed that in all these things, which appeared to some childish, there was a certain thrusting out of a hand, which would lead by and by to a flower and fruit; and the seeds of superstition and darkness must be the result. These men were "causing division among us." Avoid them! Don't go near them; don't go, out of curiosity, to see their bedizened altars and their gorgeous vestments. It is all superstition and idolatry, the whole of it. He condemned no man individually; but inasmuch as those who represented that system reviled Protestantism—told them that their Protestant martyrs were merely political offenders—laughed at the Protestantism by virtue of which Victoria sits upon the throne, and by virtue of which he occupied that pulpit—he solemnly declared he believed ritualism to be a deep seated heresy, proving itself to be so by its stretching out its hands to go to its mother Rome, and to its sister, the Grecian Church, while it turned away from Protestantism. Protestantism was a protest against the very thing that ritualists wished to introduce. They asked for liberty; liberty to do what? Liberty to introduce popery into the Church of England. They should have no such liberty so far as all honest ministers of Christ could oppose them, by fair argument in open court, and by every means which God had given them. He had been watching them for these forty years; he had never ceased to do so, and with his dying breath he should do so still.—Christian Times.

THIRTY CENTURIES OLD.—The oldest relic of humanity extant is the skeleton of the earliest Pharaoh, incased in its original burial robes, and wonderfully perfect considering its age, which was deposited eighteen or twenty months ago in the British Museum, and is justly considered the most valuable of its archæological treasures. The lid of the coffin which contained the royal mummy was inscribed with the name of its occupant, Pharaoh Mykerinus, who succeeded the heir of the builder of the great pyramid, about ten centuries before Christ. Only think of it! The monarch whose crumbling bones and leathery integuments are now exciting the wonder of numerous gazers in London reigned in Egypt before Solomon was born, and about eleven centuries or so after Misraim, the grandson of old Father Noah and the first of the Pharaohs, had been gathered to his fathers! Why, the tide-mark of the deluge could scarcely have been obliterated, or the gopher-wood knee-timbers of the ark have rotted on Mount Ararat, when this man of the early world lived, moved and had his being. His flesh and blood were contemporary with the progenitors of the great patriarch! His bones and shriveled skin are contemporary with the nineteenth century, and the date of the Crucifixion is only about midway between his era and ours.

THE railway rolling-stock of Great Britain, if ranged in a line, would be headed by about fifty miles of locomotives and tenders, about one hundred miles of carriages, and eight hundred and fifty miles of freight, gravel, cattle and miscellaneous trucks.

AMONG the relics found by Lieut. Warren's exploring expedition, at work on the foundations of Jerusalem, has been a seal, with old Hebrew characters, showing it to have belonged to "Haggai, the son of Shebaniah." It is supposed to be of the age of Ezra.

District Meeting of the Camden District, Montgomery Conference.

Mr. Editor: The district meeting for the Camden District, Montgomery Conference, was held at Pineville, Oak Hill Circuit, July 10th to 12th. The people of the vicinity had been looking forward to the time with considerable interest, expecting, among other important events, the coming of a real bishop. There were old members of our church in this inland community who had never seen a bishop. They had often heard of them—had several times been asked to contribute something to their support—had excused themselves from any great liberality under the plea that the bishop's orbit tracks its course along railroads and navigable streams, taking in its sweep large cities and central villages. Now he was to tread ground never before trod by episcopal feet; and his advent and ministrations were looked for with an eagerness little appreciated by those accustomed to see and hear the great ones of the church. For miles around the people were ready to flock in to hear, and, we trust, to receive the gospel from one whom the church, by her episcopal consecration, had emphasized as a prince in Israel. The time came, and the bishop—did not. Of course we were greatly disappointed. The effect upon our meeting was doubtless deleterious.

Our district meeting was presided over with dignity and courtesy by the presiding elder, Rev. Anson West. All the pastoral charges were represented except one. Less than half the lay delegates were in attendance. The following committees were appointed:

1. On the Spiritual State of the Church. 2. On Sabbath Schools. 3. On the Support of the Ministry. 4. On Missions. 5. On the Relation of the Colored People to the Church. 6. On the Literature of the Church. 7. On Temperance. 8. On the Condition of the Church Property within the District. 9. To Nominate for Lay Representation in the Annual Conference.

All these committees—except the last—brought in reports full of facts of general interest. It would tax your columns too much to publish them all entire. I will, therefore, send for publication the report on the State of the Church, and a brief abstract of the others.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH WITHIN THE DISTRICT.

Your committee beg leave to report as follows: From the reports rendered from the different circuits on the district your committee is compelled to acknowledge that there is a spiritual dearth throughout its bounds, with one exception, where there seems to be some improvement. The causes of this dearth we conceive to be two, viz.:

1. The love of the world, showing itself in the frequent attendance of church members upon places of amusement, such as theaters, balls, circuses, pic-nics, etc., and their attempts to justify their conduct from the Scriptures.

2. Neglect of duties: such, as private and family prayer, reading the Scriptures, attendance upon public worship. It has been impossible with most of the preachers in the district to get the membership to attend, and become interested in the social meetings of the church. We simply regret that this state of things exists, and would be pleased to hear this district meeting devise some plan by which these evils may be removed, and our holy religion be made to take hold upon the hearts and minds of our people. All of which is respectfully submitted. [Signed by the committee.]

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The report shows that there are, within the district, nineteen schools, nineteen superintendents, sixty-five teachers, four hundred and ninety scholars, and one thousand two hundred and thirty volumes in library.

SUPPORT OF THE MINISTRY.

The report gives the stewards credit for being, in the main, liberal in their assessments; but wisely suggests that preachers cannot be supported upon assessment figures. It deplores the lack of liberality on the part of the membership, and refuses to recognize as adequate the excuses so rife for neglect of these concerned, true and talented men. It expresses the hope that a bountiful harvest, followed by energetic steward-labor, will bring the preachers a comfortable living; and closes by calling upon all the officiary to aid in the good work of giving to the ministry material encouragement to build up our Zion.

MISSIONS.

The report points to a large scope of country, stretching across and beyond the southern limits of the district, which has always been, and perhaps always will be, missionary ground. This region lies in the extreme southern portion of Alabama, and embraces a great portion of west Florida. The report assures us that within this region there are grown up men and women who have never heard a gospel sermon! It states that within this destitute country there is one mission belonging to this district, the Escambia, said to be in a hopeful condition. The local preachers are urged, by resolution, to devote the month of September to missionary labor, and the preachers in charge to preach to all their congregations on the subject of missions, and lift collections during the month of October.

THE RELATION OF THE COLORED PEOPLE TO THE CHURCH.

The report deplores the disturbing element common in the country, fostered by emissaries of the M. E. Church North. The colored people have, in some localities, deserted our altars; in others they remain steadfast. Some of the whites retain a culpable prejudice against our efforts to supply them with the pure gospel. This, however, is giving way. We hope the day is near when the M. E. Church South will repossess herself of these children of her missionary enterprise.

THE LITERATURE OF THE CHURCH.

The report expresses surprise to find the circulation of our church literature within the district so limited. It attempts to account for the fact in the deficiency of mail facilities, and then doubts whether the excuse is legitimate, since those localities which have mail facilities are but little in advance of those that have not. Forty copies of the Sunday School Visitor are taken, and about forty copies of our weeklies—the New Orleans Christian Advocate, our conference organ, having a smaller circulation than the Southern Christian Advocate.

TEMPERANCE.

The report deplores the prevalence of the intemperate use of "spirituous liquors," even among the members of our church—states that many drink to drunkenness. The preachers and all church officials are urged to proceed at once to cure the evil, or remove it from the church by expelling the guilty.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

The committee report thirty churches and a half interest in another, one parsonage, the titles to all of which are good—valued, in the aggregate, at $22,050.

The lay delegates to the annual conference are: Dr. J. M. Harrington, John Sampey, Rev. M. M. Graham and A. D. Hart. Alternates: J. S. Dudley and J. A. C. Horn.

These reports, Mr. Editor, made from the data furnished by the written reports of pastors and local preachers, show the condition of things on the district to be but little encouraging. Perhaps a less rigid regard to some facts, and a more liberal grouping together of others, would have given to them a fairer complexion; but it is folly to advertise the church in a healthful state when she is making no aggressive movement upon the world—when her membership are wanting in the fruits of piety. The first step in the treatment of a disease is to ascertain its cause, nature and locality; the next, to apply the proper remedy. We labored at our district meeting to make out a correct diagnosis; we return to our pastoral charges to attempt a cure. We hope, and from the animus of the meeting we may venture to predict, that there will be a marked change for the better in the district before the year closes.

The meeting was attended with some interest. The preaching was earnest and unctuous, and the love feast on Sabbath morning was truly a time of refreshing to many hearts. The meeting could have been protracted profitably, and would have been but for the feeble state of the pastor's health. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee."

E. S. Smith, Secretary.

MR. HOLMAN HUNT'S PAINTINGS.

NUMBER ONE.

Mr. Holman Hunt's "Isabel" is a miracle of disappointment; or rather—not to speak at random concerning an artist so laborious and so eminent—a miracle of labor and technical resource, and yet, as I venture to think all must agree, who will take the pains to study the beautiful poems of Keats quoted by the painter as the foundation of his picture, a total miscarriage in conception. The discrepancy, indeed, between the enormous power of the picture as a piece of hiting and almost terrible color on the one hand, and, on the other, the mingled vacancy and confusion, not to say chaos, in the main idea, and principally, of course, the face of the heroine, is so great as to leave the impartial spectator, after he has collected his wits and recovered from his first impressions, in something like amazement. It would almost seem as if, in the scaffolding of his subject, the painter had lost all command of the central idea. Prize-fighters, we know, lose vital power by excess of training; and I am involuntarily reminded of the story told by Washington Irving of the Dutchman who took a run of three miles to jump over a mountain, but found himself so out of breath when he got to the bottom that he sat down to walk over it at his leisure. Mr. Holman Hunt has taken a run of many miles through the details of his picture to arrive at his mountain, but how he got over, that is another matter. All this is strong language, I know, and I know quite well to what I expose myself. I know that I am criticising no tyro, but one of our most popular and finished painters—a master with an established reputation, with an army of enthusiastic admirers at his back, and with no less a swordsman than the great Mr. Ruskin himself as interpreter-general and lieutenant-commander of this, certainly I must admit, very imposing and by no means contemptible array. I know, also, that to meet so many Goliaths, so panoplied and equipped, I bring only a sling in one hand and a poem in the other, nor can I boast the poet's inspiration. However, perhaps a little common sense (I hope) and much conviction (I know) may stand me in some stead.

But, lest I should unnecessarily prejudice my readers against me before they have time to consider what I really have to say, let me disclaim all partisanship with schools, and sects and coteries. Any views of Mr. Holman Hunt's pictures which I may entertain have nothing to do with the question, whether he is, or was, or to what extent he may still be, or be not, a Pre-Raphaelite. I neither worship nor condemn the Pre-Raphaelites. As a baby-school of earnestness of purpose and conscientious detail they have unquestionably been of use to English art. They have also helped to blast the deepening groove of older conventionality, and lent new life and possibilities to future study and future discovery. Then, again, so far from being in any sense prepossessed against Mr. Hunt, I went to see this, his last picture, with such a recollection of his "Afterglow" in my mind, and such a din of recent praise from all the critics in my ears, that I wonder myself how I did not fall flat when, on entering the room, I found myself in front of the miraculous "Isabel." I really was prepared to do so.

Startled I certainly was, and greatly. But the gradual convalescence which followed the first impression resembled neither the effects of love nor the effects of admiration. The first impression was one of surprise (not the sudden pang of pity and extorted sympathy, even when coupled with some reprobation;) the second of puzzlement; the third of mingled technical wonder and technical pain; the last a complete and analytical dissatisfaction with the conception, coupled with increased wonder over the prodigious mechanical strength of the painter. Let any indifferent person, fond of pictures and accustomed to examine them, submit himself or herself to the ordeal of two or three visits to Mr. Holman Hunt's "Isabel," and say whether that is not in every case very much the sequence of his or her emotions.

However, when I confess that I greatly admire some of Mr. Holman Hunt's pictures, I must in common honesty not deny that I cannot, for instance, in spite of every wish, bring myself to like his pea-green Christ in the "Light of the World," with what seems to me an idiotic crown upon a pretty, weak, fashionable face, and a lantern in his hand, which always sets me thinking of a lantern carried once upon a time by a tall and amiable stable-boy of my father's, with a round cap upon his head. As for the title, the "Light of the World," it seems to me, with all deference, that the proper title would have been the "Light of Owls," for the picture is more suggestive of owls, and bats and moths, than of anything else; and one almost wonders why they are not seen flying round the lantern. In truth, this picture, apart from the painting, might, so far as the idea is concerned, with sundry modifications, have represented something or other in a fantastical way connected with a Midsummer Night's Dream. The subject itself was magnificent; the conception a mere effeminate conceit, sufficiently well calculated, no doubt, to disconcert those detractors who thought that Mr. Holman Hunt could paint nothing pretty. Then, again, Mr. Holman Hunt's "Christ Preaching in the Temple." Here we have another miracle of painting. But the conception is partly effeminate and—I really beg pardon for the word, there is positively no other—vulgar. It is difficult to say whether the conceited boy Christ, looking like a second-rate precocity, or the weak-visaged and fussy mother, is more distressing to the artistic sense. If these descriptions provoke the anger of my opponents, let me assure them that they need only read a little further to convince themselves how fully and how warmly I am disposed to do justice to Mr. Holman Hunt's extraordinary qualities. But in the meantime let me say very frankly, and very boldly, in the first place, that I find it difficult to conceive how educated men, who are not swayed by mere enthusiasm, can fail to see that the first picture is an effeminate and pretty crotchet, the second, by some inexplicable fatality, even vulgar—for Mr. Holman Hunt is certainly not a vulgar painter, whoever else may be so. This, however, is no argument; it is simply the assertion of an opinion. But in the next place I will say, with equal frankness, that the field of art belongs to us all, our common patrimony and ground of human recreation; and if conceptions are enthusiastically proclaimed by one party as divine, which to others are not merely indifferent, but really painful and, artistically speaking, offensive, the enthusiasts must not expect to monopolize the ground without a hand-to-hand fight, and a good many amicable blows. For my part, if the pleasures of art were confined to conceptions like those of the last two pictures, such pleasures would cease to have any existence. And it is the bias and direction given to taste by Mr. Hunt's enthusiasts which provoke opposition. Let me add, whoever else may suffer in the encounter, one thing is certain—Mr. Hunt will be the gainer; he, at all events, can afford to pat me on the back with complacency. He knows that he does not know me, and that I do not know him. Personal considerations in the matter there are none. The better he is abused the better his admirers will think of his pictures, whatever effect the criticism may have upon outsiders. So far, therefore, my conscience is at rest.

His "Afterglow," one of his most ambitious pictures, I really admire so sincerely that in this case, at least, I possibly out Holman Hunt the Holman Huntites. And why? Because, while the painting is almost equally marvelous, the subject is so simple (or rather the absence of subject) that no superadded conception is there to mar the exquisite beauty of the painting. The "Afterglow," however, is one of Mr. Holman Hunt's less familiar pictures; and I ought to give some slight account of it to recall it to the reader, inasmuch as all this is not mere random digression, but rather introductory to the main purport of the criticism. The "Afterglow," then, represents a harvest afternoon on the Nile. An Egyptian girl fills the centre of the canvas, and presents a full face to the spectator. She bears upon her head a sheaf of corn, upon which pigeons of gorgeous color, painted with power almost paralyzing to the eye, cluster, half clinging in half flight. In the foreground, at her feet, other pigeons hurry about as pigeons hurry, snatching up the falling grain. Behind, in the distance, a glow of long, flat, fertile Nile-land, with its sheaves and camels, and that ineffable hue of roses, mixed with gold, which unlocks the spectator's heart, puts him in a trance, and leaves him sadder when he comes to life again. And the girl? A prodigy of bronze and rich blood—blood of which, if Harvey had not discovered the circulation, the discovery would have been not Harvey's, but Holman Hunt's; and repose, and life, and lazy energy, pent up in a proud, sleek well of fire (I shall be told that I am praising Mr. Hunt very warmly—well, I think I have earned the right)—a picture which, if slavery had not been abolished, might abolish it, and bring twenty millions of sovereigns dancing out of slave-owning pockets. The poetry of lazy and lovely animalism, of life trembling on the verge just short of overflowing, untold possibilities of elementary enjoyments, an Egyptian wealth of half-hidden suggestion and half-revealed realities—all are there. And nothing beyond. No dramatic expression, no threads of thought, no struggle of moral forces, no subtle anatomy of the passions, blending or at war, no conflicting tides of civilized opinion—nothing, absolutely nothing but the naked poetry of proud, unsullied nature, clean realism, a glory of existence.

How different the theme in "Isabel!" How opposite upon any theory of representation whatsoever! Could painter hit upon a more intricate, a finer subject for analytic art, a more subtle and manifold crux and test of true conception and higher knowledge? Harrowing love; perverted gentleness; distorted idealism, twisted to the uses of a horrible craft and hideous satisfaction; mystery; a raging lust to snatch even death from out the hands of fate, to defy the grave; revenge as in hyper-delicate natures turned not outwardly upon others, but inwardly to self-torture; the lunacy of moral grief with intellectual self-possession; cold, slow, lasting passion in a frame burning fiercely unto death after the wild fever of a happy love, the wilder frenzy of bereavement; and all this in the nature alone capable of the highest forms of idealistic perversion—the nervous, delicate, fiery, headlong, restrained, yet simple all in all nature—ice without, volcano within—is this Mr. Holman Hunt's conception? The answer is that Mr. Hunt's "Isabel" has all the health, all the vigorous superabundant animalism of his Egyptian girl in the "Afterglow;" that is to say, without quite the same animal gloss, the same, if I may use the expression, animal sheen and brilliancy. Both are splendid animals, but one a pleasing animal, the other marred by an effort to embody some sort of meaning which is utterly foreign to her nature.—Bernard Cracroft in Fortnightly Review.

THE APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION.

"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen."—2 Cor. xiii, 14.

The order in which the three Persons of the Trinity are here mentioned is remarkable. It is not what we might have been inclined to anticipate. We should have expected to find first the Father named, then the Son, and then the Holy Ghost, as in some other passages of Scripture, and as the relation in which we are taught the three Divine Persons stand to each other naturally suggests. But a little consideration leads us to discover a beautiful and satisfactory reason for that seeming inversion of order which occurs in this text. The apostle is speaking to sinners who are by nature in a state of alienation from God. They cannot, except through a Mediator, attain to the enjoyment of his love. They need to be introduced to his favor through the Lord Jesus Christ. And hence, remembering, as it were, the Saviour's own declaration, "No man cometh to the Father but by me," St. Paul adopts that special order of benediction which presents itself in this passage: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen." The first blessing invoked is "the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ." By this grace is here meant all the favor which the Son of God, as Saviour, bears to his people. And may we not well speak, in reference to this matter, of "the unsearchable riches of Christ?" How impossible is it to estimate or describe all the privileges which, in time and eternity, flow from the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ to his people. We know some of the outward manifestations of this grace which were made in the earthly history of the Saviour—"Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor." Grace—unmerited kindness toward sinners—led him to the manger of Bethlehem, the garden of Gethsemane, the Cross of Calvary. And thus he purchased for his people redemption; thus he secured their admittance into heaven; thus he procured for them a heritage of glory throughout eternity. But precious as are the streams thus flowing from the grace of Christ, it must be far more to have access to the fountain, and to be made partakers of the grace itself. This is what the apostle prays for in this passage. He would have the souls of believers enriched more and more from the infinite love of their Redeemer. Pardoned and accepted in the beloved, let us therefore seek now to know something of the grace of Christ, and then more and more joy will flow from it into our souls for ever and ever. The next blessing sought is "the love of God." In one sense, and that a most precious one, the love of God, that is the Father, is the primary source of all our hopes. It was this love that originated the scheme of salvation. God looked upon us in pity as we lay dead in sin. His heart yearned over us, and desired our restoration to happiness. He devised the wondrous scheme of redemption in our behalf. He "spared not his own Son," when through him alone we could be saved, but "gave him up for us all." He "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." But, in another sense, already hinted at, it is only through Christ that we attain to the possession of our heavenly Father's love. By nature there stands between us and him the awful barrier of our guilt. That cuts us off from communion with him, and debars us from the privileges of his children. Only through Christ can we be brought nigh, the dark cloud of transgression being dispelled, and the light of God's reconciled countenance being graciously lifted up upon us. Now, it is this special love of God which the apostle here implores for all true believers. They should share in far more than that general benignity which God has displayed toward all sinners in the gospel. Theirs should be the rich enjoyment of that "favor which God beareth toward his people." He loves them in Christ with an infinite, everlasting love. He looks upon them with all the tenderness which a parent feels for his children. They are dear to his heart, because they are one with the Son of his love, and his tender mercy will crown them with blessings on earth, will surround them with glory in heaven. What an unspeakable privilege must it be to share in the love of God as thus displayed! Language could not have furnished the apostle with any loftier wish for believers than that which is here expressed. To possess the love of God is to have the one thing necessary to happiness—a happiness that can never fade, but will increase for ever and ever. Oh, let every one seek to share in this love! It is ensured to all them that believe. It will brighten the course of every true follower of Jesus in this world, and it will pour itself forth in an endless stream of blessedness on every saint in heaven. The third blessing here prayed for in behalf of all true Christians, is 'the communion of the Holy Ghost.' By this is meant that all believers are to be partakers of the Holy Spirit of God, and acquire more and more of that grace which results from his indwelling in the soul. It is the Spirit that unites us to Christ at first. It is he also that enables us henceforth to keep up communion with the Saviour, and thus to advance in all the graces of the Christian life. Most vital and precious, then, is the prayer that we should enjoy 'the communion of the Holy Ghost.' That includes our renewal, our enlightenment, our progressive sanctification, our peace of conscience, our comfort under trial, and our final meetness for heaven. Happy is that soul which is thus a partaker of the Holy Ghost, for God has himself 'sealed' it and given it the Spirit as an 'earnest' of coming glory. The three elements of blessing here mentioned form, in fact, but one benediction, so that none of them can be possessed except along with the others. And the one last mentioned furnishes us with an unerring test as to whether or not we can claim the others. Do we know anything of 'the communion of the Holy Ghost?' Have we been enlightened by him to perceive our guilt and danger in the sight of God? Have we followed his guidance as he sought to lead us to the cross? Are we growing in grace under his holy influence? Do we desire, more and more, to attain to that purity which he fosters in the heart? If so, but not otherwise, we may warrantably conclude that we share both in 'the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ,' and in the 'love of God,' and that ours will be the portion of the redeemed for ever. What a blessed doctrine is that of the Holy Trinity as revealed in Scripture. It shows us all the three Divine Persons interested in our welfare and engaged in the work of our salvation. The Father loves us, and provides, at an infinite cost, for our deliverance. The Son dies for us, and thus procures in our behalf 'eternal redemption.' The Spirit quickens and sanctifies us—frees us from the natural pollution by which we are defiled, and fits us for the pure enjoyments of heaven. Oh! that every reader may enjoy through faith this great salvation; so that he may feel there is breathed over him, as over the vast community of all true believers, this precious apostolic benediction, 'The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.'

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1868.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

THE RELIGIOUS WEEK.

It will be remembered that our bishops, at their meeting in April, appointed the last week in August to be observed throughout the connection by a protracted meeting, as a period specially of prayer and of preaching the word, to implore the blessing of God upon the Methodist Episcopal Church South, that he would pour out upon it his Holy Spirit in power. The Friday of that week is directed to be observed also as a fast day.

We hope that in every circuit and station of our church the people will assemble at their churches and around their altars, and with united faith approach the Father of Mercies that he may enrich us with his bounty.

BISHOP PAINE'S HEALTH IMPROVING.—The Memphis Christian Advocate, July 30th, says: "The news from Bishop Paine will be read with the greatest pleasure, and with thanks to Almighty God. The Rev. J. W. Mathis writes from Aberdeen, Mississippi, July 25: 'I am happy to inform you that our belovod Bishop Paine is much better. He commenced improving on last Sabbath. It seemed as if he had just then awakened out of sleep—recognizing parties present, and asking how long they had been there. During the week he has been conversing very pleasantly and fully with all who have called on him, and has been sitting up for several days. His improvement is as unexpected as was his illness. We hope the change is permanent, and will continue until his health is fully restored.'"

THE church and state are likely to come into open conflict in Austria. The Prince Archbishop of Olmutz has issued a circular to the clergy of his diocese, in which he instructs them that civil marriages, and civil tribunals for the settlement of matrimonial questions, cannot be recognized by the church. "Catholics who enter into a so-called civil marriage, if they do not repent and give satisfaction, shall be denied the sacraments and Christian burial." If burials are forced in consecrated ground, the church yard is to be considered as desecrated, and not again entered by a priest till consecrated anew.

HOPE TO THE END.

A Christian should be the most hopeful man in the world; and if he is a sound, healthy follower of his Lord he will be. It takes two worlds to make one good one: this world and the world of promise. Blended, they constitute a stage upon which an angel might afford to take a part; but this world by itself is dreary enough—a hopeless region, that to heavenly spirits must appear much as the cinders of Gomorrah to us. The eye of faith is a sort of angel's eye, and it can see the light of the glory with which all the promises are charged, as it hangs over this world like the descending Jerusalem was suspended in the field of St. John's vision. Its beams lighten up the dark corners of earth, present and future, and bathe its roughest places in fresh springing tides of mellow light as they pour from the open gates of heaven, until to us, who have never been there, earth itself seems heaven. It is all in the light—all the beauty of this lower world. We became persuaded of that when, in looking through a strong microscope, we saw upon the body of a common fly a point as brilliant as the evening star. With the right light—such for instance, as the "saints in light" have—there is no lower earth, nothing common, no dwelling place for sorrow; for where there is no darkness there is no despair, and "in Him is no darkness at all."

This art of looking at everything by the light of the promises belongs to all who have true faith in the Son of God. They know that the grandest part of his career lies in the demonstrative future. Then all that he has done will be seen as the seed is, not in the clod nor in the blade, but in the harvest. The latter revelation of the sufficiency of his atonement, of the power of his Spirit, and of his complete victory over the tempter, will be the crowning evidence of his Sonship. It is from the person of the glorified Saviour that all this light of hope is soon to come. He is the Light. Without Christ this life is dark enough. There is no way out. Every moment only complicates the problem. Corruption is so complete, so universal, its brow so aspiring, its foot so deep, the history of ambition and sin so uniform, and its position is still so impregnable, that a new earth seems an impossibility; though a new heaven might be—for the stars of the sky are not so fixed as the stains of the earth.

—Indeed there are some good people who cut short the whole matter by affirming that the increase of evil is the shortest way to a restored Eden. By giving up the battle till Christ comes in person, the necessity for his coming will be shown. This paralyzing doctrine be far from thee, O reader! That is but a poor faith which waits for the visible Lord—"blessed are they who have not seen, yet have believed." Such idealistic believers surely do not contemplate, as they should, how small a part of those magazines of life—the promises—have been as yet opened; those wonderful gold solvents that hold the riches of glory, all of which are to yield to faith, and to faith only; to be "yea and amen" by us as well as for us. No doubt a glorified Lord could obviate this; and indeed all share in the great enterprise of renovating earth; but the world is to be renewed, not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord Almighty.

Without Christ there is a boundless impassibility between this earth and every heavenly thing. The drunkard's cup cannot be broken, the miser's clutch cannot be relaxed, and bitter revenge is as sweet to the natural man as meat is to a lion. The bare view of humanity is enough to fill us with despair; "with men it is impossible." But when, on the other hand, the mighty advocacy of the exalted Saviour is considered, and the strong wing of the creative Spirit is seen moving upon this moral chaos, who can stagger at a promise because of its largeness? If THEY are at work, the Father, the Son and the Spirit, we can afford to live in all the fullness of hope. In a moment a nation can rise, by one blast a valley of bones move, a single turn can unlock every gate. And when we see that earth is carried on, as it was first made, for Christ, we may fix our eye upon him as a part of it, and, by believing in the God of hope, abound in joy and peace.

ALWAYS LIVELY.

A thorough "circuit rider," i. e., an itinerant, who does his whole duty, remarked to us that he did not give away nigh so much tobacco on his rounds now as formerly—times were so hard—but gave away old ADVOCATES and Sunday School Visitors. "Only one side," said he, "of an ADVOCATE dies; the rest of it never dies." Some time ago he handed a brother a paper of 1860, which he read with much interest until he saw the date. "Why this is 1860!" "Yes, that's so; but now read it, and you'll find it's just as lively as ever—all but one page." "I never," he continued, "tore up an ADVOCATE. Common newspapers get stale, but the greater part of the reading of a religious paper will keep fresh for years. I often wish for bundles of them to give to the young people one meets along the road." [Very few men under forty years of age have that much sense!] This brother belongs to the working parts of itinerants—a man that stirs around and can make a fire as quick as St. Paul or Melita.

SOUTHERN REVIEW FOR JULY.—Baltimore: Bledsoe & Brown; pp. 248. This admirable number leads off with an article on "Public School Education at the North." The tremendous conceit of the North always stands at 212 degrees Fahrenheit at the contemplation of their own school system. They are surprised at themselves—and it is so different in South and North Carolina! This school superiority accounts for the otherwise insoluble problem of Northern military prowess: "It is the grand mission of education both to fire the heart with patriotic love and devotion, and to arm the soldier with more than musket and bayonet." This end of education is quite a novelty. So, too, is another end which the Illinois school system is rapidly accomplishing—that of indoctrinating thousands in practical atheism. This article most ably sets forth the true aim of education, and the evil consequences, moral and political, with which their boasted school system threatens the whole country.

The next article, "Shakespeare's Personal History," presents a great deal of new information upon the sources of Shakespeare's wonderful knowledge. When it is stated that Edmund Spenser, Ben Jonson, Fletcher Marlowe, Beaumont, Middleton, Massinger, Raleigh and Pembroke were his cotemporaries, not to mention many other travelers and scholars of renown, we have some clue to the varied and harmonious development of the great poet. Much insight is given by the writer to the hidden influences which conspired to the shaping of this representative man. The third article, entitled "Congress and the Constitution," collates the acts of Congress, since the war, with those principles which have always been supposed to lie at the foundation of all free governments, and as such were incorporated into the Constitution of the United States. It brings in review that legislation which has annulled the constitutions of ten States, degraded them into military districts, declared martial law, put them under army subalterns, qualified and disqualified voters, and thus radically overturned the institutions of the nation.

The remaining articles of this number we cite by title, with the remark that we have found each replete with wisdom and cultivation of the highest order: Apollonius of Tyana, The State of Nature, Landscape Painting, The Gorbemochian Ideal of Government, Mr. Bancroft as a Historian, Book Notices. We predict that all this Quarterly requires to make it a grand success is, that a good crop of cotton and corn shall be made this year throughout the South, when it will command a subscription list larger than any periodical review has ever had in this country.

THE "DRY ROT."

The Western Christian Advocate makes up a small weekly news summary, entitled "Methodist Episcopal Church South," of which the subjoined is a fair specimen. The Northern Advocates have adopted the policy of ignoring, as far as possible, the existence of all church papers and all periodicals published in the South. For instance, the scholarly quarterly of Northern Methodism, in its list of American quarterlies, makes no mention of the Southern Review! We suppose it barely possible to survive such withering silence, and the lack of such encouragement as those able divines and polished writers could give by an occasional notice must at last work a disastrous melancholy in somebody. This policy had kept the editor of the Western Christian Advocate so completely in the dark that when recently he came to the tripod he could not restrain his surprise at the number, the vitality and rigorous temper of the Southern Christian Advocates. He is shocked morally, and distressed religiously and politically at their existence and tone; and when he does quote from them it is with some wholesome remark explanatory, mayhap corrective, of the passage itself—to wit:

"METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

"Views of Bishop Pierce.—In order to let our people know how the Southern bishops think and talk of our work in the Southern States, and to illustrate the spirit they exhibit, we give the following extract from a letter from Bishop Pierce, published in the Nashville Christian Advocate of July 14th:

'Somerset is a new district, and the presiding elder, Brother Bosley, has a hard time—having long horseback rides, little ministerial help, and some division among the people as to South and North. This last is "a sore evil," not as to its extent or probable duration, but as a fact representing the spirit and policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The whole movement of our ex-brethren in the South is not only a crime against Christianity, but it will turn out a serious blunder in policy—a waste of treasure, and an utter loss of time and labor. The scheme is smitten with the dry rot already, and will crumble ere long into a shapeless mass, which no ingenuity can reconstruct. The day is not distant when they will have houses without congregations, pastors without flocks—abandoned by white and black, their wicked experiment an ignominious failure, and the memory of it a sting—an enduring shame.'"

The Western brother wished to "illustrate the spirit they exhibit." Truly a sad sight, such an earthly spirit! and such earthly words, too—the "dry rot!"—Did the bishop reflect of whom he is speaking, in what a presence of power, of centennial wealth, of ecclesiastical loyalty he is found prophesying? The distance from home at which this "dry rot" is "already" going on makes it quite inconceivable to the Western editor; but down here we can understand it; and we have only to state that two districts of the Northern Mission, Mississippi Conference, its one theological institute, its one Advocate and the principal white congregation in this city, consisting of twenty hearers, are all filled, presided over, edited and kept up by one white preacher, and that his name is Dissy, to enable everybody in southern Louisiana to fully understand the expression. In fact, no other word could have so justly described the situation of Northern Methodism in the Southwest.

But what of that eloquent exhibit at the General Conference of Chicago, which caused an alternate glow of gratitude, and the "cold chills" of patriotic fervor to run down the back of its Church Extension and its Missionary secretaries? Ask the ex presiding elder—gone to Kalimazoo. What congregations live are hardly "ghosts of a congregation," because they are not white enough to be the ghost of anything. Now that Louisiana has become a real State, and the military is no longer available for religious purposes, the people are awaiting the return of those divines who have all along shown such devotion to everybody else's affairs with considerable patience. There will be a fair chance to know more accurately, as the Western editor would say, the spirit of these men. The field will demand several degrees of zeal in addition to anything yet displayed by the strange brother. He will need more money in his purse, and a larger scrip than ever before. Even the colored people wat not what is become of him. They are quite ready to fall off from men whose missionary labors are quite eclipsed by their performances as managers of colored clubs and primary political combinations.

Centenary College Programme.

The editor of this ADVOCATE writes so hurriedly, at times, that names and ideas get terribly murdered in print. We republish, by request, the commencement programme of Centenary, so as to do justice to history and posterity. It is as follows: Hope, Lighthouse of the Soul, S. S. Norwood, Jackson, Louisiana; Improve the Moments ere they Vanish, T. N. L. Anderson, Amite county, Mississippi; The Chivalry of the Age, J. L. Perkins, East Feliciana parish, Louisiana; Scientia Pabulum Animi, T. S. Miller, Jackson, Louisiana; From the Sea of Darkness Emerges the Star of Grandeur, W. Y. Dixon, Jackson, Louisiana; Our Relation to Republicanism, C. B. Collins, East Feliciana parish, Louisiana; Sola Mens Eterna, a poem, C. Parlange, New Orleans, Louisiana.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

THE TIME OF MEETING.

MR. EDITOR: We see that the meeting of the Jackson district, now in session, intends deciding the question of changing the time of the meeting of our conference. We do not know, of course, what will be their decision. We cannot, however, recognize any action they may take, and cannot approve a change for the following reasons:

1. We do not recognize the right of any district, or limited body of men, to assume the decision of a question of general interest.

2. We have not received timely notice of the intended action.

3. We have received no notice at all through our official organ, and do not consider a notice otherwise given as valid.

4. We consider this agitation, from its origin, exceedingly disrespectful to our bishops, as it interferes with prerogatives exclusively theirs.

5. These changes have already been detrimental to our cause in throwing out of work, for a whole year, and otherwise greatly injuring some of our best and most useful men.

6. This course will result in endless confusion. It is a thing unknown in any well regulated conference; is exceedingly puerile in its nature, and a stigma upon our character, which we are determined, now and forever, to put our feet upon.

7. We have never seen, and cannot now see, any reason for the change.

8. We claim that the 18th of November is the time of holding the conference, in accordance with Bishop Kavanaugh's late instructions to Mr. Abbey. He submitted the matter to the members of the conference. This conference has long since decided to leave that matter in the hands of the bishop presiding, and whatever time he published should be the time observed. This time has been published and even if Bishop Kavanaugh has a right to submit the matter to the conference again, it will be impossible for the conference to come together before the 18th of November, unless Bishop Kavanaugh, or some one else having authority, will come and, with due and timely notice, call it together.

Respectfully and fraternally,

W. FISK GLENN,
WM. B. JOHNSON,
JOHN A. B. JONES,
J. G. JONES,
THOS. REED,
Lay Delegates.

ISMAN MISSIONS.—Bishop Marvin publishes in the St. Louis Christian Advocate an acknowledgment of all funds received by him in aid of the Indian missions—aggregating $4,784 49. He had assumed the responsibility of collecting $5,000 during the year, and now, as he is about to begin his episcopal visitation to the Pacific coast, he asks the Missouri and St. Louis Conferences to divide the deficiency of $215 51 between them, and raise it at their anniversaries this fall. They will of course comply with this request of the bishop, who has certainly done nobly for the brethren of the Indian missions.

In the bounds of our circulation, Bishop Marvin reports the following collections:

Wesley church, Memphis	$281 23
Central church, Memphis	82 70
Asbury church, Memphis	13 38
Jackson, Tenn.	60 20
Fayetteville, Ark.	26 00
Van Buren, Ark.	3 00
Miss Steele, Ark.	1 00
Mrs. Slover, Ark.	5 00

The bishop says an explanation is due Asbury church. Many members, when he made the collection in that church, had already contributed, either at Central or Wesley. The largest portion, by far, of the moneys collected by the bishop came from Missouri, where, for the most part, he made his appeals in person.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

Price, $2 per year.

THE following, from a late speech of General Wade Hampton, shows the manner in which Congress now applies the reconstruction laws:

In the Legislature of South Carolina, composed of one hundred and fifty-six members—of that Legislature from whose halls used to go as high intellect as ever came to the halls of Congress—of those one hundred and fifty six members there are nearly, if not quite, now, one hundred negroes. [Hisses and cries of "shame."] From these negroes, and all of that Legislature, the whole taxes that they are liable to pay amounts to seven hundred dollars. ["Oh, oh"] Of that, about five hundred dollars has to be paid by one of the Conservative members. Of the two hundred dollars that are to be paid by the negroes and carpet baggers, half of it is under execution. [Applause and laughter.] Well, that Legislature, composed in that way, has the right to impose a levy or tax on South Carolina to the amount of $10,250,000. [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, if that state of things goes on, what will be the result? Why you know it means that in a few years from this time there will not be a white man, woman or child in the State of South Carolina. [Cries of "shame."] I only mention that as one of the Southern States. It is true that it is perhaps in a worse condition than most of the others, but they are all afflicted by that fearful calamity that is hanging over us, and we can have no relief unless the Democratic party will come out and pledge itself that we shall have a fair election—that the white people of the South vote.

DEMOCRATIC PROSPECTS.—Opinion of Judge Chase.—The New York correspondent of the Louisville Courier recently held an interview with Chief Justice Chase, from whom the subjoined opinions were elicited:

'As to the results in November next, he fully expresses his conviction that the chances are decidedly in favor of the Democratic nominees—provided there is no cheating round the board. The Edmunds bill, regulating the Southern electoral votes, he looks upon as a foreshadowing of foul play, and the Democrats are advised to keep their eyes on it accordingly. Blair's letter, he says, is simply up to the exigencies of the times. He sees nothing revolutionary in it. On the contrary he is inclined to think that it aims to stop the revolution, which the admission of carpet bag Senators is undoubtedly working in our form of government. The letter, hence, will do no harm, but possibly much good if it restrains the Jacobins from further outrages, by indicating what the future has in store for them.'

BURIED TREASURES FOUND.—We copy as follows from the Galveston Civilian of the 27th:

To purser M. D. Monserrate, of the steamship St. Mary, we are indebted for the following account of "buried treasures" recently found on Padre Island. We saw some of the diamonds ourselves, and from the well and favorably known character of our informant, for truth and veracity, we have no hesitation in saying that we believe the account to be substantially correct:

On Sunday, the 19th inst., as Mr. W. H. Wilson, quartermaster's clerk at Brazos de Santiago, was taking a stroll on Padre Island, searching for "Shells of old Ocean," he accidentally stumbled on to an old iron-box, about four inches square, which presented the appearance of having long been imbedded in the sand. Upon breaking it open, and an examination of its contents, it was found to contain diamonds, emeralds and rubies, supposed by the best of judges to be worth at least $100,000. Mr. Monsarrate says there is no doubt of their being genuine. The poor quartermaster's clerk is in ecstacies, and is said to be one of the most popular men on the Rio Grande. He now has friends without number, and men who would scarcely notice him two weeks ago are now his most intimate friends and advisers. "Such is life."

STRANGE HALLUCINATION.—A strange and surprising incident occurred last week in the country some miles north of Corinth. A Mr. Mangrum killed a young man during the war, and a few days since Mr. Mangrum was on a deer drive, and while at one of the stands he saw an object approaching him which so alarmed him that he raised his gun and fired at it. The object, which resembled a man covered with a sheet, continued to advance upon him, when he drew his pistols and emptied all the barrels at the ghost. None of the shots seeming to take effect, he climbed a tree to make his escape. By the time he was a short distance up the tree the white object was standing under him with its eyes fixed upon him, and he declared that it was the spirit of the young man whom he had killed. Mangrum was so startled at the steady gaze of the eye that he had been the cause of laying cold in death, that he fainted and fell from the tree. His friends carried him home, the ghost following and standing before him constantly, the sight of which brought up the recollection of his guilt with such force to his mind that he died in great agony after two or three days' suffering.—Corinth (Miss.) Caucasian.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIE HARRIS, son of Rev. W. S. and Mrs. M. A. Turner, died of cholera infantum, in Dadeville, Alabama, on Sunday morning, July 26, 1868, aged eleven months, twenty-two days and three hours.

"Hope looks beyond the bounds of time,
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in full, immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

BENNETT M. HINES was born in Albemarle county, Virginia, on the 23d of May, 1790. When he was but a youth he came to East Tennessee with his parents, John and Frances Hines. Thence they moved to Kentucky, and subsequently he came to Mississippi. Here the most of his life was spent in the vicinity of Port Gibson, and in that of Vicksburg and in Bolivar county. The last eight or nine years of his life, however, were spent in north Louisiana. At the residence of Col. R. L. Capers, his son-in-law, near Homer, Claiborne parish, he closed a long life of three score and seventeen years, and gave up his soul to God, entering upon that eternal rest prepared for the people of God.

In his early manhood he united in marriage with Ruth Newman, near Natchez, Mississippi. From this marriage several children sprung, only two of whom survive. In 1832 or 1833 his wife died. He subsequently married Mrs. Rebecca Roland, of Warren county, Mississippi, who survives him.

Our friend and brother, B. M. Hines, was a good man, not by nature, but by grace. The foundation of this was laid in his clear, sound conversion to God at a camp meeting, held in Warren county, Mississippi, when he was in the early vigor of manhood. He had been reared by pious parents, and learned from them, by precept and example, those great lessons which, when properly heeded and followed, lead, in penitence and faith, to God. But precept and example cannot make Christians of those whose natures are tainted with depravity and guilt. The true and only foundation for real goodness must be laid in that great change of heart set forth in the language of our Saviour: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." This work is of such magnitude that no human or angelic agency or instrumentality can accomplish it. It is the immediate and direct work of that omnific and creative energy which spoke man into existence, called the worlds from nought, and gave splendor to their suns.

But we are plainly taught in the Bible that God has inseparably joined doctrinal and practical Christianity. There must not only be a foundation, but a superstructure reared upon it. When soundly converted we must "add to our faith virtue, knowledge, charity," etc., must "build ourselves up on our most holy faith, and keep ourselves in the love of God," "learning the doctrine of Christ, and go on to perfection," etc. A good man will not disjoin what God has joined. Our friend and brother, B. M. Hines, was a practical Christian. He seems not to have lost sight of his duty and responsibility in the various relations of life, whether at home in his family, on the plantation among his servants, or in the offices which he filled, from that of a magistrate to a legislator. He visited the sick and needy, and ministered to their wants, opened his hands and purse to the great enterprises and charities of the church, and as a steward loved the church and preachers, and saw those ministers sent to serve his circuit provided with homes and the necessaries of life, and that frequently in his own house and at his own table.

But good men know how to suffer, as well as do the will of God. Practical Christianity may be summed up in doing and suffering the will of God. So the subject of this brief sketch bore the afflictions and fiery trials through which his pathway led as a good man, patiently and submissively. The beauty and excellence of Christianity lies, to a large extent, in its great power to convert the afflictions and trials of life into blessings, to make straight the crooked and smooth the rough places of life, and at last to throw a halo of light into the darkness of the grave, and gild with beauty and splendor the clouds which lie beyond. It furnishes, too, a safe and cheerful passage through the valley and shadow of death, to that home and rest and those delectable enjoyments prepared for the redeemed and good.

These benefits were vouchsafed to B. M. Hines. Though he suffered much, just before he died God lifted the curtain and showed him his inheritance, and while his mind was musing on its splendors, and satisfied with its wealth, he was asked what he wanted. He replied: "Nothing but what is just before me." It has been said by a friend who wrote of his death: "As a Christian gentleman Brother Hines' record is unfurnished. He suffered long and severely, but bore all without a murmur, and died with the unclouded hope of heaven sustaining him to the last."

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate
Is privileged beyond the common walk
Of virtuous life, quite on the verge of heaven.
For here resistless demonstration dwells;
A death-bed's a detection of the heart:
You see the man, you see his hold on heaven
If sound his virtue.

"Heaven waits not the last moment—owns her friends
On this side death, and points them out to men:
A lecture silent, but of sovereign power!
To vice confusion, and to virtue peace.
Whatever farce the boastful hero plays,
Virtue alone has majesty in death,
And greater still the more the tyrant frowns."

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

DEAR BRETHREN—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed, Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date an answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE,

FOR PROMOTING THE GROWTH of and beautifying the Hair, and rendering it dark and glossy.

The Cocoaine holds, in a liquid form, a large proportion of deodorized Cocoanut Oil, prepared expressly for this purpose. No other compound possesses the peculiar properties which so exactly suit the various conditions of the human hair.

LOSS OF HAIR.

MESSRS. JOSEPH BURNETT & CO.:—I cannot refuse to state the salutary effect in my own aggravated case, of your excellent Hair Oil—Cocoaine.

For many months my hair had been falling off, until I was fearful of losing it entirely.—The skin upon my head became gradually more and more inflamed, so that I could not touch it without pain.

By the advice of my physician, to whom you had shown your process of purifying the Oil, I commenced its use the last week in June. The first application allayed the itching and irritation. In three or four days the redness and tenderness disappeared, the hair ceased to fall, and I have now a thick growth of new hair.

Your's, very truly,
SUSAN R. POPE.

A REMARKABLE CASE.

EAST MIDDLEBORO', Mass., June 9, '68.

MESSRS. BURNETT & CO.:—I send you a statement of my daughter's case, as requested. She will have been sick six years if she lives until the 1st of August next.

When her hair came off she had been afflicted with neuralgia in her head for three years. She had used, during that time, many powerful applications. These, with the intense heat caused by the palas, burned her hair so badly that, in October, 1861, it all came off, and for two years after her head was as smooth as her face.

Through the recommendation of a friend she was induced to try your Cocoaine, and the result was astonishing. She had not used half the contents of a bottle before her head was covered with a fine young hair. In four months the hair has grown several inches in length, very thick, soft and fine, and of a darker color than former y. She still continues to use the Cocoaine, and we have little fear of her losing her hair. With respect,
WM. S. EODY.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE is the best and cheapest hair dressing in the world. It promotes the growth of the Hair, and is entirely free from all irritating matter.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIaney of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates cruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease; hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. HELMBOLD.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

H. T. HELMBOLD, druggist, of eighteen years' experience, and manufacturer of Helmbold's Genuine Preparations.

Principal Depots—Helmbold's Drug and Chemical Warehouse, No. 594 Broadway, New York, next Metropolitan Hotel; and Helmbold's Medical Depot, No. 104 South Tenth street, Philadelphia.

EUREKA.

EUREKA, THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.—Dr. Van Zandt, one of the oldest and best physicians of St. Louis, has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair, preventing its falling off by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the Eureka, and you will not be disappointed. It is for sale by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle. Manufactured by

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

MAGGIE'S PATH TO CLOUDLAND.

BY H. K. P.

Sauntering in the meadow,
Peeping o'er the hedge,
I spied a little hat
With broad and ragged edge.

Tangled curls beneath it,
In many a clustering maze,
And peering bright between them
A merry, sunny gaze.

Looking up to heaven,
Watching cloudlets white,
Moving on so lazily
With soft and mellow light.

Maggie's blue eyes gazing,
Beautiful to see;
Her fat, brown hands upraising,
Her sweet words: "Come to me.

"Come down, little cloudlets,
I'll catch you in the grass;
But now you're far above me,
I have to let you pass."

In her childlike eagerness
She sprang upon her feet,
And bounded to the lowland,
Where brook and meadow meet.

Singing, all the grassy way,
To the clouds above,
Begging them to come to her
In tones of pleading love.

Suddenly her blue eyes
Wandered to the brook;
A cry of joy: "They've come, they've come,
How sweet and bright they look."

Like a flock of fleecy lambs
Enticing her along,
They sailed upon the water
With low and rippling song.

A merry shout of laughter;
Sunshine beaming in her face;
Two bare feet splashing after;
Clouds and Maggie ran a race.

Childhood rare! childhood sweet!
Finding joys for every day,
Where the skies and waters meet,
Where bare feet and brooklets play.

Thus, lingering in the meadow,
Watching Maggie's spree,
I thought: Were I a child again
My heaven would come to me.

Trades and Professions of Animals, Birds and Insects.

BY AMICA.

'Our subject this evening will be 'hunters,' said Mr. Lee, 'and of course you know that a great many animals live by hunting, and you all know something of that mighty hunter, the lion, king of the forest as he is called, and of the tiger, scarcely less terrible to man and beast, for so strong is he that he can throw a buffalo over his shoulder and trot off with him, and with one slap of his paw can kill a cow. But many animals, in hunting, resort to strategem, and I must tell you of some of their cunning tricks. You perhaps know that wolves generally go out hunting in large parties, and—'

'Oh, papa,' said Annie, 'I hate to hear about wolves; Hugh has been reading to me about persons traveling in Russia, and wolves following the carriages, and tearing and eating the poor people in them.'

'Yes, they are indeed very fierce and terrible creatures, but I have read of several instances of their being tamed. A lady once had a pet wolf, as gentle as a little dog, and so fond of her that once she went from home for several weeks, and during her absence he showed the deepest grief. When she returned, as soon as he heard her footsteps, he ran to her in an ecstasy of delight, sprang up, putting his feet on her shoulder and then fell down and died of joy. But I was about to say that when a hunting party of wolves is in pursuit of a deer, or any animal fleeter than themselves, they surround him and drive him on toward some steep precipice, gradually narrowing the circle as they approach the edge, then setting up a terrible yell, the poor frightened animal springs down upon the rocks below, and is dashed to pieces. They all then soon scramble down and feast upon him. Esquimaux dogs and wolves look very much alike; but this does not prevent the wolves from relishing a bit of dog meat, when they cannot do better; and when they go out dog hunting they show a great deal of cunning and deceit. They will play and gambol about till the real dogs think they have met up with a set of very sociable and friendly dogs, anxious for their acquaintance; and, falling into the snare, join in the frolic and are soon seized and, dragged off. You see from this, children, that it is not every one who is ready for a frolic with you, who is a suitable acquaintance; so take care how you choose your companions.'

'Why those dogs are like little Red Riding Hood, papa,' said Annie, 'for she ought to have gone where her mother sent her, you know, instead of stopping to talk to the bad old wolf.'

'Yes, that she ought. Well, the bear—clumsy old hunter that he is—resorts to strategem too. A traveler in the Arctic regions relates that he saw a bear swim cautiously up to a piece of ice, on which two female walruses and their young ones were sleeping. Then creeping upon a hammock of ice behind them, and carrying up a block of ice that he had loosened with his forepaws, he rolled it down on the head of one of the old ones, and thus killed her instantly. He then leaped down, and as the young walrus would not leave its dead mother he secured both.'

'He was a very cunning huntsman,' said Hugh, 'but I am sorry he got the poor young walrus, though.'

'But among the nimrods of the forest there is scarcely a more cunning and artful one than the fox; you know he has figured in fables from an early day to the present time. I read not long since an account of the fox that went hunting for hares. He noticed a number of them playing about in a field, but he saw that his only chance was to wait till the sun grew warm, when they would be sure to come back the same way they went—through gaps in the wall. So, selecting one of these openings, he began digging out a hole, and throwing up a kind of embankment, behind which he stationed himself, and waited patiently. Sure enough, the hares soon began to come back through the different apertures, and presently two slipped through the very one where old Reynard lay in ambush. He had heard them coming, and was quite ready, so immediately pounced upon one and secured it.'

'I wonder,' said Hugh, 'if the parents teach their children how to hunt, or if they find out for themselves.'

'Instinct teaches them. I remember, a year or two ago, that Mr. W— one day captured a very young fox—too young to know anything about hunting. He brought the little fellow home, and presented it with a chicken, which was probably the first he had ever seen. He turned it round and round, examining it for a while, then suddenly opening the jugular vein, put his mouth to it and sucked the blood with great relish. Now instinct taught it this; but all kinds of animals, birds and insects seem to reason and plan, according to the different circumstances in which they are placed.'

'But, papa,' said Lucy, 'I have read that eagles take their young ones on their backs, and fly with them awhile, and then shake them off, taking care, if they are in any danger of falling, to dart down and catch them; and so, in this manner they train them with great care to fly.'

'That is true; the inferior creatures do train their young, and furthermore they have means of communicating with each other as effectual as language with us; but still they are endowed with strong natural instincts, as I could prove by reminding you of many things that have come under your own observation. But this is a digression, and I must now tell you of a trick of the hyena's. When on his hunting expeditions he hides himself in the jungles; and, as he is a great mimic, can imitate the voice of almost all animals so perfectly that they come boldly up, expecting to meet a friend, when suddenly he springs upon and kills them. He even imitates the human voice so well that people have often thought there were other persons in the woods, laughing and talking.'

'Oh!' said Hugh, 'I have heard of a hyena-laugh; I suppose it means a pretended laugh.'

'Well, you know,' said Mr. Lee, 'that some animals are kept by men to hunt for their benefit. Your pussy, for instance, Annie, we feed willingly, because he is such a good hunter, and pounces upon a mouse just as a tiger would upon one of us. The ichneumon is sometimes tamed, and kept about a house for the same purpose; and he soon clears a house effectually of mice. He is an affectionate little creature, and becomes very much attached to his owner. Hedge-hogs are also tamed, and kept in houses for hunting mice, cockroaches, and other troublesome creatures; but though these disappear, the little hunters are not very honest, and often steal and carry off useful articles to make a bed of.'

'I dare say, papa,' said Annie, 'that my pussy is much better than ichneumons and hedge-hogs.'

'And I know my dog is much better,' said Hugh. 'Dogs are great hunters, are they not, papa?'

'Oh, yes; and different kinds of dogs are used for hunting different kinds of animals. They seem to take as great delight in the chase, too, as human sportsmen. And that reminds me of an amusing account of a fox hunt in Ireland that I read of. The dogs chased the fox a good distance; till, when hard pressed, he sprang upon a turf stack, and from thence upon a cabin, and finally jumped down the chimney, into the lap of an old woman, quietly sitting in the chimney corner, smoking her pipe. This, of course, greatly terrified her; and when the sportsmen came up they found the old woman and a number of children huddled together in one corner of the cabin, and the fox in another, grinning at them.'

'I suppose,' said Hugh, 'the fox was as much frightened as the woman and children.'

'I suppose so. In eastern countries the cunee is sometimes trained to hunt the gaselle. He sits behind his master, on horseback, till a gaselle is pointed out to him; then dropping from the horse, he approaches slowly and cautiously, turning and twisting, till he is near enough to spring upon his prey. Falcons are kept, too, in Turkey, Arabia and Persia to hunt gaselles. When the hunter sees one of these little animals, and points it out to the falcon, he flies with the swiftness of an arrow to it, and fixes his talons, one in the cheek, the other in the throat, and clings to it till it falls; when the hunter rushes up, seizing both, and rewards the falcon with the blood.'

'Falcons and hawks were formerly kept in England to hunt with; were they not, papa?' asked Lucy.

'Oh, yes; in the time of Edward III. it was considered indispensable for the nobility to keep hawks and falcons; and wherever they went there was always one of these birds perched upon their wrists; whether traveling, visiting, transacting business; even when attending church, they were carried into the sacred building. If a portrait was taken the hawk must be painted too; sometimes seated on a nobleman's head; and a knight would as readily part with his sword as his bird.'

'Are hawks and falcons the greatest bird hunters, papa?' asked Annie.

'No; I suppose the eagle may be regarded as the most powerful; you know he can carry off a lamb in his talons, and has been known to take an infant out of his cradle, and bear it off to his aerie. But a very curious feathered hunter is the shrike. The great American shrike is sometimes called the butcher bird. Whatever he kills, beast, bird, reptile or insect, he always impales it on the thorn of a tree; and the tree on which he builds his nest, or a tree near by, has often the appearance of a butcher's stall, hung round with tempting game for birds—frogs, mice, grasshoppers and other creatures, equally tempting to a bird's palate. Some persons suppose they are thus displayed to entice other birds to the spot, in order that the shrike may have a good opportunity of catching; others suppose that they are kept there by this epicure to become more tender; but perhaps he is extravagantly fond of hunting, and kills more of his fellow-creatures than he needs for food, and is so miserly as to hoard them up. One name for the shriko is nine-killer, on account of a popular belief that he always keeps nine creatures thus impaled at a time, and soon as he eats one he immediately hunts up another, and replaces it.'

'I do not like that butcher bird, papa,' said little Annie; 'he is cruel and selfish—he ought not to kill all those poor creatures unless he was really hungry.'

'Well, let us, who know better than this bird, be careful not to destroy the lives of any living thing, excepting for food, or in self-defence; for in taking the life of one of God's creatures we are destroying His own work, which He pronounced to be 'very good.' But there are many other hunters that are employed by men, besides those I have told you of. Martens hunt and destroy a great many insects, and we are told by the traveler, Clark, that on this account they are allowed to build in the chambers of the inhabitants of the Crimea; and wherever they are the flies are not troublesome, though they abound in that country. Formerly the Indians in Jamaica—knowing that fire-flies feed on mosquitoes—were in the habit of catching them and turning them loose in their huts at night, and as the mosquitoes were all sure to be hunted up, and destroyed pretty soon, they thus secured a good night's rest.—Boys and Girls' Monthly.

RUTA BAGA.—This valuable turnip should be sown, at furthest, by the close of the month, if the weather admits. It is needless to do so if the ground be very dry, and after preparation is made it will be necessary to wait for moisture enough to ensure the prompt growth of the seed.

A moderate loam, in good condition, is the best soil for the ruta baga, and a liberal use of fertilizing material is necessary to give a maximum crop. But it is very productive, and if a good stand of plants is secured, makes a very large quantity of valuable food to the acre.

SECESSION FROM THE CHURCH OF ROME IN GERMANY.—The new Catholics of Vienna and vicinity have organized under the ministration of the Rev. Karl August Forstner, and put forth a long confession of faith. They renounce allegiance to the pope and the bishops of the Catholic Church, and will hold all their services in the language of the people. The Rev. Karl August Forstner is in friendly correspondence with Johann Ronge, who is about to visit Vienna.

FARM AND GARDEN.

CULTIVATING FRUIT ORCHARDS.

There continues to be considerable difference of opinion as to whether fruit orchards should be cultivated or not. We think the opinion of many experienced cultivators, which has always been our own, and which from time to time has been given in our columns, ought to have weight. We think that young apple or pear orchards can be cultivated with safety for three or four years after setting out in most of the least exhausting vegetables, especially lettuce, beets, cabbage, cucumbers, tomatoes, canteloupes, pumpkins, etc., until the trees reach from two and a half to three inches in diameter, when the ground should be put in meadow grass and remain untouched by the plow ever after, all the manure required being a good top-dressing every other year. We are firmly of the opinion that where fruit trees arrive at a stage when they are able to take care of themselves, they do decidedly better in grass than in anything else, and this grass returns a heavier crop of hay than timothy or clover, and is also excellent for pasture for both cattle and swine. We have seen hundreds of pear and apple trees of choice varieties so situated, annually loaded with fruit, and the trees in a healthy condition. We have still upon our premises six pear trees believed to be over a hundred years old—standing in sod which has been disturbed only once in fifty years, as we are informed, being in our own possession over twenty-five years—that annually produce heavy crops, and three of them are still in a thrifty condition, each of which yielding good crops of choice pears from grafts inserted in fruit-bearing branches four or five years ago! This would seem to be pretty strong evidence in favor of the non cultivation of standard pears.

As to dwarf pear and apple trees the treatment is quite different. We cultivate the soil about the same as any portion of the garden for vegetables, applying every fall a good top-dressing of stable manure. If any of our trees grow too rapidly and are disposed to become larger than we wish them, they are root-pruned—that is, the spade is sunk down as deeply as it will go from two and a half to three feet from the stem, and this should be done every spring, if necessary.—Germantown Telegraph.

The Nature and Value of Birds.

We have latterly printed considerably on the subject of birds, and in their behalf; still, we cannot refrain from speaking a good word for them whenever an opportunity presents. We do not know the source of the following notice, but it is philanthropic, valuable and interesting, and we give place to it with great satisfaction, hoping that it will be read by every one, and induce all to unite the present season in protecting the birds upon their premises, and when necessary cause the "bird law" to be rigidly enforced against every violator. It must be remembered that a person in shooting insectivorous birds not only subjects himself to this law, but is also liable to be prosecuted for trespass.

Summer is approaching, and with its pleasures will come the daily nuisance to those who dwell amid rural scenes, of the hearing the "soft notes of the shot gun." Every one who has paid attention to the matter, knows that the vast increase of late years of destructive insects is owing almost entirely to the wanton destruction of birds which are not even legitimate game.

In Japan the birds are regarded as sacred, and never, under any pretence, are they permitted to be destroyed. During the stay of the expedition at Japan a number of officers started on a gunning excursion. No sooner did the people observe the cruel slaughtering of their favorites than a number of them waited upon the commodore, and remonstrated against the conduct of the officers. There was no more bird shooting in Japan by American officers after that; and when the treaty between the two countries was concluded, one express condition of it was that the birds should be protected. What a commentary upon the inhuman practice of our people, who indiscriminately shoot everything in the form of a bird which has the misfortune to come within the reach of their murderous weapons.

On the top of the tombstones in Japan a small cavity or trough is chiseled, which the priests every morning fill with fresh water for the use of the birds. Enlightened America should imitate these customs of the barbarous Japanese; if not by providing fresh water for the feathered warblers, at least by protecting them from the worthless louts who so ruthlessly destroy them. Unless something is done, and that speedily, our insectivorous birds will be wholly exterminated, and then farewell to fruit growing.

The swallows are the natural enemies of the swarming insects, living almost entirely upon them, taking their food upon the wing. The common martin devours great quantities of wasps, beetles and goldsmiths. A single bird will devour five thousand butterflies in a week. The moral of this is, that the husbandman should cultivate the society of swallows and martins about his land and buildings.

The sparrows and wrens feed upon the crawling insects which lurk within the buds, foliage and flowers of plants. The wrens are pugnacious, and a little box in a cherry tree will soon be appropriated by them, and they will drive away other birds that feed upon the fruit—a hint that cherry growers should remember and act upon.

The thrushes, blue birds, jays and crows prey upon butterflies, grasshoppers, crickets, locusts, and the larger beetles. A single family of jays will consume 20,000 of these in a season of three months.

The woodpeckers are armed with a stout, long bill, to penetrate the wood of trees, where the borers deposit their larvæ. They live almost entirely upon these worms.

For the insects that come abroad only during the night, nature has provided a check in the nocturnal, barn owl, which take their food upon the wing.

How wonderful is this provision of Providence for the restraint of depredators that live upon the labors of man, and how careful we should be not to dispute that beneficial law of compensation by which all things are preserved in their just relation and proportion.—Germantown Telegraph.

Triennial Handel Festival in London.

The centre of attraction for the week just passed has been the great Triennial Handel Festival, at the Crystal Palace, which closed yesterday. This is, I believe, the fifth celebration of the kind, and the third triennial meeting that has been held at the Crystal Palace. The first, in 1857, was merely an experiment; the second, in 1859, was performed in commemoration of the centenary of Handel's death; and the third was coincident with the International Exhibition of 1862, since which time they have become a triennial institution. None of these, however, can be compared to the present festival in the magnificence of the preparations and the array of musical talent that was brought together from all parts of the United Kingdom, as well as from the continent. The managers of the Crystal Palace left nothing undone to meet the demands of the occasion. By the aid of screens, which were erected across the great central transept, and served the double purpose of shutting the sun out and the sound in, a grand concert hall was formed, well ventilated, cool, comfortable, and acoustically perfect. Between the orchestra and the audience ran a border of flowering plants, whose green leaves and rich blossoms were as refreshing to the eye as the sweet tones of the music were grateful to the ear. From the centre of these blossoms and foliage stood forth the marble image of the immortal Handel. Opposite the stage, and back of the parterre, were three raised boxes for members of the royal household. These apartments were fitted out in a right royal manner with ferns, shrubs, flowers, large mirrors, and small fountains. The principal vocalists were Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Sainton Dolby, Mdlle. Carola, Mdlle. Nilsson, Miss Kellogg, Madame Rudersdorf, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Cummings, Signor Foli, and Mr. Santley, with Mr. James Coward as organist and Mr. Costa as a conductor. Some conception may be obtained of the magnitude of the performance from the fact that the chorus numbered in all about three thousand five hundred voices, distributed as follows: seven hundred and fifty-two sopranos, seven hundred and eighty-eight altos, seven hundred and forty seven tenors, and seven hundred and eighty-one basses, besides many others whose names were received after the publication of the list from which these items were taken. This immense choral force was supported by a leviathan orchestra of nearly five hundred performers, consisting of one hundred and one first violins, ninety-six second violins, seventy-three violas, sixty-three violoncellos, sixty-six double basses, besides eight flutes, six piccolos, eight oboes, eight clarionets, eight bassoons, five trumpets, twelve horns, six cornets, nine trombones, seven ophicleides and euphoniums, two serpents, four double drums, one base drum, and eight side or military drums—comprising the most accomplished executants that could be assembled from the best bands of the metropolis and the provincial towns of England. Owing to other engagements, I did not attend the public rehearsal of Friday, June 12th, at which twenty-seven pieces were gone through, it is said, 'without the slightest hitch or stop;' a circumstance that speaks volumes in praise of the tact and energy of Mr. Costa, when we consider the extent of the musical forces which were now marshaled for the first time under his bâton. In the remaining ten pieces only two or three occasions arose for stopping and recommencing. On the evening of the 13th Handel's 'Firework Music,' which he wrote to celebrate the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, was performed. These pieces, however, were only preludes to the festival proper, which opened on Monday, the 15th, with the composer's greatest masterpiece, the Messiah. Of all Handel's oratorios this one is, perhaps, his most characteristic work, and most truly reflects his peculiar genius. Not only the intrinsic grandeur of the theme, but also the circumstances of trial and trouble under which he wrote it, combined to render it the great representative production of the man. To those who are familiar with Handel's personal history, just before the year 1742, many of the finest passages and grandest movements of the Messiah bear a decidedly autobiographic character. They are not only the musical expression of the sublimest religious feeling, but also embody the emotions which filled his own soul when dark clouds hung over his head, and he himself knew what it was to be 'a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief.' This is especially apparent in the contralto air, 'He was despised and rejected,' which Madame Sainton Dolby sang with an exquisitely tender pathos, and the series of majestic but mournful choruses that follow. Mr. Sims Reeves delivered the tenor solo with grand effect, particularly the opening recitative, 'Comfort ye my people,' and the spirited air, 'Thou shalt break them,' which immediately precedes the famous 'Hallelujah.' This magnificent chorus, rendered by such a multitude of well-trained voices, surpassed in power anything that I have ever heard, and must have realized what the great composer himself may have conceived of only as an impossible ideal. Of course, no verbal description can bring before the reader's mind the gradations of tone, the light and shade, the heights and the depths, the broad and bold diatonic effects, the noble simplicity and yet ample majesty of such a piece of choral writing, executed by such an assemblage of vocal and orchestral forces. The peculiarly pathetic quality of Mme. Sainton Dolby's voice achieved the finest results in the sweet air, 'He shall feed his flock like a Shepherd.' The only criticism which I have to make on her singing, that might seem to be at all adverse, is that the intensity of feeling which she infuses into it often interferes with the clearness of intonation necessary to render it distinctly audible in such a vast area as the Crystal Palace. In a smaller concert hall, however, this defect would be only an additional beauty. The only solo singer who completely overcame this obstacle was the first soprano, Mdlle. Titiens. The brilliancy and power with which she rendered the recitatives which immediately follow the Pastoral Symphony, and the bravura song, 'Rejoice greatly,' and the admirable fervor with which she gave the air, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' cannot be too highly commended. Equally impressive, though less distinctly heard by all, was Mr. Santley in the air, 'The trumpet shall sound,' with a remarkable trumpet obligato by the chief of the five trumpets, Mr. Thomas Harper. In such an immense space many of the finer effects of the solos were inevitably lost, notwithstanding the great advantage gained by the screens in the concentration of the sound and the extreme delicacy of the orchestral accompaniments, and it was naturally by the grand choruses that the strongest impression was produced; this was especially apparent in the forte passages of the chorus, 'For unto us a child is born'—Independent.

THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.—The pontifical bull summoning a general council of the Roman Catholic Church, to meet in the Basilica of the Vatican on December 8th, 1869, expresses hopes that princes and other rulers will afford the ecclesiastics all possible facility for making the journey to Rome. The bull also states that the object of the council is to assure the integrity of the faith, respect for religion and the ecclesiastical laws, the improvement of public morals, the establishment of peace and concord, and the removal of the ills afflicting civil and religious society. The bull finally adverts to the necessity for maintaining the temporal power, the sanctity of matrimony, and the religious education of youth, and deplores the efforts of the enemies of the church to overthrow those principles.

'IT is never more difficult to speak well than when we are ashamed of our silence.

IN making our arrangements to live, we should not forget also that we have also to die.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month'

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,

Washington county, Virginia.

The FALL SESSION of this institution begins on the 20th of August next.

Our terms, for a session of five months, are as follows:

Tuition in Collegiate course, payable in advance	$30 00
Fuel, room rent and contingent fee, payable in advance	10 00
Board, at $13 per month	65 00
Washing	7 50

Tuition in the Preparatory Department is $5 less. Board is payable monthly in advance. Students supply their own beds and furniture for their rooms, and take their meals with the families boarding them.

We invite those seeking collegiate culture to consider the excellent advantages here offered.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to The Good Samaritan, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, The Good Samaritan to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of Cooking Stoves, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

EVERY SATURDAY:

A Journal of Choice Reading, Selected From Foreign Current Literature.

This popular Weekly reproduces promptly for American readers the best and most readable portions of European periodicals. These embrace Serial Tales, Short Stories, Essays,— Biographical and Descriptive,— Poems, Sketches of Travel and Adventure, Literary Intelligence, and popular papers on Science. Translations from the admirable French Periodicals are a prominent feature.

Among the Periodicals from which selections are frequently made are Once a Week, Chamber's Journal, All the Year Round, The Spectator, The Reader, The Athenæum, The Examiner; The London, Saturday, and Fortnightly Reviews; Fraser's, Blackwood's, Macmillan's, the Victoria, Argosy, New Monthly, and London Society Magazines; Revue des Deux Mondes, L'evenement, Le Soleil.

Among the authors represented in Every Saturday are many of the wisest and wittiest writers of Europe, as Henry Kingsley, Anthony Trollope, Matthew Arnold, Charles Kingsley, Edmund Yates, Frances Power Cobbe, Christina G. Rossetti, Author of "John Halifax," George Sand; Edmond About, Alexandre Dumas, Mrs. Oliphant, J. Ruffini, Alexander Smith, A. C. Swineburne, Robert Buchanan, Jean Ingelow, and Miss Thackeray.

Every Saturday is intended for Town and Country, for the Fireside, the Seaside, the Railway, and the Steamboat. The Publishers will aim to commend it to all classes of cultivated and intelligent readers by the freshness and variety of its contents.

Every Saturday contains weekly 40 double-column large octavo pages.

TERMS.—Single Number, 10 cents; Yearly Subscription, $5 00 in advance; $1 00 a year to subscribers for any other periodical published by Ticknor and Fields. Monthly Parts, 50 cents a number. Yearly subscription, same as for Weekly Part.

The great number of points to which

THE NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

is sent in the States of

ALABAMA,

MISSISSIPPI,

LOUISIANA AND

TEXAS,

Constitutes it as good a medium for reaching the people who trade with this city and Mobile as any offered in the Southwest.

Our Circulation is Widening Daily

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

Squares.	1 mo.	3 mos.	6 mos.	12 mos.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00
Three	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00
Four	12 50	25 00	35 00	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 18th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have little or no change to notice in the general market since our last report. With the exception of a moderate business in some branches of the wholesale trade, nearly every department has been marked by continued apathy. A scant supply and difference in the views of factors and buyers have prevented anything being done in our leading staple, and nothing of any moment has been reported in sugar and molasses, and but little in tobacco. The movement in Western produce has been of limited extent, without any quotable variation in prices, but with rather an upward tendency in provisions.

The weather has continued showery, and our accounts from the interior are assuming a much less encouraging tenor than for some time past. There has been too much rain for the cotton, which in some localities has been materially injured, and there is more apprehension that the warm, moist weather will be followed by the ravages of the worms. It has been hoped that their appearance now would be too late for them to do much damage, but confidence in this particular is evidently giving way.

The river has fallen eight inches since our last report, and is now twelve feet two inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—We left the market, at the time of our last report, too much unsettled for general quotations, but stated at the same time that it was believed purchases could have been made on the basis of 25½ to 26c. for Low Middling, and 27 to 27½c. for Middling. This, however, was before the receipt of the evening cable telegrams, reporting an advance of ⅜ to ½d., and quoting Middling Uplands at 9⅞d. and Orleans at 10¼d. The same telegrams on Saturday reported the Liverpool market steady, and on Monday that it was easier, without any quotable change, while at New York, also, prices were without variation. Under these accounts the inconsiderable supply on sale has been held at full prices, while the few parties who have come forward to purchase small lots have been unwilling to go on at the figures asked, or have been unable to find the descriptions wanted. Hence nothing was reported on either Saturday or Monday, while on Tuesday, with no change at Liverpool, the only sale reported was 29 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 29 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 136 bales, against 218 during the corresponding period last week showing a decrease of 82 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 586,996 bales, against 709,786 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 287,871 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 17,940 bales to Great Britain, of 95,600 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 788 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	— to —
Good Ordinary	26 to 26½
Low Middling	27 to 27½
Middling	28 to —
Strict Middling	— to —

SUGAR.—Since our last review the sugar market has been extremely dull. During that time no sale of a round lot has come within our notice. The retail demand has also been very limited. Rates, however, continue nominally the same. We quote Cuba sugar at 12¾ to 13½c. per pound for Muscovado, 14 to 14½c. for Porto Rico; white, 15 to 15¾c.; yellow, 12¾ to 14½c.; brown, 12 to 12½c. What little Louisiana sugar there is remaining in market is retailing slowly at 13¾c. per pound for fair, 15¼c. for prime, 16¼ to 16½c. for yellow clarified, and 17 to 17¼c. for white.

MOLASSES.—During the past three days extreme dullness has prevailed, there being in fact no market for this article at all. The stoppage of the distilleries has destroyed the only demand which existed for the greater portion of the Cuba molasses which is brought here.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

OFFICE—113 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Following is a summary of European news by steamer.

The Paris Moniteur says the French trans-Atlantic cable will be completed by August, 1869.

Le Liberte says Dr. Pussey has been converted to Catholicism.

Osborne Wood, the delegate of the New York Workingmen's Association, has arrived in Paris, in a tour of Europe, to study the situation of the laboring classes and the development of the co-operative system.

The Italian Parliament has passed an act pensioning the widows and orphans of physicians who died attending cholera patients.

Placards threatening Von Beust and insulting the Emperor have been posted in Prague. Rumors of the Prussian and Austrian reconciliation are unfavorably received in Berlin.

A famine threatens Spain. Entire provinces are suffering.

LONDON, August 10.—Farragut is at Constantinople, on the steamer Frolic.

The steamer Franklin stopped at Syria to investigate the alleged firing on an American ship by some Greeks.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—There was a terrible colliery explosion at Tamnapes, province of Hornault, Belgium, by which fifty-one persons were killed and a large number injured.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The Emperor returning from Plombiers was enthusiastically received at Froyes. The mayor and municipal authorities presented an address to which the Emperor replied, thanking the mayor and municipality and the people for demonstrations, and expressed the hope that no untoward event would disturb the peaceful progress of trade and agriculture, and concluded with an invocation to God to protect France.

The speech was received with prolonged cheers and repeated cries of Vive l'Empereur.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—Accounts received daily from Spain represent that the disturbed condition of the country is producing disastrous results. Latest Madrid advices apprehend a financial crisis there. Juan Pezuela has been appointed captain general of Catalonia.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—Mr. Trumbull is recovering.

Stevens is convalescing.

Austrian Minister Watts is daily expected to receive his instructions.

The President will not leave for his proposed trip until the Revenue Commissionership is settled.

Internal Revenue receipts to-day, $681,000.

Chief Justice Chase, charging the United States Grand Jury of West Virginia, said in effect: In order to suppress the rebellion it was necessary to create a large public debt, and that the debt must be paid, for under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States the nation was pledged to it. This amendment he recognized as valid, and therefore charged the jury to see that the revenue laws which were made to pay the debt were strictly enforced.

Secretary Seward telegraphs that he will return on Wednesday.

It is now thought that Rosecrans will depart for Mexico next week.

A naval court martial will convene at New York on the 20th inst.

Rollins telegraphs that he will be here on Monday next to resume his duties as Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, Aug. 10, 1868.

To Bvt. Maj. Gen. R. C. Buchanan, Comm'g Department of La., New Orleans:

GENERAL—The following instructions from the Secretary of War are furnished for your government:

To the end that the necessary aid may be rendered by the United States as promptly as possible in any case of insurrection or domestic violence in States embraced in your military department, you will keep yourself informed of the condition of affairs in said States and communicate promptly by telegraph to the War Department, through the headquarters of the army, any facts which may make it the duty of the President under the Constitution and laws to employ the military force of the United States. You will also maintain such disposition of the troops under your command that they may be ready to act without delay on the receipt of the President's orders, stationing them at or from time to time moving them to points where you may have reason to apprehend necessity for their use. [The remainder of the instructions consists of extracts from the Constitution and laws of the United States, indicating the conditions under which the military force of the United States may be lawfully employed to suppress insurrection against the government of any State.]

By command of Gen. GRANT.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant General.

It is understood that Col. Deane was assured this morning, both by the President and by the Secretary of War, that these instructions (a copy of which was furnished him) were intended and expected to satisfactorily cover the ground lately presented by the Legislature and Executive of Louisiana.

The following are articles quoted in the order to Gen. Buchanan: Article 4th of the Constitution; section 4 of the act approved February 20, 1809; sections 1 and 3 of the act of March 3, 1807.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The military order of Gen. Grant merely recites the provisions of the Constitution and certain laws for the information of the military commander of the Department of Louisiana, and directs him to report to the President any occurrences or facts that would come within the provisions of the Constitution and the laws cited.

When such report shall be made, if ever, then will come the exigency under which the executive may be required to determine whether the present government of Louisiana is to be recognized as the lawful authority of that State or not.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Thaddeus Stevens is dead.

Special Mexican advices report that the State of Vera Cruz is in rebellion under influential leaders. It is thought that the Castle of Sao Juan de Ulloa will be attacked. Alatorre has defeated Negrete.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Evarts' long looked-for opinion covers a column, and declares Rollins' tenure good. Rollins, therefore, continues in office.

Fifty delegates of the National Journeymen Tailor's Union visited the President to-day. The interview was pleasant and characteristic, without political allusions.

Buffalo experts in this city pronounce the cattle disease nothing but the effects of hot weather and close confinement in the cars.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—In an affray with robbers in Crawford county, Illinois, one constable was killed, and the remainder of the posse rushed upon the robbers and killed them all—four in number.

The remains of Stevens will lie in state in the rotunda of the capitol to-morrow.

THE TOUR OF THE WORLD.—The tour of the world can be made in two months and a half. When the Pacific Railroad is finished from New York to San Francisco it will take seven days; from San Francisco to Hongkong, by way of Yokohama, twenty days; from Hongkong, by steamer to Suez, thirty-two days; from Suez to Paris, six days; from Paris to New York, ten days; in all, seventy-five days.

WILD paroquets are quite common in the London parks. A letter in one of the morning journals says that the majority of the birds frequent where they may daily be seen feeding with the sparrows. The garden committee of the square, appreciating the presence of the gay little strangers, have appointed a commissionaire to look after and protect them.

PITTSBURG has increased in size very rapidly during the last three years. It is stated that during the years 1866 and 1867 not less than 9,000 houses were erected in the city and the adjacent municipalities. Most of these buildings are of stone or brick. Not a few of them are of the most elegant and costly descriptions.

THE controversy over the alleged newly discovered poem by Milton is very animated in the English papers, and all sorts of literary men are taking part in it. The weight of evidence now seems to be decidedly against its authenticity, and Mr. Marley is in a fair way of taking position with Macpherson, Ireland and Payne Collier, as an experimenter upon public credulity.

MR. SPURGEON defends the system of replacing the present sectarian system of English schools with a purely secular one. He says that 'village lads could generally carry in a hollow tooth all the religion they receive in the charity schools.' High Church parties think Spurgeon is splurgin' too much.

The Radical Plot in Tennessee.

STARTLING REVELATIONS.

We copy as follows from the Nashville Union and Dispatch, of the 7th:

The following facts came into our possession yesterday, through a source so reliable that we cannot withhold it from the public. Taken in connection with the well known fact that hordes of negroes have been drilling nightly in various suburbs of the town, it assumes a shape and importance not only startling, but such as demands immediate action on the part of those who are charged with the protection of the city and its people.

A person well known in this community for his extreme opinions, and his proclivities to express them, a Radical without reproach as such, living on Market street, between Church and the Square, has declared repeatedly that there are organizations already perfected for the sole and special purpose of destroying the towns of Franklin, Columbus, Pulaski, Murfreesboro and Nashville, whenever the slightest occasion presents itself, or whenever a collision of any kind shall occur in either of the places named. Signals have been agreed upon and lines of communication established. This organization is now measurably complete, and is progressing daily. This person states that he is engaged in this organization, and that when it enters upon the execution of its purposes, that it will spare neither age, sex nor condition—that the houses of all rebels shall be burned, that women shall be ravished, and their children tossed into the flames.

From other sources we are credibly informed that negroes now in the employ of the corporation have prepared turpentine balls and other combustibles to destroy the city whenever the signal is given, and that these materials are now stored in a house occupied by the city and used for public purposes.

We further learn that these organizations are led and controlled by five white men, whose names are in our possession, some of them now occupying official positions of importance in the city government.

We have purposely refrained from mentioning any names, for the reason that we think it is due that the matter should be immediately brought before the appropriate authorities in such manner as shall bring about an investigation. It is not the purpose of this oppressed community to aid in bringing on a war, but the contrary. The facts above stated, however, have come to us in such a shape and upon such authority as cannot be disregarded. We call upon the mayor of the city, whose duty it is to protect the people, to take cognizance of this matter. We are prepared to furnish him with the names of witnesses. If he refuses to act, we shall call upon the citizens to organize for their own defence against this diabolical plan of destruction and outrage, and be ready to sweep from the community all who are engaged in this atrocious and savage villainy.

Unless prompt action is taken by the lawful authorities we shall consider them as the allies of this hellish conspiracy, and appeal to the people to resort to the only remedy—self-protection—left to them in the premises.

In addition to the above we find the following dispatch, dated Nashville, August 7th, in the Western papers:

In the House a bill has been submitted by the Military Committee giving Brownlow absolute power to arm and equip as many regiments as he pleases. The bill is certain to pass, and it is equally certain that the regiments will be in part made up of negroes. Hundreds of the latter are now arming here, waiting for a chance to be mustered in, while a number of whites are as busy as bees trying to secure position as officers. Petitions are pouring in by the dozen, signed by Radicals and rebels, earnestly imploring the Legislature not to call out the militia. They will all be treated as those praying for universal suffrage, that is, with indifference bordering on contempt. Under these circumstances it is not impossible that the Conservatives in the State will entirely withdraw from the canvass, mainly for the purpose of preventing bloodshed, and under the decided impression that a free election is simply out of the question. If a decision is arrived at that the canvass will go on, even with the militia in the field, it will be simply impossible to prevent riot and bloodshed. There is a division of sentiment in the Democratic ranks as to what course to pursue.

A rumor having gained considerable currency that a number of Radicals, whites and negroes, were banded together to burn the city, a committee of prominent citizens met to-day to make an investigation. Nothing could be discovered to implicate any one except a half-witted man named Carper, who had threatened terrible vengeance against the city.

The Press and Times of this morning contained alleged details of terrible outrages in Williamson county by the Ku-Klux, on a lot of negroes, where one was shot dead and a number badly wounded. The Radical member from that county has denounced the whole thing as a hoax, and the grand jury of the county made an investigation to-day, in which it was found out the story was absolutely false from beginning to end. Probably full nine-tenths of the Ku-Klux stories are really without foundation.

THE Escaut, of Antwerp, relates the following tragic incident which recently occurred in that city: "The Zoological Garden has for a long time been in possession of two magnificent Bengal tigers, one of which was to be forwarded to London. To avoid accident the animal was placed in a wagon secured with strong iron bars. The greatest precaution was, therefore, taken to avoid a catastrophe. At half-past three one morning the railway servants perceived an enormous animal clearing at a bound the wall which separates the Zoological Garden from the railway station. The tiger had, in fact, escaped, having bent and broken two of the iron bars of his cage. The first object of his fury was the cart-horse of a night-man, which happened to be passing. The tiger bounded on the unfortunate horse, biting him in the flank, and tearing the straps that attached him to the cart. The driver, who at first sought safety on the horse's back, hid himself under the cart, but not before receiving a wound in the leg from the tiger's paw. Meantime, the horse, mad with terror and pain, galloped furiously toward the market of St. Jacques, pursued by the tiger. Here another deplorable event occurred. A gardener who was passing the street attracted the fury of the beast. The tiger sprang at him, tearing his breast, legs and neck in a fearful manner. Having finished his victim, the animal dragged the body some distance. He then abandoned it, and rushed into St. Anne's Court, where his presence caused indescribable terror. M. Vekemans, the director of the Zoological Garden, having been informed of the escape, proceeded with his staff in pursuit, and came up to the animal at the corner of St. Jacques street, near the House Verstrepen. A night watchman and three or four other persons took refuge in a small shop opposite this house. The tiger espied them, and stood for a moment as though he intended to rush at them through the window. He pursued his course, however, through the market. M. Vekemans, with his assistants, after the animal got into St. Anne's Court, barricaded the entrance, and placed a trap in it with the view of taking him alive. They then got into the houses of the court in order to frighten him into this trap. The tiger lay couched against the door of the atelier of M. De Bruckeleer, the sculptor, but perceiving one of the men in pursuit on the roof of a house, he leaped on the roof of a lower house, and assumed a most menacing position. MM. Vekemans, De Brackeleer, Werbronk and Vorhoven were armed with guns. The tiger, having perceived them, slowly descended from the roof evidently bent on making an attack, and when about four metres off he couched to make his spring. The order to fire was given, and three guns were discharged in succession. The first shot appeared to have missed, the second struck the animal, the third inflicted a mortal wound. He tottered back to the entrance of the court, where M. De Brackeleer finished him with a fourth shot. These gentlemen behaved with great intrepidity, and but for the coolness and the measures they adopted much greater injury would have been done. The gardener who was attacked never spoke, and died in the hospital at six o'clock the same morning."

MR. BURLINGAME says the Chinese have more books, encyclopedias, pamphlets, magazines, etc., than any other people. Their principal encyclopedia embraces five thousand volumes. Good place for celestial printers.

Invading the Sanctity of the Family.

Nothing is more abhorrent to true manhood and to true womanhood than the despotic intrusion of government into the family circle. There where all earthly felicity begins and ends the sentiment of liberty, even under tyrannies the most blighting to political freedom, has usually contrived to find a safe and sacred retreat. But it is plainly designed by the school bill now before the Legislature to violate the sanctity of this refuge by the provisions appended underneath:

SEC. 5. Every child in the State between the ages of eight and fourteen years, without fixed employment, shall attend school at least six months in each year, and in case any parent or guardian shall neglect to send his or her child or ward to school, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to institute proceedings before a justice of the peace, who shall send a written admonition to such delinquents, and if they continue to so neglect, he shall inflict a fine not exceeding twenty five dollars for the first offense nor fifty dollars for each subsequent offense, and if after three successive admonitions parents or guardians neglect to send their children or wards to schools, or to otherwise have them instructed in the rudiments of a common education, then the case shall be referred to the State Board of Education, who are empowered to take such children or wards and give them instruction, at least five months in each year, in such school or place of correction as shall be provided by the board for that purpose.

The expense incurred for boarding and instructing such children shall be borne by their parents or guardians; but in case they are too poor to bear such expense, it may be paid out of the school fund at the discretion of the board.

SEC. 6. No child under the age of fourteen years shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment, or on any farm or plantation, or in any employment in this State, unless such child has attended some public or private school at least six of the twelve months next preceding, and is permitted to attend six months in every year in which such child shall be employed, and any persons who shall employ any child contrary to the provisions of this act shall forfeit and pay for such offense a penalty of one hundred dollars, to be appropriated to the support of public schools in the parish or district, at the discretion of the commissioners.

Thus, it is the clear purpose of this bill that both parent and child, the one by fine, the other by incarceration and privation of employment, and both by separation, shall be punished, unless they pay practical and servile homage to the supreme wisdom of "Parson" Conway's promiscuous and amalgamizing school system. Fancy the "Parson" strutting at the head of a select constabulary, and visiting delinquent households in the execution of this beneficent design! Some roads are hard to travel, even if they do lead toward destruction—and this is one of them.—Crescent.

THAD. STEVENS READ OUT OF THE RADICAL PARTY.—The Selma Times and Messenger says: Mr. Horace Greeley is greatly incensed at the opinions expressed by Hon. Thad. Stevens in the House on Friday last, in favor of the payment of five-twenty bonds in currency. In fact Horace is so angry that after calling Mr. Stevens a number of bad names in an editorial in the Tribune, he closes the article by reading the "Great Commoner" out of the party in the following style:

"We quote Stevens to prove Stevens a fit ally for the Pendletons, Rosses and Blairs, whom he threatens to join, unless the Republican party can be made the accomplice of the gigantic crime he meditates. That, we assure him, will never be. If he wishes to swindle efficiently, let him join the party to which swindling is natural—that which will gratify by repudiation its partisan malignity as well as its innate rascality. Mr. Ross courteously opens the doors of the Democratic church for his reception. He says he will enter if the Republicans will not help him defraud the national creditors. That, we tell him, they will never do. Let him, therefore,

"'Stay not on the order of his going,
But go at once.'"

AN examination of the United States statistics of manufactures shows a clear increase in wages in 1866 of upward of sixty per cent., as compared with the wages paid in 1860.

THE Independance Belge publishes a letter from a merchant of Galata containing a very curious narration, namely, that the Italian brig San Gennaro, having lately been becalmed in its course from Naples to Odessa in the waters of the Greek Archipelago, the crew engaged in fishing. The head cook, who was expert in the art, had already succeeded in spearing several fine tunnies, when he struck his harpoon into the body of an enormous sword-fish, which after a time was hauled on deck with much labor. The ivory sword was four feet long, and the total length from its point to the end of the tail not less than fifteen feet. But great was the astonishment of the crew when the carpenter, in cutting open the body, discovered in the stomach a moderate-sized box, stamped with a cross and star, the emblems of Turkey, and bearing these words in French, "Poste locale." It was a Constantinople letter box, containing nearly thirty letters, which the captain took charge of with a view to a punctual delivery.

THE Temps publishes in its chronique the following paragraph:

M. Victor Louis Jacot, by profession a prophet, living at No. 2 Clarendon Place, Brighton, informs us that he feels himself compelled to announce to us that the Divine Saviour is on the eve of fulfilling his promise of reappearing, and that the first resurrection, as described in the 24th chapter of Matthew, will take place in a few months.

The Temps remarks that "this indeed will be a mighty event, but M. Jacot's prophetic inspirations enable him likewise to reveal to us that Austria and France are about to come to blows, that Turkey will disappear from the map, and that Emperor Napoleon III. will seize measures of gold and silver and other good things in Egypt, whence his influence will extend over the globe. For the truth of these revelations he refers to chapter xi of Daniel, 40, 41, 42 verses, and for his address to No. 2 Clarendon Place, Brighton."

THE French press teems with anecdotes of Fordham, the jockey who won the French Derby lately on Suzorain. They say that he peculiarly distinguishes himself in match riding, and that, when two horses are finishing neck and neck, he possesses the extraordinary knack of suddenly elevating the head of the animal he is riding, and so winning "by a nose!" Fordham is stated to have thus wrested the prize last year from Patricien whilst riding Fervacques. His earnings are estimated at £4,000 a year, and he is said to be always accompanied in his professional excursions by his valet de chambre. A jockey ought to live, with economy, very comfortably on $20,000 a year.

OMAHA seems to be under a cloud. Disastrous failures have recently occurred there, and more are threatened. A correspondent writes: "Our streets look as if the place was being deserted. Omaha can never get up the same excitement as she did this spring. In my opinion, she is dead for years to come, and if the truth was told by all they would coincide with me. Two months ago there was not a store to be rented in the place. To-day there are sixty-one stores to rent.

MISS MARIA RYE, who under her personal supervision has just brought over a hundred young women from England to Canada, to fill situations as domestics, has been so successful that she offers to return to England and bring over another hundred for persons in the United States, provided she is furnished with the necessary funds—about $30 gold per head.

THE Cheyenne Leader states that the Union Pacific Railroad is about to erect great hotels, ranging in cost from fifteen to fifty thousand dollars, at Cheyenne, Laramie, North Platte, and Green River, for the accommodation and comfort of passengers, in the event of being delayed, or desiring to rest at any time while making the journey across the Plains by this route.

AT Milledgeville, Georgia, a thoughtless boy set a dog at a party of little children, who ran some distance; and one little girl, becoming exhausted, was carried home, and that night died in convulsions, caused either by the fright or by sunstroke, as the day was very hot.

THERE are seven hundred names on the pay roll of the New York post office, including the messengers on postal cars.

THE SABBATH.

A SONNET FROM THE GERMAN.

Hail, holy day! fair day of sweetest rest,
Which the All-wise has given man behest
Fore'er in sacred reverence to hold,
By ceasing toils and labors of the week.
Strict by his holy rule the soul to mould,
And after God-like righteousness to seek.
With gladsome spirit I postpone my toils
And feast my soul on manna, and on spoils
Which the Redeemer won on Calvary;
Where with man's fate he wrestled, and for me
A victory achieved o'er death and hell,
And Satan's hostile legions dire, and fell.
Hail! hail! 'Tis now that I my pinions try
To soar aloft to mansions in the sky.

J. B. A. AHRENS.

SATISFIED.

O questioning soul! be still;
Calm these vain longings for unbounded love,
Which thy weak powers so weary and perplex;
Rest thee, and wait until
The promised morning dawn, when thou no more,
Linked to this heavy clay, thy faith shalt vex
With mysteries untried;
Thou shalt be satisfied.

O unsolved doubts! O things
Hard to be understood by mortal mind!
How will your phantoms vanish in the light
Infinite morning brings?
This wondrous spirit-life with sense combined,
And all earth's problems dark to human sight,
Then shall be well described,
And we be satisfied.

Be patient then, my soul!
Search meekly after truth, and be content
With such a measure as God gives his own;
Till at thy destined goal,
The mystic veil before thy vision rent,
Thou shalt know all, e'en as thyself art known,
And like thy God abide Forever satisfied!

SONS OF GOD LED BY THE SPIRIT.

The great thing the atonement does for man is that it makes him a son of God. Sonship was the original prerogative of humanity, for "Adam was the son of God." Of all creatures man only was made in the "image and likeness of God;" that is, in the communicable attributes of God—knowledge and holiness, and consequently happiness of God—but not in the likeness and image of the incommunicable attributes of eternity, omnipotence and omnipresence. By transgression man lost this sonship, and with it all the dignities and happiness that appertained to it. This was the work of the devil. Christ was manifested to destroy the work of the devil; to seek and save those that were lost; to procure for us all things necessary to salvation, especially to procure for us the efficacious help of the Holy Spirit to convince us of sin, and to create us anew in Christ Jesus, and restoring our lost relation of sonship, making us partakers of the divine nature and adopting us into the family, and making us sons and heirs of God.

This is the highest conceivable honor. For one lowly born to be made a son of a nobleman of the highest rank, and an heir to his estates, are honors which would be justly considered a great elevation. But for a subject, especially if he labored under grave political disabilities, to be adopted into the royal family, and made a joint heir with the royal-born, would be regarded as the climax of good fortune and the highest earthly dignity. Spiritually, if God had raised fallen man to the level and grade of angels, and an heir to all the honors of their high estate, all the intelligent universe would have felt that man was highly honored and elevated in the ranks of being. But God thus did an infinitely more glorious thing. He has made the believer in Christ his well-beloved son—a child and an heir of God, to whom all things belong. And to relieve our minds of any apprehension that our previous fallen and sinful estate is remembered to our prejudice, and to make the measure of our grateful joy full, we are made the joint heirs with Christ, God's well-beloved Son. To this high estate the finite imagination can add nothing, and desire nothing more.

The beloved disciple, in contemplating this exalted distinction and boundless happiness, exclaims with irrepressible wonder and joy: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" This is a fact so glorious that when the grand investiture is made there is joy in heaven, in the presence of the angels of God—heaven's rapture is kindled into a higher flame—when one of these sons of God completes his warfare with a shout of triumph: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory." His death is precious in the sight of the Lord, and he is carried by angels to the Paradise of God.

The proof and the privilege of our being the sons of God are that we are led by the Spirit. The Spirit leads the sinner through all the processes of grace, from an alien and a stranger, to be a "son of God." The Spirit continues his gracious agency, and leads the son of God through all the scenes and experience of time, onward and toward his home above.

That we are led by the Spirit shows that we need a guide. We are dim of vision, and know not the way. We are weak, and need a guard. As Israel needed the pillar of cloud to shelter, to illuminate and cheer them, so we need the Celestial Guide on our pilgrimage to the promised land.

That we are led—led by the Spirit of all grace—shows the tender care and loving kindness of God. See, in that household, how parental kindness and love is shown in leading the "little ones"—leading them with tender regard to their weakness and ignorance of the way, ever leading them at the pace and in the way best suited to them. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Our glorious Guide will direct our steps, and be with us in all the way whither we go, even unto the end of the world.

The Spirit will lead the sons of God in the way of peace, for "peace" is a fruit of the Spirit—peace with God, peace with man. True, the good man may have enemies. His life will provoke the wrath of the devil and his children. But it is not the good man's fault. He intentionally provokes no man's wrath. He follows peace with all men. Where his counsels prevail, in the family, in the neighborhood and in the church, there is peace. The man that bridles not his tongue, but stirs up strife, evidences that he is not led by the Spirit, nor is he a "son of God."

Love, too, is a "fruit of the Spirit," and it is the Spirit that sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts—that love that suffereth long and is kind, that is not easily provoked, that never faileth. The man led by the Spirit is no arrogant, God-monopolizing bigot, nor does he consign all men to perdition who do not think just as he thinks. Wherever we see an intolerant bigot, persecuting men for opinion's sake, we see a man not "led by the Spirit." The man led by the Spirit exclaims: "Would that all God's people were prophets. Let them alone: if not against us, they are for us."

It is the Holy Spirit that leads us, and therefore leads us in the narrow way of purity, the highway of holiness. But not into temptation. God tempeth no man, but delivereth the godly out of temptations. The Spirit will not lead to heresy, to skepticism or corruption of morals, but rather into all truth, and into perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. How are we led? What says memory, what says conscience, when we compare our lives with the pattern exhibited by the Spirit in the Scriptures?

If we are led by the Spirit we are making steady progress—are going from strength to strength. We are drawing nearer heaven, and are becoming better prepared for its holy and joyous fruitions. Our sins and our troubles are falling far in the rear of our ever advancing line. At each setting sun we pitch our tents a day's march nearer home. If we are led by the Spirit we are the sons of God, no matter how poor, no matter how obscure, no matter how afflicted or how persecuted; and if sons, then heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. W.

NEW ORLEANS, La., August, 1868.

THE Garo mission of the American Baptist Union is one that has lately developed a remarkable success. The Garo (Garrow on some maps) country is a tract of 25,000 square miles, situated about three hundred and fifty miles northeast of Calcutta, between the Brahmapootra river and Assam, and has a population of 75,000. Their language and habits ally them with the aboriginal population, who were conquered and nearly exterminated by some ancient irruption from the north, tribes of whom are found scattered here and there, in mountain fastnesses or distant retreats, whither they fled to escape destruction. In this respect they resemble the Celtic tribes of Europe, who were driven to Ireland, or the highlands of Scotland, or the further shores of Brittany or Wales; or still more they remind us of the yet more ancient Magyars of Hungary or the Iberian Basques. In fact, their dwellings and those of the Karens of Burmah are built on piles, like those of the aboriginal lake dwellers of Switzerland. It is among this aboriginal population that the greatest success has been met with by our missionaries. It is so in Travancore, in Madura, among the Koles, and among the Karens; while but few of the true Hindoo race have received the gospel. Conversions among this higher class are rather sporadic than gregarious. The Baptists sent their first laborers—two Garos, converted while away from their native country—four years ago. The policy has been to have all the missionary work done by natives, except as the missionaries baptize the first converts, organize them into a church, and ordain the best man among them for a pastor. It is less than two years since the first church was established; but the baptized adults now number a hundred or more, and several villages have accepted Christianity. The results are large for the short term of labor, and speedy growth is looked for in the future.

THE bishop of Capetown wishing to consecrate a bishop of Natal in place of Dr. Colenso, the Duke of Buckingham issued a dispatch forbidding government officials to have anything to do with the ceremony or with the new bishop.—Whereupon the Bishop of Natal, who wields a very vigorous pen, wrote several communications to the colonial secretary, who has issued a new order completely revoking the first; and stating that, inasmuch as the Bishop of Capetown does not wish to interfere with the title or legal rights of the Bishop of Natal, but merely to consecrate a bishop for such of the clergy and laity in Natal as may be willing voluntarily to submit to him, her majesty's government does not think it necessary to interpose any obstacle to such proceeding. So we shall see the edifying spectacle of two bishops of the same Church of England, on the same missionary soil, fighting each other, one supported by the secular and the other by the ecclesiastical authorities. The too-fortunate Zulus will stand a chance, between Broad Church, and High Church, and Dissenters, to learn something of Christianity.

THREE CHRISTIAN CHIEFS.—The Indian Mission Conference, which suffered so much during the war, and by many was thought to be totally ruined, is fast recuperating. The preachers, white and native, are hard at work, enduring great privations. The old lines of circuits and districts are being re-established. The Rev. John Harrell, the veteran who has the relation of general superintendent of this work, writes cheeringly, dating his letter at Van Buren, Arkansas, June 22. He says: "The revival power is felt in our regions. During my last tour through the Indian country about one hundred souls were converted and added to the church. Glad to say we have peace among the Indians. No confiscations—nobody disfranchised—the tomahawk buried. I mention a singular fact: The chief of the Cherokee nation, Silas Wright, is a Presbyterian preacher; the chief of the Choctaw nation, Lewis Downing, is a Baptist preacher; and the chief of the Creek nation, Samuel Chihote, is a Methodist preacher. So you see our churches are fully represented in the high places."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE Mobile Tribune says that in all parts of the South the farmers are planting pretty heavy crops of cotton.

The East Alabama Male College, at Auburn, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: The prospects of this institution are brightening. The preachers and people of the Montgomery Annual Conference are moving for its support. The Board of Trustees has adopted a judicious financial plan. A new style of college life is proposed, which will secure board and tuition for the entire collegiate year for about one hundred dollars.

You have from another a report of the commencement exercises at Auburn. I propose to briefly notice the proceedings of the Board of Trustees in devising relief for and extending the usefulness of this promising institution. The spirit of enthusiasm for the success of the college was stirred afresh by the commencement exercises. Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Summers encouraged us much by their wise counsels.

To insure the success of the college the trustees and faculty cordially agreed to administer its affairs with the strictest economy. At the last session of the Montgomery Annual Conference it was felt necessary to enlist the co-operation of the entire church in behalf of the college; to seek aid for it from the great and the small; to secure alike the gifts of the more prosperous and the widow's mite. Hence a collection was ordered to be taken up in all the churches. An attempt was made to infuse a kind of missionary fervor, for this object, into the entire membership.

The district conferences also, in some instances, co-operated heartily with the Annual Conference in projecting measures of relief, which, when properly matured, promise much good. In this state of the case the Board of Trustees, in which were representatives of several districts, informed themselves minutely of the necessities of the college, and pondered long and well the question: What is the most practical mode of securing the relief contemplated by the Annual and District Conferences? This, it was thought, was found in the following plan, which was accordingly adopted. This plan is to engage the churches throughout the bounds of the Conference to come up, each and severally, to this great work; and that all may know the need of relief expected of each, the amount deemed indispensable to the well-being of the college, and consequent prosperity of the church, was apportioned among the several districts of the Montgomery Annual Conference, viz: Montgomery district, $30; Eufala district, $20; Union Springs district, $15; Wetumpka district, $15; Jacksonville district, $10; Camden district, $8; Marianna district, $5; Lafayette district, $5; Gadsden, $5. These amounts are to be assessed by each presiding elder upon each pastoral charge.

Each presiding elder and every preacher in charge is appointed a special agent.

The general agent is to communicate with each presiding elder, and to seek to systematize collections. The subscriptions are to be made either in cash or payable at any time before the meeting of the next Annual Conference. A circular letter was ordered to be sent to all the friends of the college within our limits.

This simple and feasible plan, which, if faithfully and earnestly executed, cannot fail to establish upon a firm basis an institution which all large-minded men regard as an indispensable auxiliary to Christianity, and of the first importance to our country.

The Board of Trustees will meet at Greenville on the Saturday of the next session of our Conference, upon which occasion Bishop McTyeire has kindly promised us ample time to investigate the workings of this plan, that we may render honor to whom honor is due for an efficient discharge of this important duty. My brethren, shall we not, in this respect, provoke one another to good works? Will any be found standing all the day idle, in stolid indifference to this great work? I trust not. No, let us say that sanctified intellect, trained in all learning and knowledge, and always ready to give a reason for the faith that is in us, shall never perish from our altars. The world is our parish, and throughout that parish we must send from these halls of learning holy men, with apostolic endowments, to lift the standard of the cross, and gather the heathen for an inheritance unto Christ. The church and the world expect this of us. Let us not be sluggards in this vineyard of God.

A new and important feature was ingrafted by the board upon our college system, which promises great good to a large class of young men in the present impoverished condition of the country, and is received with much enthusiasm. It is a plan to extend a collegiate education to young men of small means, who thirst for knowledge, but are not able to pay the usual rates of board and tuition. Upon this point the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, In the overthrow of the fortunes of the Southern people there are many young men who desire a collegiate education, who are unable to meet the usual expenses necessary to obtain its inestimable advantages; therefore,

Resolved, That to put education within the reach of the largest possible number, we invite young men of limited means to enter the Auburn College, and promise to provide them homes at small cost, and to furnish such facilities for cheap boarding that those who are willing to endure hardships as good soldiers, and to live, while struggling for the possession of knowledge, upon soldiers' rations, in the style familiar to thousands of our brave youths, may subsist at a cost of about six dollars a month.

Resolved, That the faculty be instructed to receive, for the tuition of such worthy young men of small means, half the usual rates of tuition in cash, and take their notes for the remainder, payable when they shall have earned it after graduation.

This was not a hasty impulse, an ill-considered piece of generosity of the board. No, it was deliberately determined to systematize this plan, and make it work without friction, to all who avail themselves of its provisions. It is but the honorable discipline of self-sacrifice to fit the worthy for high achievements, and bears some analogy, but for peaceful purposes, to the far-famed training of West Point. A glance at the poverty of our country reveals the fact that a system like this is imperatively demanded in the present emergency. The young men who avail themselves of it will be found to come out of this school of self-denial, like David and his compeers, honored superiors in all intellectual prowess. The Executive Board was constituted a committee to carry out the provisions of this system.

The young men who come under its terms will apply to W. C. Dodell, George C. Dillard, Simeon Percy and E. T. Glenn, of Auburn, who will give them the necessary aid in this matter. It is believed that in the operation of this system one hundred dollars will cover the entire cost of board and tuition for the collegiate year. On the other hand, we have all the facilities necessary for the more prosperous. Those who have no occasion for strict economy can procure elegant board for from fifteen to eighteen dollars per month. In this healthy, pleasant and easily accessible town of Auburn we have advantages, intellectual, social and economical, unsurpassed in the South. Here the highest culture the mind is capable of, within the four years allotted for the college curriculum, can be obtained. We offer the highest inducements to the young men of Alabama, and invite attention to them. The college exercises will be resumed on the first Wednesday in September next.

THE POET OF THE MILLION.

The Nashville Advocate says: "The Poet of the Million is the title of a book noticed by the Methodist Times. It is a memorial of the Rev. Richard Dukes, who is styled by the Times 'a Charles Wesley of primitive Methodism.' Here is one of his poems on Acts xiii, 48:"

And first, it does not signify,
So far as I can see,
To preappoint, to predestinate,
Or, as 'tis said, decree.
Whate'er ordained may signify
In any other place,
In meaning here is to dispose,
To be disposed by grace.
Thus when the word of life is preached
With power from above,
Some are disposed by his word
To seek the God of love.

Suppose a hundred men were met
To hear the preached word,
And ten should there and then repent,
And turn unto the Lord;
Suppose again the hundred men
Should meet another night,
And twenty more unto the cross
Should take their happy flight.
So on until the hundred men
Ordained by the Lord.
But when the other ninety came,
And food for mercy call,
They must conclude, along with me,
That God ordained them all!

MR. HOLMAN HUNT'S PAINTINGS.

NUMBER TWO.

Let me first describe Keats' 'Isabel.' I may dismiss Boccaccio, for Mr. Hunt, by quoting Keats, has indicated the true godfather of his ideas.

'Fair Isabel—poor, simple Isabel!' such is the key-note of the poem, from which even in the horrible scene Keats never departs. She loves Lorenzo, 'a young palmer in love's eyes,' with a mutual love, long cherished, long undeclared. She is the sister, living in the palace of two wealthy Venetian merchant princes; Lorenzo their clerk. Lorenzo and Isabel 'could not in the self-same mansion dwell without some stir of heart, some malady.' At meals they sit wrapt each in other's thoughts. At night each 'dreams to the other,' and 'nightly weeps.' His voice fills her ear, 'pleasanter than noise of trees or hidden rill.' She spoils her 'half-done broidery,' muttering his name. 'O may I never see another night, Lorenzo, if thy lips breathe not love's tune,' is her evening prayer to her pillow; 'to-morrow I will ask my lady's boon,' his evening promise to himself. But, alas! 'Honeyless days and days pass on.' Sweet Isabel's 'untouched' cheek falls sick 'within the rose's just domain, thin as a young mother's.' And so day follows day, adding to, not diminishing, the restraint of these sensitive and delicate natures. 'How ill she is!' said he. 'I may not speak, and yet I will. * * * If looks speak love-laws, I will drink her tears, and at the least 'will startle off her cares.' At last she half surprises his secret, he hers; 'his erewhile timid lips grew bold, and poesied with hers in dewy rhyme.' 'Parting they seemed to tread upon the air,' only to meet again; and so for many a day, close in a bower of hyacinth and musk,' 'free from whispering tale,' they 'shared the fragrance of each other's heart.' Alas for the treacherous path of true love! A plague upon the lady's brothers! 'How was it these ledger men could spy fair Isabella in her downy nest? How could they find out in Lorenzo's eye a straying from his toil? Yet so they did.' 'Many a jealous conference had they; many a time they bit their lips alone; and at the last these men of cruel clay cut Mercy with a sharp knife to the bone, for they resolved in some forest dim to kill Lorenzo, and there bury him. * * * She weeps alone, for pleasures not to be; sorely she weeps until the night comes on: and then, instead of love, O misery! * * * The breath of winter * * continually bereaves the sick west of some gold tinge, and plays a roundelay of death among the bushes and the leaves, to make all bare before he dares to stray from his north cavern; so sweet Isabel's gradual decay from beauty fell because Lorenzo came not. Often-times she asked her brothers, with an eye all pale, striving to be itself, what dungeon climes could keep him off so long? They spake a tale time after time to quiet her. * * * Lo, a vision. * * * In the drowsy gloom, the dull of midnight, at her couch's foot Lorenzo stood and wept; the forest tomb had marred his glossy hair. * * * Isabel, my sweet! red whortleberries droop above my head, and a large flint-stone weighs upon my feet; around me beeches and high chestnuts shed their leaves and prickly nuts. * * * Go, shed one tear upon my heather-bloom, and it shall comfort me within the tomb; * * * though I forget the state of earthly bliss, that palace warms my grave, as though I had a seraph chosen from the bright abyss to be my spouse; thy paleness makes me glad.' * * * See, as they creep along the river-side how she doth whisper to that aged dame, and, after looking round the champaign wide, shows her a knife. 'What feverous hectic flame burns in thee, child? What good can thee betide that thou shouldst smile again?'

'The evening came, and they had found Lorenzo's earthly bed; the flint was there, the berries at his head; * * * clearly she saw, as other eyes would know, pale limbs at bottom of a crystal well. * * * Soon she turned up a soiled glove, whereon her silk had played in purple fantasies; she kissed it with a lip more chill than stone, and put it in her bosom, where it dries and freezes to the bone those dainties made to still an infant's cries. * * * At last they feel the kernel of the grave * * * with duller steel than the Persian sword they cut away no formless monster's head, but one whose gentleness did well accord with death, as life * * * love never dies, but lives, immortal Lord, * * * if love impersonate was ever dead, pale Isabella kissed it, and low moaned. 'Twas love; cold—dead, indeed, but not dethroned; * * * in anxious secrecy they took it home, and then the prize was all for Isabel; she calmed its wild hair with a golden comb, and all around each eye's sepulchral cell, pointed each fringed lash, the smeared loam with tears, as chilly as a dripping well, she drenched away; and still she combed and kept sighing all day—and still she kissed and wept; then in a silken scarf—sweet with the dews of precious flowers plucked in Araby, and divine liquids come with odorous ooze through the cold serpent-pipe refreshfully—she wrapped it up; and for its tomb did choose a garden-pot, wherein she laid it by, and covered it with mould, and o'er it set sweet basil, which her tears kept ever wet; * * * and she forgot the stars, the moon, the sun, and she forgot the blue above the trees, and she forgot the chilly autumn breeze, she had no knowledge when the day was done, and the new moon she saw not; but in peace hung over her sweet basil evermore, and moistened it with tears unto the core; * * * and so she ever fed it with thin tears, whence thick and green and beautiful it grew. * * * O melancholy, linger here awhile! O music, music, breathe despondingly! Moan hither, all ye syllables of woe, for simple Isabel is soon to be among the dead, * * * she withers like a palm cut by an Indian for its juicy balm.'

I have gone through Keats' poem at some length, partly because the reader who has not the poem at hand may like to have a general outline of Keats' conception, partly to show the great capabilities of the subject, and, above all, its essentially idealistic and romantic nature.

Let me now describe, as faithfully as I can, Mr. Holman Hunt's picture, and the first and general impression conveyed to the spectator apart from any reference to the story. First, as to colors—a strange, sharp contrast of opaline white drapery on a large pink figure, with hard, dark blues, lurid yellows, as of some poison plant and livid greens. Starting out of the canvas a magnificent girl draped in white, with the lines and muscles of an athlete, turns a full face upon the spectator, with her head inclined upon a majolica flower-pot, out of which a splendid plant of basil grows aloft. Her raven hair streams all round the roots of the plant; one arm embraces the vase, letting the hand droop idly over the rim; the other arm gathered against the foreshortened bosom rests its bent fingers against the opposite side of the beloved vase. The vase itself rests upon a wooden prie dieu, upon which, half drawn up, a miracle of painting, the left leg reposes. The right foot, well planted, stands full upon the marble floor of curious device. The whole attitude is one of lazy, half-waking, staring unconcern—the health and richness of the hands and feet, a perfect wealth of blood and velvet, are not to be surpassed. The neck and shoulders are those of a girl who might walk twenty miles every day of her life. And the face? The undeveloped face of a possible shrew and terrible vixen. Large black or brown eyes vacantly glaring out of the canvas, with a possibility of very vicious and very violent temper in the whites; no sentiment, no idealism—panting lips, full, firm, ripe, unblanched, (as for the critic who thinks he sees a quiver in the upper lip, I envy his imagination;) a general look of faint disgust, as if she had had a tiff with mamma about some pet project the night before, and was lazily recalling it; a turbid brow indicative of possible violence, but not a trace of the labyrinthine web of ideal emotions, and the terrible frenzy of ideal attachment which alone could dictate an action at once so horrible, so harrowing, yet so exquisitely and poetically tender—the tenderness and poetry of a love which swallows up even death. In a word, Mr. Holman Hunt has painted a shrew in her teens before her trials, and, so to speak, in the green tree. Keats has painted an exquisitely tender and headlong nature after a long course of heart rending frenzy, and in the fallen and disintegrating fruit. If I were to suggest the type of character that would suit the picture, I should unhesitatingly say that of the celebrated Rachelle when dying of illicit love in Phædra. Mr. Hunt has painted a commonplace, violent-tempered Italian girl, with a vicious eye and a muddy brow.

The sins, then, as they appear to me, of the picture are, I submit, not against any mere theory of idealism in painting. They are against truth in the conception itself upon any theory either of realism or idealism. Realism is as much bound to adhere to truth as idealism. As much realism may be brought to bear upon the subtle conflict of expressions and after-storm of terrible passion as in the painting of a mere animal. But, of course, one implies very different kind of work to the other—not less, but more. Experiments in the color and painting of a Gubbio watering-pot, or a majolica vase, are one thing, the knowledge and study of the subtlest anatomy of human expression in its varied phases another.

I do not presume to dictate to Mr. Holman Hunt what school he will adopt; I only venture to point out, as an outside spectator, that the picture is not true to the subject as a conception on any theory, either of realism or idealism. His Isabel is quite the girl who later in life might have cut off her living lover's head if he displeased her; quite capable, too, of murdering the brothers who murdered her lover; not by any means the girl whose first thought on dreaming the truth was to recover the darling head, and keep it forever, even in death, instead of being revenged upon the ruthless destroyers of her bliss. Instead of heavenly sweetness breathed upon and devastated by demon's woe, and a paradise of expression, furrowed into waste and wilderness, and a thousand cross channels, by the hurricane of an overwhelming calamity, we have muscularity run mad, angry health, vacant peevishness, and, in the place of the actual effects of storm and tempest in the past, vague possibilities of future ill temper.

This criticism is therefore independent of the value of the picture merely as a picture—independent of its mechanism and technical composition. I shall not enter into the controversy between the Præ-Raphaelites and their antagonists. I shall not discuss whether Mr. Holman Hunt's 'Isabel' is one picture, or, in reality, several pictures in one. Unquestionably many parts—might I not say any part?—could be cut out and framed separately, and it would stand alone, and be enough to immortalize the painter as a technical colorist. I shall not suggest that the hands, though beautiful, do not belong to one another cook's proceedings in the kitchen is a different kind of criticism; it is the criticism of methods and procedure. A painter alone is competent to criticise methods. Results are intended for a wider circle, and are open to wider remark. This is my apology for the criticism I venture to offer. Still, I may be thought to have spoken with too much confidence and too much self-assertion. Let me make a clean breast of it. I asked myself how I should show most respect for Mr. Hunt. I said: 'Mr. Hunt is a great man, an artist of life-long labor and devotion to his art, and you are nobody.' Should I mince my words, and shuffle, and suggest, and insinuate, and qualify, and veil my thought, and hide my sting? And I said: 'No, if he was standing in the room by his picture he would prefer, could he look into the exact thought of his spectators, great and small, learned and unlearned. In the name of all the Smiths and all the Joneses who may think as I do, he shall have mine, without exaggeration and without abatement, just as they come into my mind, when I sit in my slippers, my pipe in my mouth. May they not darken the cloud that rises from his!' I admit at once that, had I known Mr. Holman Hunt personally, I could not have written with the same freedom. That is a question of courtesy and common intercourse. But where malice is absent, and no question of personal consideration arises, surely the most absolute sincerity is the truest homage which reverence can render to merit.—Bernard Cracroft in Fortnightly Review.

Dore, the Matchless Illustrator.

BY PROF. WM. WELLS.

Among the towering geniuses of French art at the present moment no name is more familiar to his own nation and better known to art-lovers throughout the civilized world than that of Dore. As an illustrator he has no equal in the world; but his talent does not stop here. He uses the brush with a facility that gives him a high rank among artists, although as a colorist he is deficient; mainly, perhaps, from his habit of hasty sketching, for his finest efforts seem to be inspirations. He seizes his pencil, and, like the wand of the magician, it calls up with the flash of thought forms the most weird or natural, according to the subject.

Dore is himself; he belongs to no school, and knows no master. He sprang from the bosom of the people, and still speaks to the popular heart. For a man of his fame and deeds he is marvelously young—but thirty. In his earliest years he showed that he was born with magic fingers. As soon as his infant hand could grasp the pencil it irresistibly began to delineate; his copy-books and school books were all covered with the limnings of his agile fingers; and no sheet of white paper or letter envelope was safe from his attack. He had but one desire, that possessed him by day and occupied his dreams by night. He was born in Strasburg, on the Rhine, but he sent his heart to Paris as soon as he was old enough to read of its treasures of art, and learn that it is the receptacle of everything beautiful in France, and, as every Frenchman solemnly believes, the greatest and grandest city that the world has ever known.

The old story is here repeated; the father was a plain, practical man, a civil engineer; he desired his son to adopt a profession that would insure him wealth and comfort rather than one so fickle and unreliable as that of artist. He told his boy how artists and poets and authors frequently starve in Paris, and how engineers make money and live in comfort in the provinces. But young Dore was not to be frightened by any tales of Parisian misery and destitution; and at last the father promised him a visit to the great capital during the coming school vacation. Dore, keeping his own councils with regard to his artistic hopes and aspirations, secretly places in his trunk a thick package of drawings. Arrived in Paris, he seizes the first opportunity to call on the celebrated Philipon, the father of political caricature in France. The French, more than any other people, revel in this species of satire, and will indulge in it at the risk of their pockets and their necks. This same Philipon drew upon himself in one year over fifty suits, and when he sank with one sheet he would soon rise, phenix-like, with another.

The world-renowned Charivari, the Parisian daily Punch, was founded by him, and still flourishes in all its glory. It conveys many a sly innuendo with the pencil that no one would dare commit to type, and we recall scores of pleasant hours when otherwise solitary meals that would simply have been taken for the stomach's sake were enlivened and digested with Charivari's sly jests and telling sarcasm. Philipon possessed great power in discovering latent talent and rare gifts, and secured for the world the remarkable Gavarni, whose very existence has been entwined with the long and successful history of Charivari. His fame had thus reached young Dore, and to him the artistic adventurer directed his steps. Philipon examined the productions with great care, and found in them all the faults natural to an untrained boy, but admired his rich imagination and rare sharpness of observation. He praised and blamed, but encouraged the boy so much that the latter returned to his father and triumphantly related his success with the renowned caricaturist.

The father immediately repaired with the young Dore to the artist, who repeated his convictions, and assured him that the boy was born for art, and would succeed in that and probably fail in any other career. The father then yielded with the condition that his son should spend two years in school at Paris. Dore entered a college, studied some, and drew more. At the tender age of fifteen he left his studies and commenced his career as an independent artist. Fortunately for Dore the revolution of '48 now burst forth, and gave him an ample field for the exercise of his talents. He produced an immense number of caricatures for the comic journals, and surprised the public by the abundance and originality of his works; but this surprise was destined to increase. Dore now began to illustrate various works with a rapidity which bounded on the fabulous. The wandering Jew was then very popular, as were the stories of Balzac; these were grandly illustrated by Dore, and then he began Dante, Don Quixote, Milton, Lafontaine, Tennyson, and the Bible. These came with such rapid strides that the public could scarcely recover breath from surprise, and is still regarding him with wonder and astonishment.

In his thirty-sixth year Dore has already produced about forty thousand illustrations. Such power of continued labor and activity is of itself well calculated to fill us with astonishment. Even the prolific Dumas can scarcely dictate more rapidly than Dore throws off his drawings. These are not, cannot be all master-pieces. Dore himself confesses that among this immense mass many are very ordinary; but his thoughts flash upon him like the lightning, and as they strike his brain the fingers respond. The most of these drawings are thus impromptu, and still show an astonishing imagination and gift of invention, a deep poetic conception, and a rare humor.

As painter Dore has also executed many works, but critics praise his rapidity rather than skill with colors. He has been seriously advised to stick to his pencil, but he does not heed these counsels, and occasionally produces something so excellent that the first artists applaud him. His taste is for large pictures, with little attention to details; some of his largest pictures occupy him but six weeks, Art takes to him so easily that he takes it too easily with art. The charm of his paintings is, that they are all Dore. He never copies, never imitates; he is the most remarkable case of subjective personality on record; he does not even imitate nature; he, therefore, at times shocks, but always surprises us. He has the largest studio in Paris, and still he cannot find room for his studies and paintings. He is always accessible, even while at work, and thus receives visits from the highest to the lowest of Frenchmen and of foreigners. His visitors are cordially received, and he chats, laughs, and listens while giving an occasional dash with his pencil.

In person he is quite prepossessing; he looks like a youth of five and twenty, who sees a smiling world through a clear blue eye. His physical development is rather remarkable for an artist, but he is an enthusiastic gymnast, and a story is told of a youthful indiscretion which consisted in climbing, by means of the lightning rod, to the summit of the steeple on the old Cathedral of Rouen. His adventurous spirit has led him to scale some of the most difficult and dangerous peaks of the Swiss mountains, and these very exploits seem to have lent dash and daring to his pencil. He is a spirited traveler, and travels to see and experience; in Spain he wandered for a month with a band of gypsies, and then came home and illustrated Don Quixote. He is extremely social in his habits, and a great favorite in the salons of Paris, but the wonder is how he gets time to answer all these demands, and to produce more than any twenty of the most diligent and fertile artists. These questions are asked, but never answered. Dore is a miracle. Dore is the rarest combination to be met with in the form of humanity. Dore never sees himself but in his own mirror. So say the Parisians.—New York Christian Advocate.

A HUMAN TIMEPIECE.—The ingenious Yankees have learned how to make the cheapest clocks and watches in the world; but even they may gain a new "notion" from the following paragraph:

A wonderful story is told of a man named J. D. Chevalley, a native of Switzerland, who had, in 1845, at the age of sixty-six, arrived at an astonishing degree of perfection in reckoning time by an internal movement. He was, in fact, a human timepiece, or living clock. In his youth he was accustomed to pay great attention to the ringing of bells and vibrations of pendulums, and by degrees he acquired the power of counting a succession of intervals exactly equal to those which the vibrations of the sound produced. Being on board a steamboat on Lake Geneva, on July 14th, 1832, he engaged to indicate to the crowd around the lapse of a quarter of an hour, or as many minutes and seconds as any one chose to name, and this during a most diversified conversation with those standing by; and, further, to indicate by his voice the moment when the hand passed over the quarter, minutes, or any other subdivision previously stipulated, during the whole course of the experiment. This he did without mistake, notwithstanding the exertions of those about him to distract his attention, and clapped his hands at the conclusion of the fixed time. His own account of his gift was as follows:

"I have acquired, by imitation, labor and patience, a movement which neither thought, nor labor, nor anything can stop. It is similar to that of a pendulum, which, at each moment of going and returning, gives me the space of three seconds, so that twenty of them make a minute; and these I add to others continually."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1868.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

CHEAP EDUCATION.

We call attention to a communication from the agent of the East Alabama Male College, at Auburn, setting forth the steps which have been taken by the trustees of that college for securing this desideratum. The young men of the South may take courage—the way is rapidly opening, so that any one who can command a few hundred dollars, and is willing to rough it, can secure a collegiate training. Many of our youths can cook well enough to take a professorship of cooking if it were necessary. So much for camp-life.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

This is my third year on this circuit, (De Kalb,) had great revivals last year; nearly two hundred accessions to the church. A greater number of converts and a larger proportion have continued faithful than I ever knew before.

A visible display of God's power in convicting and converting sinners this year, up to this time, has been manifested. We have Sabbath schools at all the churches; the people are kind; large congregations on Sabbath.

But, oh, the finances! The crop was lost. The year was well nigh consumed before it was gathered. Then the high tax has left the people destitute of means. Can't pay for your excellent paper, can't pay missionary money, Conference money, nor books, nor can't pay the preachers.

From the second to the third quarterly meetings I received eight dollars. The presiding elder, one hundred miles from home, with fifty cents in his pockets. The eight dollars paid me can't be come at. The members of the Quarterly Conference raised some five or six dollars to defray his expenses home.

Now, sir, I would like you or some of your able correspondents to tell us what itinerant ministers are to do. We have but a scanty supply of the necessaries of life—none of the luxuries. Worse still: we are deprived of giving our children an education.

LIFE'S CUP.

"Pharaoh's cup," said Joseph, "was in my hand; I took the grapes and pressed them into the cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand." God had placed this cup-bearer by the king, and through him shaped the fortunes of his empire, though the Egyptian did not know it. At a much later period the great Socrates received the cup of hemlock as from the hand of his mortal foes; but our Saviour recognized the hand that pressed the grapes into his cup as that of the Divine Father: "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Peter, who was the embodiment of hearty humanity, could not thus accept the fortunes of that hour. He saw not that the Lord's hand was in it, but drew his sword against those thickening disasters, and cut off the ear of Malchus. It was a righteous indignation, and a natural resistance, and a brave deed for one who saw things as they appeared to be, and not as they really were. How should he, away from philosophy all his life, fuller of sentiment than thought, with more soul than reason, how could he see in the treachery and malice which compassed the death of Jesus "the cup of the Lord's right hand!" It seemed to the honest fisherman an hour for resistance rather than resignation—a matter to be settled with the edge of a sword.

Jesus alone could discern in the gathering gloom and the thick cloud a Father's hand. It was this sublime lesson which he taught us by his own bitter cup that is so difficult to learn. How great a providence there may be present amid raging enemies, how "light" affliction may be made by its compensating result, how short the whole story of a life of want, disappointment and anguish is, when compared with the eternal unrolling of its heavenly harvests. The fierce onset of the Jewish priesthood, the injustice of Pilate, with spear and thong and cross, and the cruelty of Herod, together constituted "the wine cup of this fury" which Christ drained. And yet it was from this wine press that we have the cup of blessing—the cup of the New Testament in his blood.

The darkest, most inexplicable problem of Providence ever presented to the human mind was that of the death of Jesus, when he lay in the sepulchre. And it was in advance that his faith solved the whole—"a cup from my Father; why should I hesitate? I will not; I do accept it. Thy will be done!" So by faith in the Father we can accept our cup of life. He mingles it. From his hand we can take anything. Among all the words of the Master none bring a greater light into the house, a sweeter peace to the mind, than this blessed doctrine. The Father presses the grapes and prepares the cup. It may be full of tears, and there may be melted in it every pearl we ever valued, all that we have lived for, all our present, all our earthly future—"the waters of a full cup wrung out." Yet, if from Him, it shall prove a consolation.

BISHOP MARVIN left New York for California on the 25th ult. The Rev. Dr. Deems writes to the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist: 'At noon to-day the Rev. Dr. Marshall, Rev. Moran and Rev. J. Young were with me, paying our adieus to our beloved Bishop Marvin, who left for California in the Pacific steamship Rising Star. The bishop arrived day before yesterday, and has spent the interval in seeing the sights of the city and enjoying the company of his friends. He is in fine health and spirits, and expects to remain on the Pacific coast long enough to hold two sessions of the Conferences in that distant field.

'Among the many pleasant things the bishop told us was the interesting fact, that last Sunday he partook of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper for the first time with all his family, his youngest child having recently become a member of the church. It seemed to sweeten the bitterness of parting.'—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE POLITICAL FORCE OF THE BOND QUESTION.

The country is fortunate in having upon its hands a money question of overwhelming proportions. Just now any question that can attract to itself the serious and thorough consideration of the different sections of the Union, and come home equally to every man in it, may be reckoned a blessing, just in so far as it can divert him from those dreadful issues about which Northerner and Southerner have contended in blood. The differences which grew up between the two sections began simply in climate, and culminated in the introduction of the abolition fury into the councils of the nation. Any other moral or religious element would have been equally disastrous to its peace. The long and terrible wars of Europe, in the sixteenth century, show a uniform result that all such elements cannot consist with civil government. The gods of the Syrian could not, in the nature of the case, ever be at peace with the gods of the Persian, unless for the while they harmonized in a common attack upon the gods of Egypt. It was one religion in irreconcilable difference with another, and every other. These grounds of conflict are now represented by contending views; not of systems of religion, but of points of conscience in the same system. And this religious element is not a basis for quiet difference—no, never. It may be only a matter of meat or vegetables, of marriage or celibacy, of the Latin or the vernacular, of the East or the West, of Episcopos or Presbyteros, if it only have this indigestible matter of the "higher law" shred into it. "There is death in the pot," politically as well as prophetically.

The Saviour recognized the utter incompatibility of these matters when he separated between the things of Cæsar and those of God; and separated all questions into two classes, the one political and the other religious; because the only notion we have of the freedom of moral forces is in the fixedness of natural forces. Something must be permanent that we may have things movable, and without steadiness in civil government there can be no religious liberty. It became, therefore, of the highest importance that the kingdom of Christ should not be confounded with the kingdoms of this world; that doctrines of party loyalty, or of popish supremacy, should be understood to be as fatal to liberty as they are to Christianity.

All this the demagogues had not lost sight of when they summoned the whole land to bring its conscience and its religion into the field against slavery and the Constitution. We have no more sound Christian principle than the framers of that instrument; but they were satisfied to adjust the political status of slavery, and leave its moral issues with God, the final judge. And so long as the matter was left where they found it, the country had peace.

In so far as slaves were property, it belonged fairly to legislation to regulate it, as any other, within constitutional limits. It could buy every slave in the land, and thus free every slave; but assuredly it might not, with the conscientious scruples of one section of the Union, force men of another section to free their slaves and destroy $3,000,000,000 of property.

What we need now is to look away from this question, and from all others of the same cast, all as between the conscience of one man and the conscience of another, and busy ourselves about that which human government should control, and human wisdom may comprehend.

We think this bond question is something easily understood, and entirely legitimate. Every man that pays a tax can understand enough of it to vote intelligibly. Shall the debt of the country be paid in paper money or in gold? The Radicals say that anything else than gold was not contemplated by the bondholder. The face of the bond might be left to determine that. If it does not call for specie, an attempt now to recognize three thousand millions of the public debt as due in gold is simply an effort to defraud the people out of 800,000,000 gold dollars! To saddle this enormous debt upon the country, in addition to what it now carries, is to rivet a yoke of iron upon the neck of every citizen more galling than that worn by any serf in Europe. A man may well afford to turn away from the fortunes of the negro, and contemplate those of himself and his children, in view of this monstrous threat. 180,000,000 of dollars in gold is the annual interest of this mighty debt—more than all the profits of all the trades, professions and commerce of the whole country. No matter what form of government we may have, under this increasing burden we shall be doomed to endless poverty. There will be established an aristocracy the most fearful, that of bondholders, who will practically hold every department by the throat, with fierce and incessant cries of "pay me that thou owest."

NEW BOOKS.

The following publications of the American Sunday School Union, No. 1122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and No. 599 Broadway, New York, we have received through the Rev. R. J. Harp, agent, 112 Camp street, who has them on sale.

The Silver Cup; pp. 316, 18mo. This is a well-wrought story displaying the evils which wait upon untruth and dishonesty, even in their earliest stages. The reader is placed in almost painful sympathy with the characters to the very end of the book, and an impression is made which will not be easily effaced. All the scenery and characters belong to the Middle States.

The Orphans of Glen Elder: a Scottish story; pp. 232, 18mo. The history of a family—a widow and three children—suffering a reverse of fortune, but sustained by the industry and piety of the mother and the daughter. A son who becomes wayward is reclaimed by the silent and effectual working of early Christian teaching. The homestead which had passed out of the family is brought back again, to the delight of the reader. There are no tragic incidents in this rural picture of human life. The merits of it do not depend upon those cheap aids of sensational writing.

Isa Greame's World; pp. 360, 12mo. The history of a young Christian, through the phases of orphan life. Her consistency, cheerfulness and courage, winning and moulding her young companions, make up the warp and filling of this neatly woven tale. The practical workings of the new life are dramatically set forth, and holy and just truths are inculcated in the unfoldings of the narrative. It is an easy and attractive way of leading the young to the sober contemplation of the highest spiritual truth.

The Last Shilling; pp. 212, 24mo. A severe lesson upon selfishness—rather intense.

Pilgrim Street.—A story of Manchester life, by the author of "Jessica's First Prayer," "Fern Hollow," etc. Tom, the hero of the story, is a boy-thief, the son of a thief. He is reclaimed by the generosity and care of a good policeman. Its scenes lead the writer into a description of the wretched life led by the very lowest population of a manufacturing town in England. The writer has rather much subjective power to assign the right words to each character, though the action of the book is natural and suggestive. Police and prison experiences are rarely combined with literary gifts, so that works depicting such departments of real life are of necessity much dependent upon the imagination of the writer for their interest.

Nelly, or the Best Inheritance, by the author of "Irish Amy," etc.; 18mo., pp. 230. The gradual success of life attained by industry and economy, illustrated in the history of an orphan girl. Thrift and neatness, as elements of prosperity, are set forth with the charms which belong to youth and good principle. These books are all beautifully gotten up. The binding, the type and the paper are very attractive, and they are further enlivened by an occasional wood-cut. They are excellent for a Sunday school library.

We have also received, through Rev. R. J. Harp, agent, the unabridged edition of Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, revised and edited by Professor H. B. Hackett, D. D., with the co-operation of Ezra Abbott, A. M., A. A. S., Assistant Librarian of Harvard University. New York: Hurd & Houghton, 1867; 8vo. Issued in numbers of 112 pages each. Sold only by subscription for the whole work. Price of each number, seventy five cents. Rev. R. J. Harp, special agent.

This is a reprint of an English work. The type is refreshingly clear, the maps and engravings of excellent quality, the paper and arrangement all the very best. We have before us the first five numbers, and, judging from these, there remains nothing to be desired in the way of a Biblical dictionary. It gives the result of the earliest and the latest discoveries in archæology, and exhausts the field of Biblical research, as far as the limits of a large dictionary will admit. Under the words "David," "Antichrist" and "Church," we find nowhere else so satisfactory and complete a treatment of those fruitful and rich themes. We can readily believe that a number of the best English minds have been employed in its production. This American reprint has received some enlargement: "a fuller illustration of Oriental life from modern researches;" "a fuller recognition of the names and works of American scholars;" and "the literature of the more important subjects has been much enlarged."

Revival and Camp Meeting Minstrel. Philadelphia: Perkinpine & Higgins, 56 North Fourth street; 42mo, pp. 424.

"I'm tired with visits, modes and forms,
And flatteries paid to fellow-worms;
Their conversation cloys;
Their vain amours and empty stuff;
But I can ne'er enjoy enough
Of thy best company, my Lord, thou life of all my joys."

This is the first verse we open upon—rather dittyish. But when we consider how much poor poetry is read, enjoyed and sung by people who will neither read, sing nor enjoy any other kind, we welcome this song book, the more especially as it contains a great many camp meeting melodies that are mixed with the first memory we have of holy songs and happy faces. We have, however, one standing complaint against all collections to urge against this one, that it does not contain "The Old Ship of Zion."

CAMP MEETING.

DE KALB CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I send you for publication a notice of two camp meetings, one at Linwood, to commence Friday before fourth Sabbath in September; the other at Piney Springs, (new place,) to commence Friday before second Sabbath in October.

Itinerants and local ministers are invited. JAS. M. GANN.

AN inventive genius in England advertises 'noiseless boots,' which are especially recommended to clergymen, physicians and barristers. Why clergymen should be included in this category it would be difficult to say. In churches it is the people rather than the parson who offend the ear by their creaking boots.

SOME of the Paris journals state that a few days back, just after the Emperor and the Empress had left one of the rooms of the Palace of Fontainebleau, in which they usually sit, an immense chandelier, suspended from the ceiling, fell with such force as to break in the flooring.

THE London newspapers follow Mr. Longfellow's movements rather industriously. His interview with Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle, and his visit to Tennyson's home on the Isle of Wight, are the last two topics discussed.

JEAN INGELOW, three times a week, gives a charity dinner to children. She says that one of the great pleasures of writing is that it gives her more money for charitable purposes than falls to the lot of most women.

PRINCE NAPOLEON has presented the Imperial Library with a specimen collection of American bank notes.

HORSES IN BATTLE.—The extent to which a charger can apprehend the perils of a battle-field may be easily understood by one who confines his observation to horses still carrying their riders; for, as long as a troop-horse in action feels the weight and hand of a master, his deep trust in man keeps him seemingly from great terror, and he goes through the fight, unless wounded, as though it were a field-day at home; but the moment that death or a disabling wound deprives him of his rider, he seems all at once to learn what a battle is—to perceive its real dangers with the clearness of a human being, and to be agonized with horror of the fate he may incur for the want of a hand to guide him.

Careless of the mere thunder of guns, he shows plainly enough that he more or less knows the dread accent that is used by missiles of war while cutting their way through the air, for as often as these sounds disclose to him the near passage of bullet or round shot, he shrinks and cringes. His eyeballs protrude. Wild with fright, he still does not most commonly gallop home into camp. His instinct seems rather to tell him that what safety, if any, there is for him must be found in the ranks; and he rushes at the first squadron he can find, urging piteously, yet with violence, that he, too, by right, is a troop horse—that, he too, is willing to charge, but not to be left behind—that he must and he will 'fall in.' Sometimes a riderless chargor, thus bent on aligning with his fellows, will not be content to range himself on the flank of the line, but dart at some point in the squadron which he seemingly judges to be his own rightful place, and strives to force himself in.

Riding, as it is usual for the commander of a regiment to do, some way in advance of his regiment, Lord George Paget was especially tormented and pressed by the riderless horses which chose to turn round and align with him. At one time there were three or four of those horses advancing close abreast of him on one side, and as many as five on the other. Impelled by terror, by gregarious instinct and by their habit of ranging in line, they 'closed' in upon Lord George so as to besmear his overalls with blood from the gory flanks of the nearest intruders, and obliged him to use his sword.—Kinglake's Invasion of the Crimea, Vol. IV.

LOCKED IN.—Most of the young men who went to Christ Church yesterday morning, to hear the fine music, in their anxiety to obtain good seats in the gallery, neglected to read the notice which was placed on the doors. Therefore their surprise can be imagined when the Rev. Mr. Meech announced, before commencing the services, that the doors to the galleries would be locked, in accordance with the notice on them, from the commencement of the service until the close of the sermon. This precaution had been taken, he said, to try and do away with a growing evil. It was customary for a large crowd to come to this church on the occasion of any festivals, to stay during the musical part of the service, and then retire, just as the clergyman was about to commence his sermon. This was a great annoyance to the majority of the congregation, and was neither flattering to the officiating minister nor showing due respect to the house of God. While he, as well as the members of the church, were always glad to see strangers there, he hoped that the measures now resorted to would have a salutary effect in preventing the outward rush just as soon as the music was over. The blank looks that came over the faces of many of those who were crowded into the gallery were very noticeable. They were kept locked in through an unusually long service till 1 P. M.—Hartford Times.

MAKE friends of none in whom you have not implicit confidence—whom you cannot trust in all places and at all seasons. The best friendship you can make is that which is based on those feelings which spring from the observance of sacred truths.

DECEITION, hypocrisy and dissimulation are direct compliments to the power of truth; and the common custom of passing off truth's counterfeit for herself is strong testimony in behalf of her intrinsic beauty and excellence.

A SERVANT was asked how it was so difficult to wake him in a morning: 'Indeed, master, it's because of taking your own advice, always to attend to what I'm about; so whenever I sleeps, I pays attintion to it.'

IT IS estimated that within the last twenty years the Irish in the United States have remitted to their friends at home nearly £15,000,000, or $75,000,000 in gold.

KEEP doing, always doing. Wishing, dreaming, intending, murmuring, talking, sighing and repining are idle and profitless employments.

GEN. BLAIR IN ST. JOSEPH.

Gen. Blair arrived in St. Joseph on the 1st inst. A serenade was promptly arranged, when he made the following speech:

Gentlemen of St. Joseph—In addressing the large and enthusiastic audience before me I shall not insult you by calling you 'fellows,' or by advising you to throw a man in the river, who happens to differ in opinion regarding the sentiments expressed, as I understand has been done by a distinguished military gentleman in this place upon a recent occasion. I believe this to be a free country, and that the people will treat those with respect who respect the people. Our objection to the principles of our adversaries in this great political campaign is that they assume too dictatorial a tone toward the people. They denounce me as a revolutionist—say that I wish to inaugurate another rebellion, because I say it is time for the rule of the bayonet to be checked. [Great applause.] The people of the State of Missouri, and the people of the whole country, are tired of being bound to obey the dictates of their military commanders. We believe it is time for the will of the people to be carried out. This will be done. [A voice, 'We'll fix that in November.'] Yes, we will settle that in November, and we will do it peaceably by the ballot. The people are now fully aroused and none of these men will dare to defy the will of the people. Those who attempt it will come to grief, and it is time they should come to grief. Unless checked they will go on until they establish negro suffrage over this State and the Northern States, as they already have in ten States of this Union. They will extend a military despotism over all the States, and negro supremacy as far as the people will allow it. This fragmentary Congress, and the carpet baggers that have got into the Senate under the auspices of the Rump, have already attempted to degrade the white men of all the States to a condition of inferiority to the negro. This is the main issue. The people have decided in all those States where they have enjoyed the privilege of a free vote, that this thing cannot be; and I tell you that the will of the people shall be carried out in spite of the designs of these ambitious men who have trampled the Constitution under their feet, and a republican form of government shall be guaranteed to the people of the Southern as well as of the Northern States.

But we are told that even if the Democratic party elected their President, and a majority of the House of Representatives, these carpet baggers, who assume to constitute a majority of the Senate, will defeat legislation and will impose this ignorant and semi-barbarous race of negroes upon the country as the superior of the white man. Let them dare to do it, and they will find that the more than one million majority of voters who are opposed to the scheme will make it impossible for them to perpetuate such a contaminating outrage upon American citizens. The people have risen in their might everywhere, from Maine to California, and have by their votes said they will not have this negro supremacy kept up in this country. They will not be shaken in this purpose to turn aside the bayonet that is still kept pointed at the throats of the white men of the South. Neither will the Radical party in its hopeless minority be able to defeat the will of the people. I feel an abiding confidence in the success of the Democratic party of to-day because it is right.

Thanking you, gentlemen, for your very kind and attentive audience, I bid you farewell.

THREE STEPS TO HEAVEN.—The Rev. Rowland Hill once visited a poor man, of weak intellect, and on conversing with him, said: "Well, Richard, do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?" "To be sure I do; don't you?" "Heaven is a long way off," said the minister, "and the journey is difficult." "Do you think so? I think heaven is very near." "Most people think it a very difficult matter to get to heaven." "I think heaven is very near," said Richard, again, "and the way to it is very short; there are only three steps there." Mr. Hill replied: "Only three steps!" Richard repeated: "Yes, only three steps." "And pray," said the pastor, "what do you consider those three steps to be?" "Those three steps are out of Self, unto Christ, into Glory."

A SHARP Englishman lately advertised in the French papers to send two "beautiful engraved and colored portraits of the Queen of England" to any person inclosing him the modest sum of sixpence. Receiving several thousand letters inclosing sixpences, he sent to each of his correspondents two postage stamps, exhibiting the lineaments of her majesty.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

MARY HADLEY TYSON, oldest child and only daughter of Aaron and Mary H. Tyson, was born June 30, 1849, and died at her home, in Clarke county, Alabama, January 20, 1868.

The circumstances attending her death were of a touchingly sad character. A few days before the Christmas vacation, while attending school at the Dayton Female Institute, in Monroe county, and while her heart was full of a school girl's anticipated pleasures at the family fireside, a messenger came to hurry her to the bedside of a dying brother. That brother breathed his last just as she crossed the threshold of her home. Her grief was inconsolable, and in her frenzied sorrow she often expressed a wish that she herself might die. Though perhaps she little thought it, her hastily-expressed wish was fulfilled, for in a few days she was attacked by the same disease of which her brother had died, and after a few weeks of intense suffering she was buried by the side of her brother.

Hadley was a universal favorite. She loved all and was loved by all. Relatives, teachers, friends and schoolmates cannot soon forget the lovely character, the kindly heart and the native goodness by which she was always distinguished wherever she went. The death of one so young, so good, and in such blooming health, plunged her family into unutterable grief, and shocked the little community of school girls, where the loss of a lovely schoolmate is always so deeply felt. Though months have passed by since she left us, and though her schoolmates have passed through all the varied scenes of a school session, yet her memory is still as fresh and green as the turf that grows over her grave.

Hadley, though naturally good, had made no direct profession of religion previous to her sickness, yet during her early sickness, and soon after the death of her brother, she found "the pearl of great price." In her dying moments she expressed the greatest confidence in her Saviour, was willing to meet the last enemy, and, after bidding her relatives and friends meet her in heaven, and leaving messages full of love and concern to her absent teachers and schoolmates, her spirit passed away as quietly as a summer evening's breeze.

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

DEAR BRETHREN—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $10 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla favorably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. HELMBOLD.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

H. T. HELMBOLD, druggist, of eighteen years' experience, and manufacturer of Helmbold's Genuine Preparations.

Principal Depots—Helmbold's Drug and Chemical Warehouse, No. 594 Broadway, New York, next Metropolitan Hotel; and Helmbold's Medical Depot, No. 104 South Tenth street, Philadelphia.

EUREKA.

EUREKA, THE INFALLIBLE HAIR RESTORATIVE.—Dr. Van Zandt, one of the oldest and best physicians of St. Louis, has pronounced it "a most happy compound, suited wonderfully to nature, and the most valuable preparation in use for changing the color of the hair, preventing its falling off by restoring the scalp to a healthy condition." If you want a genuine preparation for the hair, try the Eureka; and you will not be disappointed. It is for sale by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle. Manufactured by

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

LITTLE EYES AND LITTLE HANDS.

Little eyes,
Like the shining blue above,
Full of light and love,
Full of glee;
Telling of a life within,
In a world of sin,
Born to you and me!
Will they see the golden way
Leading up to day?
And the God to whom we pray,
In the skies?

Little hands,
In the long and weary strife
Of a toiling life
Will they win?
Will they early learn to bless?
Recene from distress?
Will they fear to sin?
For the true, the good, the right,
Will they bravely fight?
Strew along the paths of night
Golden sands?

Little feet,
Entered on a thorny way;
Will it lead to day
And renown?
As its rugged steeps are trod,
Will they climb to God
And a seraph's crown?
Where the loving Saviour goes,
Finding friends or foes,
Will they follow to life's close,
As is meet?

Little eyes,
May they wear an angel's guise
In the upper skies!
Little hands,
May they, doing God's commands,
Rest in fairer lands!
May these little feet
Thee, dear Saviour, run to meet
At thy mercy seat;
And with joy for sins forgiven,
Press to heaven!

Trades and Professions of Animals Birds and Insects.

BY AMICA.

"You all know that spiders are great hunters."

"Oh, yes, papa, we see their webs full of flies and bugs, and all sorts of things," said Hugh.

"Well, in South America there are spiders with bodies two inches, and legs seven inches long, that make very large nets or traps, in which a small kind of sparrow is often caught, upon which these great insect hunters feast with delight. The wolf spider sometimes hunts about for prey, and sometimes sits quietly in the mouth of his cave, ready to pounce upon unwary travelers as they pass by, and then dragging them down, he feasts upon them at leisure. There are very large spiders also in the South of Africa, that jump several inches in springing upon their prey, and when frightened can leap a foot. A writer mentions that the frigate in which he once returned from Africa to Europe was perfectly overrun with cockroaches; so, before leaving the coast the captain took on board six of these enormous spiders, and they proved to be very useful passengers. They seemed to be always lying in wait, ready for their prey; and if a cockroach only stepped out of his hole for a breath of fresh air, he was immediately siezed, and slaughtered without mercy."

"But," said Annie, "I would rather have the cockroaches than the spiders. Did they not sting the people, papa?"

"No, these spiders were more of hunters than soldiers, and as they did not want to eat the people, did not trouble them. Quite a celebrated hunter is the ant-lion; but he does not owe his success to the speed of his legs, for although he has six of them, they are very feeble members; indeed he gets on almost as well when they are cut off as when he has the use of them. He manages, by strategem, to secure a plentiful supply of food. Just as men-hunters dig a pit fall, to take wild beasts in, so he digs a pit in some sandy spot, throwing the earth out with his strong head, and forming a funnel-shaped pit. Then, lying quietly at the bottom, almost buried in the sand, he waits patiently for his prey. Presently a little ant comes along, and looks down the side; and, as these little people are said to have as much curiosity as little girls have, it concludes to run down, and see what is at the bottom. But it scarcely reaches there when the old ant-lion seizes it in his jaws, sucks all the juice out, and throws the dry carcass out of his house. Sometimes a larger insect falls into this pit, but when it understands the case it determines to retreat, but it is easier to keep out of mischief than to recover yourself after a fall; and climbing out of a pit is no easy matter; the loose sand of the sides is continually slipping down, and in the meantime the ant-lion is not idle, but discharges, by means of his strong head, shower after shower of sand upon the poor captive, till at last it falls exhausted into the terrible jaws of the devourer. After spending about a year in this den the ant-lion changes its form and home; living for two months in a roundish house, beautifully lined with the softest of silken tapestry, and after this he comes out a beautiful insect with gossamer wings, and is then something in the form of the dragon fly."

"And then, I hope, he does not kill any more of the poor little ants, papa?" asked Annie.

"No, I believe not. Dragon flies are hunters, too, and are like very voracious and savage beasts of prey, constantly hunting and killing flies, butterflies, mosquitoes and caterpillars, and on this account are really very useful to us. They are pretty creatures, with long, slender bodies, four beautiful tinted gossamer wings, and are called by the French demoiselles, (young ladies,) and by the Germans wasserjungfern, (virgins of the water.")

"Very unsuitable names for those hunters, I think," said Hugh.

"Mantes are curiously shaped, long-legged creatures, and very expert hunters. They are called mantes, or fortune tellers, some ancient writers say, because their coming shows spring to be near; others say because they foretell death, or famine. It was thought that they walked softly and modestly, because they were so wise; and it was believed that if a child asked the way to any place, they would always stretch one leg out and point to it.

"Well, it is getting late, but I must really tell you of one more hunter—the frog—for he is such a queer creature. Most useful he is, too; for he eats a great many insects, and as he will not touch any but a living one, and is beside very voracious, he is quite valuable in a garden, or about a dwelling. His sense of hearing is so acute, that if he is sitting quietly in a room, and a fly lights down on the soft carpet, some little distance behind him, he hears it, and immediately turns round, his eyes glistening and his limbs stretched out, and then creeping stealthily and noiselessly up, just as a tiger does toward its prey; when near enough he stretches out his long tongue, which is coated with a gummy mucus, and directly the fly is glued to it, and drawn into the mouth. About the middle of July the frog pulls off its jacket and pants. When ready to strip himself, he doubles his arms, and begins to rub his sides, till presently his clothes split open in the back; then he pulls off first one leg of his pants, and then the other; next one jacket sleeve, and then the other; and now he is out in a new suit; but I suppose he has worn the old ones so long, he feels an affection for them, and cannot make up his mind to throw them away; so rolling all up into a big sort of pill, he swallows it."

"Papa," said Lucy, "you know Shakespeare said,

'Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.'

"Was it really believed in his day that there was a precious jewel in the head of the toad?"

"Yes, there were printed instructions for obtaining the toad-stone. It was said that you might know if the stone was the right and perfect stone by holding it before a toad. 'If it be the right stone he will leap toward it, and make as though he would snatch it; he envieth so much that man should have that stone.' But we must not close with superstition and folly, but with the recollection that, 'As every river can conduct us to the sea, so every creature points us to an ocean of infinite wisdom.'"—Southern Boys and Girls' Monthly.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Presbyterian, writing from Beirut, speaks most favorably of the efficiency of the Syrian Protestant College, and especially of its medical department:

"The two medical professors already at work have attended to more than seven hundred and fifty cases in the dispensary of the college, for the benefit of the medical students. As this medical service to the poor is gratuitous, it is even more beneficial to the country than to the college. Another chair, that of surgery, is now in a fair way of being endowed. The professor, Dr. George E. Post, of New York, has already secured a considerable sum in America; and a large contribution will be obtained in England, through the efforts of Mr. John Hough, who has offered to raise half the endowment in England if the other half can be raised in America. A site for the permanent buildings of the college has been purchased; and it is hoped that, when an effort is made to collect a building fund, the friends of education in the East will lend a helping hand. It is not easy to estimate the influence of such a college as this, and that under the presidency of Dr. Martin, in China, on the future of the Arab and Chinese people."

JOSH BILLINGS says he will never patronize a lottery so long as he can hire anybody else to rob him at reasonable wages—a resolve that is worthy of general imitation.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FRUIT CULTURE.

The people of Maryland, Virginia and other Southern States have a great deal of land for sale, and great necessity for making more profitable what they do not sell. There is great occasion to increase the product of ordinary crops, and still greater for introducing others which shall prove more profitable. Nothing is so promising in this direction, nothing so easy to accomplish, as fruit growing. There is no mystery about the business. Every one who owns a piece of land at all, owns trees and shrubs, and has some knowledge of their mode of treatment. He need only give the subject a little more attention, and the interest which an important matter deserves. Fruit cultivation has greatly increased within some years in more northern States, but the demand for its products goes ahead of the supply. The number of acres in the United States in 1840 was estimated by Mr. Downing at 3,000; an intelligent estimate makes it now 100,000. But the price of grapes has increased, and the price of native wine three or four fold.

Passing over other fruits, many of which might as well reward intelligent care, and give the landholder a large income from a well tilled surface comparatively small, we wish especially to urge attention to the cultivation of the grape. There is a drawback here, we may mention, in passing, in the formidable disease which sometimes blasts the crop. But we have rinderpest and hog cholera, and rot in sheep, and fly and rust and smut in wheat. As these are ills which all flesh is heir to, so all crops and all animals are more or less subject to like influences. We do not hear that grape growing is anywhere abandoned because of the disease, but intelligent men are everywhere combatting it with more or less success. Some seasons there is little of it. It may, like similar evils in many cases, pass away and become only occasional; or hardy varieties may be found, which will have constitutional vigor enough to resist its attacks. Already a well-known and valuable variety is comparatively exempt from its attacks. This variety—the Concord—though less esteemed than several others for the table or for wine, is so productive and so vigorous that, bringing, as it does, a good though not the highest price, it is likely, for the present, to take the lead for market purposes.

One great advantage of grapes over other valuable fruits is that they may be sold at once in the markets, and the time of sale extended through several months, as they may be easily preserved; or they may be manufactured into wine at even a greater profit. The demand for fruit, and especially good fruit, grows rapidly, and the health of the people in cities, as well as their taste, calls for a greatly increased supply.

But the demand for wholesome wine and good brandy is even more urgent. With all the temperance preaching in the world men will have wine. Our private opinion is that a thriving, well-to-do people ought to have it, not for abuse but for use. If men abuse a good gift, it is the fault of the men and not of the thing abused. But it is very much to be desired that they be not cheated into the belief that some 'villainous compound' is the good thing they seek. There is more champagne wine sold in the city of New York than is made in the whole champagne grape region.

Apart from the matter of wine, let us look at the value of the grape crop as we find it, in what we should think the most unpromising grape region, the State of Massachusetts. A correspondent of the Horticulturist says: 'Two of the largest grape growers in the State tell me that they make $1,200 per acre per annum with the Concord.' The originator of the Concord grape, in the same State, says: 'One acre of well established, healthy vines will give about seven tons of grapes, worth at wholesale, on the average of the last four years, fourteen cents per pound, or about $2,000. This amount, large as it is, has been exceeded in many cases, but if you reduce the result one-half you still have one of the most profitable crops known to our husbandry.' Now, we may add, reduce this half one-half more, and is there any crop of wheat or corn or tobacco which will begin to compare with it in profit? Or is there anything to deter us from the growth of the more profitable crop? There is no mystery about its cultivation. It is much simpler work than the management of a tobacco crop. It is far less laborious. The work is at no time heavy or pressing, except at harvest, when extra hands can be easily had for the pleasant and cheerful labors of the vintage.

There is no impediment or hindrance, but the want of enterprise, or the want of disposition to look a new undertaking in the face and turn it to advantage. Yet there are native Maryland farmers who have devoted hundreds of acres to the growth of strawberries, and others who have planted hundreds of acres in peach trees, and some who have planted pears largely, and some grapes.—Almost all who have persevered and given due attention to their business have prospered. Had the number of them been three or four-fold there would have been by this time such a demonstration of fruit growing capacity in the soil and climate of the State as would have saved her landholders from the beggarly prices at which many of them must sell their lands.

But the necessity which is upon our farmers now of getting large products from small surfaces, and with the least cost of labor, will give a stimulus in the direction of fruit growing which will not be unheeded, and we look to see an interest in the subject which has been heretofore unknown.—American Farmer.

IS DRAINAGE MANURE?—What are the effects of drainage? Thorough drainage deepens the soil. Of what use is it to plow deeply and manure heavily while the soil is full of water? The roots of plants will not go down into stagnant water. The elements of plant food are not all on the surface; many of them have been washed down by the rains; some of them are found in the decomposing rocks themselves. Take away the water and the roots will find them.

Drainage lengthens the seasons. In our climate this is an important point to be gained. If by drainage one or two weeks could be gained, it would be quite a relief to our backward springs, when there is so much to be done in so short a space of time.

Drainage increases the effect of the application of manure; the soil being drier is more easily worked fine; the manure is also more evenly distributed. The water, also passing through the soil, carries fertilizing matter down to the roots of plants. When there is stagnant water, manure must decompose slowly, if at all; but let the water pass off, the air is admitted, and decomposition takes place.

What observing man is there who does not know that his crops are improved in quality by drainage? Sweet English grass and clover take the place of sedge and rushes.—Agriculture of Massachusetts, by C. L. Flint.

PUMPKINS AMONGST CORN.—Almost all 'old-fashioned farmers' take off a crop of pumpkins from their cornfields, much to the annoyance of the theorist, who demonstrates to his entire satisfaction that the one crop must detract from the full force of the other. But the most careful experiments show no loss to the corn. The same weight results from an acre, with or without the pumpkins. It does at first thought seem as if it ought not to be so. If it takes just so many bushels of corn to fatten a hog, it is not clear how we are to fatten two from the same quantity. This is the argument of the theorizer. But the facts are as we have stated; and the reason probably is that the pumpkin and corn feed on entirely different foods in the soil, so that the one can go on without the other.—Western Rural.

SCIENTIFIC.

Ancient and Modern Engineering.

Whether the works of ancient builders and engineers were of greater magnitude than those of modern times is a question difficult of solution, and one which might, perhaps, be answered in a manner nowise complimentary to our own ers, when we consider the stupendous scale upon which they of the earlier ages, with only the rudest machinery, and mainly by the application of manual power, completed tasks which neither the ravages of war through the lapse of barbaric ages, nor the crumbling assaults of time itself have been able wholly to destroy, and even the fragmentary remains of which excite the astonishment of all earth's peoples to this day. In the immense pile of Cheops, covering eleven acres and rising in gray and rugged symmetry to a height of six hundred feet; in the dark Sphinx, bearing beneath its scarred forehead the typical features of nations that died three thousand years ago; in the imperishable columns that mark where once Tadmor in the desert stood, and tell yet the story of the dark-eyed Zenobia, whose lithe horsemen were crushed down by Roman legions on the barren sands; in the broad roads over which those legions marched to conquest and spoil, and in the wrecked capitals strewn on the sites of the cities whence they of Marathon and Salamis went to the struggle of field and flood—we find the evidences of skill of which even our own age might be proud, and of an outlay of mechanical effort to which we can scarcely afford a parallel. When we look, however, at the results of all this labor, we find that it dwindles to comparative insignificance, for the pyramid served no purpose but to hold the ashes of a single Pharaoh, or possibly as an observatory for astronomers whose labors gave nothing to future times; the Sphinx recalls but the faint remembrance of an idolatrous faith that has faded away; Tadmor was but the magnificent stopping place of caravans that traded with the lands further to the east, and the sum of whose merchandise for a year could now be borne by a single railway train; the broad highways that from every point of the horizon led to the Eternal City were suited only to unshod steeds and beasts of burden, and the immortal porticoes of Grecian cities, though constituting the birthplace of art and music, were builded by the toil of helots scarce better than the brutes they drove as they brought the marble from the quarries; so that while ancient engineering was great in its conceptions of size and beauty, it was small in what it added to the real welfare of mankind.

How different from this is it in our own time, when, although we may fail to equal the chaste elegance of Grecian column and arch, and neglect to raise monuments like those that tell the hoary antiquity of Egypt, the greatness of engineering is estimated not by what it costs, but by what it does. In these latter days engineering science, taking the simplest phenomena of nature for the starting point of invention and discovery, has made of the vapor of water a power that multiplies a thousand-fold the capabilities of human labor, and of the occult force of electricity a messenger more fleet than was the fabled Mercury as he sped on missions from the court of Jove. Of stone and brick it builds break-waters to guard from the storm waves of the ocean, harbors where gather merchant ships from every coast, and light-house towers to warn with far-streaming signal lights the mariner from dangerous reefs. Descending to meet the most ordinary wants of life, it furnishes household and workshop with appliances of use and comfort, and rising to grapple with problems which the energies of ancient times have failed to solve, but which the necessities of our own demand should be met, plies to-day its battle pickaxe in the ditch that Nechos sought to dig across the Isthmus of Suez, so that before many years are past the way from the Straits of Gibraltar to those of Babelmandeb shall be opened and the route to India be shortened five thousand miles.

It is in things like these that the contrast between ancient and modern engineering is shown in the strongest light; and it may well be said that while that of the olden ages was grand in simple magnitude, its results in the advancement of humanity to better destinies were vain and futile in comparison with those accomplished in our own.—American Artisan.

THE BURIAL OF SHELLEY.

BY HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH.

Wrote Shelley, in dejection, at Naples:

'I could lie down like a tired child,
And weep away this life of care,
Which I have borne, and yet must bear,
Till death, like sleep, should steal o'er me,
And I should feel, in the calm air,
My cheek grow pale, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony."

A few summers hence, and the stormy waters of the Mediterranean engulfed his weltering body, and breathed their last monotony over his dying brain.

He was a disappointed man, seeking for solace in travel and by gratifying his esthetic tastes. But the amenities of social life, the sweet habitudes of domestic affection, the loveliness of Italian skies, and the classic grandeur of the old Italian cities, had failed to dispel the gloom that overcast his mind. He was ambitious to undermine the popular confidence in Christianity, and to place in its stead an airy philosophy of his own. His opinions separated him from the world; he found his philosophy unsatisfying; and, without human sympathy, without a God and the hopes and consolations of religion, there was in his heart a perpetual sighing, a longing for something unattained.

His had been a checkered life. His atheism had caused him an expulsion from college; his infidelity to the wife of his earlier years had brought her to a suicide's grave; and his impieties, as expressed in his poems, had made him a hapless wanderer among mankind. His beautiful child—the idol of his heart, the fair-haired Willie—had pined and died, and been laid away from doting eyes forever amid the mouldering ruins of Rome. Although not yet thirty years of age, accumulating sorrows had silvered his locks and stolen the freshness from his youthful beauty; and the impression must have crept over him at times that his life was in 'the sere and yellow leaf.' He had won a sudden and resplendent fame, and been dazzled for a time by its glare; but the charms of poetry and the fascinations of literary society had lost much of their early attraction. He once wrote to his wife in the following despondent manner in these altered days:

'My greatest comfort would be utterly to desert all human society; I would retire with you and our children to a solitary island in the sea; would build a boat, and shut upon my retreat the floodgates of the world. I would read no reviews; I would talk with no authors. If I dared trust my imagination, it would tell me that there are one or two chosen companions besides yourself whom I should desire. But to this I would not listen. Where two or three are gathered together, the devil is among them.'

His last days were passed chiefly at Villa Magni, on the desolate beach of the magnificent Gulf of Spezzia. It was the summer of 1822. His mind was much occupied in the project of publishing a periodical, devoted to liberal politics and to atheism. He left Villa Magni in July, to join his old friend, Leigh Hunt, at Leghorn; and, in the delights of restored friendship, these two susceptible and sympathetic spirits journeyed together to Pisa. Here they met Lord Byron. Shelley, unconscious that the wheels of his destiny were so soon and suddenly to be arrested, spent some felicitous hours with these chosen companions. He took leave of his brother poets, to return over the waters of the Mediterranean to Villa Magni. A violent storm arose, and the shallop in which he embarked was lost.

His body was cast on shore near Via Reggio, on the Mediterranean. It was unsightly and decomposed; and, as the quarantine regulations demanded that everything drifting ashore should be burned, his friends resolved to reduce his body to ashes before removing it to Rome. Byron and Leigh Hunt gathered with a few friends around the distorted remains, feeling the hopelessness of worldly hope and the uncertainty of human schemes. Here, on the wild beach of the Mediterranean, with their dead companion in view, the cheerless philosophy of these two speculative poets was put to the severest test. They must have felt the hollowness of those wayward reasonings that rob the soul of its virtue, of its spiritual reunion with God, and of its eternal hope. But this disquieting providence, while it awakened their fears, only steeled their hearts, and led them to seek for solace in reveling and hilarity—the only consolations that atheism extends to the stricken soul. A funeral pile was erected after the manner of the ancients, and the body of Shelley was laid thereon. The wood was kindled, frankincense was poured upon the pile, and the flame curled up, and perfume filled the air. It was a serene summer day. The winds were hushed, and the bosom of the sea scarce revealed its pulses. The Mediterranean lay in front, resplendent with sunny islands. Behind, the cliffy Appennines rose to heaven, their skirts dark with forests and sequestered shades. On the right was the gold-tipped waves of the Bay of Spezzia; and on the left the distant spires of Leghorn glimmered in the sun.

The flame died away at last, and these antique obsequies ended. Byron, Leigh Hunt, and their friends now gave loose reins to their turbulent passions. 'When the duty was done, and the ashes collected,' says Galt, in his Life of Lord Byron, 'they dined and drank much together; and, bursting from the calm mastery with which they had repressed their feelings during the solemnity, they gave away to frantic exultation. They were all drunk, they shouted, and their barouche was driven like a whirlwind through the forest.'

The ashes of Shelley were interred in Rome, by the side of his own dear Willie. He has been called the 'poet of poets,' and on his memorial stone is inscribed

'COR CORDIUM.'

We cannot better point the moral lesson conveyed by the strange obsequies than by quoting the words of St. Augustine: 'Lord, thou hast formed us for thyself, and we are disquieted till we come to thee.'—New York Independent.

THE death of the late Queen of Madagascar will probably not affect the English mission unfavorably. The chief conspirators appear to have been heathen; but a number of Christians—how many is not known—were also implicated, and have been arrested by the government, which has acted with great vigor in repressing the insurrection. The new sovereign proclaimed her intention to maintain the policy of her predecessor. The missionaries, who are greatly distressed by these occurrences, do not appear to have been in danger, and have received messages of friendship and encouragement from the government; and though it is to be deplored that any of the Christians should have been betrayed into conduct so dishonorable and disastrous, it is to be hoped that the treason of a few may not be the cause of diminishing the liberty or damaging the reputation of the true and loyal portions of the community.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following,

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE
On the corner of Camp and Common sts.
(In the Spacious and Elegant Story Building,)

Is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and is chartered by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish; separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000, $2000, or $3,000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a passport in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students the present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers. Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1820.)

Warerooms, Nos. 641 and 646 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 15th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

With the exception of a moderate business in the supply of country orders by the wholesale trade, the general market has continued extremely dull since our last report. A wide difference between the views of factors and buyers has prevented the execution of some small orders pending for our leading staple, the movement in which has been of very limited extent. Nothing of any moment has been done in sugar and molasses, very little in tobacco, and only a jobbing and retail business in Western produce, without any material variation in prices.

On Monday, the 10th instant, two bales of new cotton were received by the steamer Governor Allen—one raised on the plantation owned, before the war, by Mr. Jefferson Davis, and now worked by his former slaves for the present proprietor, Mr. Joseph Davis, and the other from False river, Pointe Coupee. The former was badly ginned, and damp from being picked in rainy weather, and would not class better than Good Ordinary. The latter was well ginned, of good color and staple, and would class Strict Low Middling. The first regular receipts last year were on the 19th of August.

The showers have been less frequent during the past few days, and it is hoped that a timely spell of dry, warm weather for the rest of the season will prevent any serious injury to the growing crop. But should it continue rainy the effect cannot be otherwise than disastrous.

The river remains the same, being now twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed on Friday at a complete stand-still, and with no basis for regular quotations, but that it might be represented by 24c. for Good Ordinary, 26c. for Low Middling, and 28c. for Middling, since which there has been no material change, although the accounts from both Liverpool and New York are of a favorable tenor, the former market being quoted on Saturday at 9¾d. for Middling Uplands and 10d. for Orleans, showing a recovery of ⅛d. of the previous decline, and on Monday at 9⅞d. and 10⅛d.; and the latter ruling on Saturday at the previous rate of 29c. for Middling Uplands, and advancing on Monday to 29½, and 30c. Under the influence of the above accounts several buyers came forward on Saturday and took 90 bales, at very irregular prices, a part being at previous quotations, and part at one cent higher. On Monday there was a renewal of the previous demand, but owing to the difference between factors and buyers the business was confined to 68 bales. On Tuesday there was less inquiry, buyers being repelled by the high prices asked, and the only sales reported were 38 bales of styles specially wanted, and therefore commanding outside rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 191 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 39 bales, against 136 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 97 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 587,095 bales, against 710,808 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 286,200 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 26,087 bales to Great Britain, of 94,303 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 788 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	—	to —
Ordinary	—	to —
Good Ordinary	24	to 25
Low Middling	26	to 28
Middling	28	to 29
Strict Middling	—	to —

Sugar.—Since our last review there has been very little animation in this market, and the transactions have been principally confined to jobbing and retail lots. Rates have ruled firm, but unchanged.

Molasses.—Extreme dullness has prevailed, there being in fact no market for this article at all.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, moaquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

ALABAMA.—GOVERNOR'S VETO OF ELECTORAL COLLEGE BILL.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 11.—A flutter was caused in the Legislature today. Gov. Smith sent into the Senate, where it originnted, a veto of the bill authorizing the Legislature to cast the electoral vote of the State. Gov. Smith snys:

'After the most mature reflection I am forced to the conclusion thnt the bill is wrong in principle, and that it would be a dnagerous precedent in a republican government. As my judgment does not approve the hill, it is my constitutional dnty to return it to the Seaate with my objections.

'It cannot bnt be regarded as remarkable that the first Republican Legislature convened in Alabama shall, in the face of the prineiples of its nrganization, which every Republiean professes to hold dear, deny, not only to the colored bnt to the white men, the right, by his vnte, to indicate his choice for a President and Vice President of the United States, and take the matter into its own hands. What excuse can there be for it? It is mere party expediency? If so, then it is an abnndonment of the principles, or an acknowledgment thnt the materinl nnt of which the Republiean party is composed cannot be trusted. In other words, it is to say that the colored men will not do to be trnsted.

'This action of the General Assembly will be regarded as still more remarkable when considered in connection with what seems to have been the almost nnanimous opinion of the leading members of the Republican party of Alabama. It was believed by most of them, and so represented at Washington, that a large majority of the voting population of the State were in favor of the new constitntion. This was as much as to say that the Republican party was in a large majority in the State, for it is well known that none but Republicans favored the constitntion, and even some of them opposed it. If the party is as strong as it has been snpposed to be, then the necessity of party expedieney does not exist; bnt even if it did exist, we would not be justifiable in resorting to it.

'As much as I desire the election of Grant nnd Colfax, I am nawilling to become a party in behalf of that desirnble result, to a scheme which practically denies the very principles for which those standnrd bearers stand pledged before the country.'

The message created a warm discussion, and caused much bitterness. Sibley, Coon and other extreme Rndicals were violent in their expressions about the Governor. Mr. Coon stroagly nrged the defeat of the veto, and said that the object of the men who were sustaining the Governor in this matter was to get up a wnr. If the war must come, let it come; he was ready for it, and ninety thousand freedmen of Alabamn wonld give the opposition a belly full of war before it was over with. He would stand by the Repnblican party in Alabama in the war, and victory would perch on its banners.

Mr. Jones replied to Mr. Coon, and told him thnt his remarks were revelntionary, bnt that if he wanted war he could have war; and the war would last until none of his sort desecrated the soil of Alabama. Mr. Jones said that he was a Republican, bnt when war is talked about and Alabamians are to be slaughtered, he would be found on the side of his own people, those in this bright and sunny, bnt oppressed land, to whom this country and the government of it justly belongs. He said he could raise a squadron of town boys and whip out anything the gentleman from Iowa could bring against him. He could marshal twenty thousand colored men to follow his banner in defence of Alabama and Alabamians. The colored men of intelligence knew that the carpet baggers were not their friends, and that a squatter would desert them in the hour of peril and need.

The debate was conducted altogether by Republicans, there being but one Democrat in the Seaate. Without action, the Senate adjourned to 5 P. M. It is not likely that the hill can become a law over the Governer's veto. The Legislature will probably adjourn to-morrow.

Later.—The consideration of the message of the Governor, vetoing the bill which allowed the Legislatnre to cnst the electoral vote of Alabama, was postponed until 10 o'clock to-morrow. A great many members have already left.

The following card from Mr. Jones, a Republicaa, will appear in the morning papers. Mr. Joaes and Mr. Coon are both Republican Senators:

'SENATE CHAMBER, Aug. 11, 1868. —Having been denied the privilege of repeating in the Senate Mr. Coon's incendiary remarks in the Governor's office on the morning of the 11th of August, I hereby publish said remarks, to the best of my recollection: He said to the Governor that he would not leave there until some measure was adopted for the protection of those whom he calls loyal men; that if any Union man's blood was spilled in Dallas county, he would lay the houses of Dallas county and the city of Selma in ashes. W. B. JONES.'

WASHINGTON, Aug 18.—Rosecrans left this morning for the White Sulphur Springs, Virginia.

On the same train and in social company with Roseerans were Gens. Ewell, Longstreet and Hunton.

Gen. Lee is at White Sulphur Springs.

General Rosecrans returns on Thursday.

Yesterday's rumor thnt the French and Prussian legations had received warlike advices is pronounced in the proper quarters too absurd for contradiction.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Thn Republican Congressional Committee has been sending out twenty-five thousand political documents per week, and expect to send fifty to a hundred thousand per week until election.

The recent riotous proceedings of the Butler Zouaves have ventilated circumstances connected with the disbanding of the militia companies in the District. The President ordered them disbanded. Grant referred the order to Gen Emory, who returned it with the indorsement that there was no authority for such a proceeding, since martial law did not exist. The order was returned to the President with his indorsement, and there the matter rested.

Mr. Watts, minister to Austria, is here waiting instructions.

A long cabinet session was held to-day—all present bnt Welles.

Letters from Kansas report repeated outrages by Indians, beating men and outraging women in a shocking manner.

The London Herald has an article on the life and past services of Thaddeus Stevens. The writer thinks that many wiser and abler Americans than Mr. Stevens have lately been lost to the cause of the country, bnt that the Republican party will long feel that they could have better spared a better man.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Admiral Farragut comes home in October.

A collector of New Orleans not yet named.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Hon. Henry M. Watts, minister to Austria, and his wife, left here to-day, at noon, for Philadelphia.

Having received his instructions from the State Department, Mr. Watts will sail for Europe in a few days.

The President has directed that the unexecuted portion of the sentence in the case of Tolar, Powers and Watkins, convicted and sentenced to be hanged by military commission in Raleigh, for alleged murder of a negro, who had violated the person of a respectable white girl in Fayetteville, N. C., be remitted and the prisoners released.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—The chairman of the committee of five appointed by the recent Mississippi convention, writes that there is an evident intention on the part of the Democrats of the excluded States to vote at the coming Presidential election. If the least encouragement is given by Johnson they will undoubtedly vote. The chairman adds that fears are entertained that the bill passed by Congress is not sufficiently explicit in all respects, and in conclusion he says: The Republicans of Mississippi are anxiously expecting a September session of Congress. Their very existence as a party and as individuals depends upon Congressional measures of relief.

Gens. Hancock and Rousseau were among the President's visitors to-day.

Grant's adjutant general, Rawlings, has recovered from his recent illness. Rawlings' wife is also better.

By a recent order issued by Gen. Sherman, the Cheyenne, Arapahoe and Camancho Indians are given a reservation lying between Kansas, Texas, Arkansas and the 100th meridian. Gen. Hagle commands the reservation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Regulations for the preservation of fur-bearing animals in Alaska will issue shortly from the Treasury Department. The penalty for their violation is $500 to $1,000 fine and six months' imprisonment.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Experience has demonstrated that mixed races in the fire department is a mistake.

The negroes have been discharged and white men re-employed.

It is stated that during the recent trial of mixed firemen the displaced white men have been patient and uncomplaining, and in no instance have they threatened or used violence.

SERIOUS ENCOUNTER BETWEEN GREEKS AND TURKS.

A London dispatch of the 15th says:

Dispatches received to-day from Constantinople state that a serious encounter took place at Pera, two miles from the city, between the Greek residents and the Turks, in consequence of the violation of the grave of Prince Mirdites. The troops of the Sultan were called out to suppress the riot, and fired upon the Greeks, killing and wounding a large number. Many of the latter fled to the residence of the foreign consulates for refuge. The trouble was finally suppressed by the active measures of the soldiery.

CABINET—DISAGREEMENT ON MEXICAN QUESTIONS.

A special Washington correspondence of the 15th says:

There is understood to be a serious disagreement in the administration with regard to the instructions to be given to Minister Roseerans. The whole question is to be considered again at the cabinet meeting on Tuesday. Mr. Seward, it is believed, decides that the same instructions which were given ex-Minister Campbell should be handed over to Gen. Roseerans, while the President favors a more positive policy for the protection of American interests in Mexico.

SERIOUS TENANT TROUBLES IN IRELAND.

We copy as follows from a London dispatch of the 15th:

Dispatches have just been received from Ireland giving the particulars of the deeds of lawlessness which occurred yesterday near Tipperary. It seems that while one of the great landlords of that region, named Scully, was serving the usual notices on his various tenants, he was shot and killed by some unknown person. A strong body of police soon after made their appearance on the scene and attempted the arrest of the culprit. The police in turn were attacked, and two of them shot dead and four badly wounded. Several arrests were subsequently made, and at last advices quiet had been restored.

Later.—Further advices from Tipperary received this evening. The agent of the landlord, Scully, was not killed, as at first reported. He endeavored on Tuesday to serve some ejectment notices on several tenants in the vicinity of Tipperary, where he was attacked by a large body of them, including many women, and was obliged to fly to the city to save his life. Yesterday he started on the same erraad, accompanied by a large body of armed police. On reaching the hamlets of the tenantry his efforts to serve notices were met with derision and threats of violence. The police endeavored to disperse the mob, when a fierce free fight ensued, during which the police fired on the rioters several times, the shots being returned by some of the crowd. Several of the mob were wounded, as were a number of the police. Scully was seriously wounded, and the police retired unable to make any arrests at the time. Tipperary is in a high state of excitement, and further trouble is apprehended.

"Working Up" of the Ashburn Case.

CONFESSION OF ONE OF THE SUBORNERS.—AFFIDAVIT OF WM. H. REED, GOVERNMENT DETECTIVE, ETC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1868.

Personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace for the District of Columbia, William H. Reed, who, being duly sworn, deposeth and sayeth: I was telegraphed to by H. C. Whitley, a government detective, to come to Washington from Boston, Massachusetts. In answer to that dispatch I arrived in Washington on the 6th of March, 1868. I joined H. C. Whitley; he took me to Chipman & Hosmer's office, on Fourteenth street, and they told me they wanted to employ me as United States government detective in the impeachment of the President of the United States. Hosmer took me up stairs in the same building with his office, to a one-legged man's room, whom they called Doctor. Hosmer told me to go around the hotels and make my report every day to the Doctor. In a few days Hosmer sent me to Gen. O. O. Howard, commanding Freedmen's Bureau. He, the General, told me to make my report to Major Mann. I did so with several other detectives, including a number of negroes, to the 14th or 15th of April, and was paid by the Dr. and Major Mann $300 Gen. O. O. Howard then ordered me to go to Atlanta, Georgia, and report to Gen. Meade, to work up the Ashburn murder case. He (Gen. Howard) says you go there by order of Gen. Grant. He (Howard) sent me to Major Mann, who paid me $100. Gen. Howard gave me a letter to Gen. Meade in Atlanta, Georgia, stating that I came as a government detective, and he (Gen. Meade) to pay my expenses. I arrived there about the 18th of April. Gen. Meade referred me to Major Smythe, that he (Smythe) knew about the Ashburn murder case. Before I arrived in Atlanta there had been several arrests made in Columbus, Georgia, and Major Smythe informed me that he had discharged them for the want of evidence to implicate them with the murder of Ashburn. He told me I could not make anything by going to Columbus, but hoped I could make up a case. Gen. Meade ordered me to go to Columbus. I staid there two or three weeks in this time. I felt it was necessary for me to arrest several parties, H. C. Whitley having been sent for by Gen. Meade at my request. Gen. Meade desired I should not make any arrests until the arrival of Whitley. Gen. Meade telegraphed to Washington to have the government telegraph to Whitley, who was then in Kansas, for him to come immediately to Georgia. He arrived in a few days. Whitley came to Columbus and met me; we had an interview with Capt. Mills, the commander of the post at Columbus, Georgia, and recommeaded him to make several arrests, which he declined to do without an order fom Gen. Meade. Whitley got an order from Gen. Meade that Cap. Mills should arrest five or six parties, to be pointed out by myself and Whitley, and they were to be sent to Fort Pulaski. We, before the arrests were made, went to Atlanta and got an order from Gen. Meade to the commander of the post at Savannah to give us, myself and Whitley, full control of the prisoners after they arrived at Fort Pulaski. While we were on our way to the fort the following arrests were made in Columbus, Georgia: Stevens and Barber, two white men, and John Stapler and John Wells, two negroes, and sent to Fort Pulaski. Whitley and myself met them (the prisoners) at Savannah, and proceeded to the fort with them. At the fort one of the negroes, John Wells, was taken out of his cell and put into a chair in one of the easements, with a cannon poiated at his head, and a soldier hold of the string, ready to snap the cap, apparently to shoot the gun. A barber lushed his head full of lather and preteaded to be ready to shave his head. This was done to have him give evidence in regard to killing Ashburn, the negro all the time conteading he knew nothing about the murder. This farce was kept up about ten minutes; finally they put him back in his cell, with the understanding that if he did not tell something it would be worse for him. They took the other negro, John Stapler, and put him before the gun, with no better success; he was afterward put in the sweat box and kept there in great punishment for at least thirty hours, until his legs swelled, and I took him out of the box, being convinced he knew nothing about the case. At Whitley's and my request the following other arrests were made: Daniel Betz, Amanda Patterson, who were sent to Fort Pulaski. Stevens and Barber were put in one cell. Whitley and myself secreted ourselves in the adjoinlag cell, bnt we could hear no conversation between them implicating any of the prisoners. Amanda Patterson was considered an important witness and was put in officers' quarters. Whitley and myself talked with her frequently in regard to the murder, but she earaestly declared she knew none of the parties, as they were masked and painted. She acknowledged being in the house at the time of the shooting. Whitley persevered in questioning said Amanda, and said to me that he would in time get enough evidence out of her to implicate some of the prisoners and other parties, so as to give Whitley an opportunity to make more arrests. Whitley then went to Columbus and arrested other parties. A man was arrested, named Bennett, and sent to Fort Pulaski to see if I could not draw some evidence from him in regard to the murder. In my frequent conversations with this man Beanett, his prevarication convinced me if any one was guilty of the killing of Ashburn, this man Benaett was guilty. After this Bennett was put in the cell with Betz, to see if he could not draw some evidence from him. Afterward he (Bennett) was put in a room with Betz and Stevens, with the view of still obtaining evidence from both of them together. He (Bennett) admitted to me that he was in the crowd that done the shooting at Ashbura, and persuaded Betz and Stevens to acknowledge the complicity of the prisoners arrested with the murder. Whitley and myself placed Beanett with Betz aad Steveas for the purpose of working Betz and Steveas up to testify against the prisoners. We (Whitley aad myself) promised Bennett, Betz and Stevens, if they would come out and expose the whole story, if they were guilty themselves, they should be protected from punishment by the government. Amaada Patterson, Bennett, Betz, Marshall aad Stevens were all of the prisoners that pretend to know anything about the murder. These parties gave no evidence until they were imprisoned, tired out, and the evidence was wrung from them by Whitley and Major Smythe by promises of reward and security from punishment. They (Whitley and Smythe) had frequent conversations with Amanda Patterson, educating her in the evidence she had to give, also Betz and Stevens, making each one repeat the evidence over and over again to make them perfect, so when they were called upon to give their evidence they would not contradict themselves, each one to tell the same story. Whitley remarked to me frequently that this whole case was a political move, and the conviction of the prisoners would be a big thing.

The prisoners that were offered as witnesses were told that the government had offered a large reward, and if the prisoners under arrest were convicted, they (the witnesses) would get their share of the reward offered. During the time I was engaged in working up this case in Georgia I drew money from the paymaster by Gen. Meade's order.

WM. H. REED.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a justice of the peace in and for Washington county, D. C, the 3d day of July, 1868.

WM. MARTIN, JR.

THE GREAT SOLAR ECLIPSE.

Though the great solar eclipse, which is to take place August 17, will not be visible in America, yet we are deeply interested in the phenomenon. Generally, in total eclipses of the sun, the totality lasts but a few seconds, but in this eclipse the sun will be hidden for more than six minutes, nearly the maximum daration. This will give astronomers, if the atmosphere is favorable, a fine opportunity to study the scenes which will then be unfolded. The shadow of the moon passes over India, the Malay Peninsula, and the Oriental Islands. Scientific societies, aided in some instances by their governments, have been preparing instruments, and fitting out expeditions, to levy upon this extraordinary eclipse to add to the treasures of science. In a total eclipse of the sun, the disc of the moon is encompassed by a glory, generally about one-sixth of her diameter in breadth, but in some places extended into streaks as long as her diameter. The astronomer Royal thinks that this corona, as it is called, is caused by the lighting up of the earth's attenuated atmosphere in the immediate vicinity of the moon, to which it is supposed to extend. Red-colored masses of light have been observed, extending apparently from the moon's circumference, during a solar eclipse. De la Rue photographed these phenomena in July, 1860, and determined the connection of these rosy protuberances with the sun. The astronomers, in observing this eclipse, will seek to ascertain whether these prominences are the flames of burning metals—supposed to be contained in the heated solar atmosphere—or solid masses of matter, or attenuated gases, or what else. They will try to discover, too, what is the light wherewith the corona shines. The 'darkness' of an eclipse may or by night either. All the scientific world is on the tiptoe of expectation. Herschel—a son of Sir John—takes charge of a well-furnished expedition under the auspices of the Royal Society, and Major Tennant of one under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society. They are well supplied with telescopes and polarizing and spectralizing appratus. Major Tennant has also a large reflecting telescope, to be used in photographing the phenomena. Prussia sends out one and France two expeditions. We hope Secchi, from Rome, will be on hand, and other distinguished men of science from our own and other countries. We will let the readers of the Advocate see, as soon as possible, the result of these observations.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

> Show us worlds of light
> We never saw by day—

THE SCHOOL BILL.

We extract from the Picayune part of an editorial upon the bill now before the Legislature of Louisiana for regulating public schools:

This bill admits the children of the State, of all colors, from six to twenty-one years, to the public schools. It is well that Mr. Conway and his co-workers in this scheme should know that this thing will never be submitted to by the white people of Louisiana, let the cost or result of opposition be what it may. If he and his fellows think it good to accept social equality with the negroes and mulattoes, they are at liberty to do so; but they never will be suffered to impose it upon others in the public schools, or at least not until the blood of the white man turns to water, and he consents to accept what the white race of all countries and of all ages has, by common consent, regarded as a social impossibility.

Nor will he and his army of male teachers, or constables, be permitted to seize white children from their parents or guardians, to force them into his miscegenating school houses. If he attempts to do so, it will surely be at the cost of blood; for even tender, timid women will become as brave as stern warriors in the face of such outrage. Nor will he and his band of secretaries be permitted to force children into the public schools, whose parents are Roman Catholics or Hebrews, to hear read portions of the New Testament selected by such religionists. The payment of taxes for supporting such a system of interference with the sacred rights of parents, or of conscience, will be resisted to the bitter end, and such resistance will have the sympathy and commendation of the good and just in all civilized and truly Christian communities.

Our people have shown themselves perfectly willing to provide liberally for the education of the colored children. They have already established good schools for that purpose in this city. It is to their interest that this class of population should be improved as far as practicable by education, bnt it must be done in schools entirely distinct from those attended by white children. The justice and propriety of such a course is perfectly clear to every one not governed by a wish to humiliate the white race, and compel it to an association revolting to all its instincts, social aad moral.

We assert that the whites of this State are the sincere friends and well-wishers of the colored population. They regard them as an integral and important part of the community, who can become useful to it and prosperous in themselves. They feel confident that with the increase of education among those people will come the establishment of all needful guaranties of good understanding between the two races, which will bring with it progress for both. Henceforth they must live together as friends, enjoying a common prosperity, or suffering from common misfortune.

We are confident that Mr. Conway aad his fellow Radicals will require an armed force, two or three times greater in numbers than the free white men of Louisiana, to carry out their scheme. There is a limit to all human patience. Our people have submitted to much oppression, outrage and wrong at the hands of Congress aad its pets, the carpet baggers and usurpers of our rights. They have done so in the hope that time would bring with it a returning sense of justice among the Northern and Northwestern States. But when it is proposed to degrade their mothers, sisters, wives and daughters to the level of the negro race, they will resist just as certain as God reigns in heaven.

Let this scheme be disavowed by the Legislature at once and forever. Reasonable aad just laws will be obeyed until repealed; but unjust and outrageous ones cannot be enforced on a proud people without the aid of the bayonet. If that be attempted, let him that draws it beware

JACOB'S LADDER.

The following stanzas are from a recent prize poem, delivered at the University of Oxford, England, by the Rev. William Alexander:

Ah! many a time we look on starlit nights
Up to the sky as Jacob did of old,
Long looking up to the eternal lights,
To spell their lines in gold.

But nevermore, as to the Hebrew boy,
Each on his way the angels walk abroad,
And nevermore we hear, with awful joy,
The audible voice of God.

Yet, to pure eyes, the ladder still is set,
And angel visitants still come and go;
Many bright messengers are moving yet
From the dark world below.

Thoughts, that are red-crossed Faith's out-spreading wings,
Prayers of the church are keeping time and tryst—
Heart-wishes, making bee-like murmurings,
Their flowers, the Eucharist—

Spirits elect, through suffering rendered meet
For those high mansions—from the nursery door—,
Bright babes that climb up with their clay-cold feet
Unto the golden floor.

These are the messengers, forever wending
From earth to heaven, that faith alone may scan;
These are the angels of our God, ascending
Upon the Son of Man!

For the Advocate.

Restriction of the Ministry to Educated Men.

Mr. Editor: The question whether our ministry shall be restricted to men of scholastic education, or shall continue, according to our present plan, to embrace also those who, though otherwise suitable, have only limited literary attainments, will probably agitate our church more and more until settled by definite legislation. It is, doubtless, a vital question to the church. Feeling deeply interested in it, I desire you to spare me room in the Advocate for setting forth one reason, which seems to me to deserve attention, why we should adhere to our present system. It is this: that by it alone can we effectually secure the preaching of the gospel to the uneducated classes, while it does not entail a lack of suitable men to minister to the spiritual wants of the educated class.

I believe cultivated men are needed for cultivated congregations. But our church does not lack in this respect. Men of education join our conferences, and many who enter the ministry without a collegiate education attain to such scholarship as fits them to preach to our most enlightened congregations; so that our supply of scholarly men seldom falls much behind the demand of our educated congregations.

The gist of the question then seems to me to be this: Will a ministry exclusively composed of educated men serve the uneducated classes, and can they do it effectually? Let us remember that the work of a preacher, as such, is not to elevate society in the knowledge of science and literature.—True, every minister who understands the scope of his mission will be a patron of education.—Though uneducated himself, he will lend a helping hand to every enterprise for the promotion of a pure and virtuous education. Yet we do not ordain and send out men to teach grammar and logic and Greek, but to preach the Cross, to awaken consciences, to point sinners to Christ, and to edify believers in the sanctifying truth of God. We do not look to the pulpit as an agency for the spread of science. We look to it for "instruction in righteousness."

But one will reply: "An educated man is far better qualified to use the appliances of the Word to advantage than an uneducated one." This is doubtless the case when he ministers to an educated congregation. But I believe the gospel can be most successfully presented to the illiterate by a man who thinks and feels as they do, and not by one with whom they find no fellowship. When a scholarly man goes to serve an uneducated people he will soon find that the plane on which his thoughts naturally move is above that of his hearers. His sermons will be composed in such trains of thought as to be above their understanding, and in nine cases out of ten he will find it almost impossible to accommodate himself to the habits of thought and feeling to which they are addicted. An uneducated man can come into his congregation and attract more attention and exert more influence than he can. There may be exceptions to this, but I believe it is the general rule.

Now an educated man will not consent to stay where he finds no congeniality with the people, and where advantages that he has acquired by labor and expense are not only unappreciated, but ineffective also. He has toiled for an education that it might give him advantages in doing good, and he will go where those advantages can be realized.

Then his wife and children, probably, have cultivated tastes and feelings like himself, and they will not be content to make their home in a place where they have no agreeable companionship.—Things will find their level. Educated ministers, therefore, with a few possible exceptions, will not remain in illiterate communities, but will remove, whenever an opportunity is offered, to a more enlightened congregation.

Now suppose we admitted none but educated men to the ministry. The result would be that most of the uneducated communities would be left without Methodist preaching. Methodism would follow tamely in the rear of literary culture, instead of nobly leading the van and opening the way for general intelligence, as she has always done.

But the abandonment of the frontiers and the less cultivated parts of the country is not a fancied result of restricting the ministry to men of liberal education. It has been amply proven by experiment. The Episcopal and Presbyterian churches, for instance, admit none but scholars to their pulpits, and the practical working of their system has been according to what I have advanced. If we go into the backwoods, to which mental cultivation has not penetrated, we seldom find churches of these denominations; while, with our present system, the Methodist preacher and the Methodist meeting-house are found wherever there are souls to save. They cause "the solitary place to be glad, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose."

While Christ called some men of cultivated talents, he also called some who had little knowledge, save of his doctrine. Perhaps there is no point in which our church has so nearly come up to the spirit of Christ as in that she has preached the gospel to the poor. Their claims upon us demand that we should retain this mark of our apostolic succession.

A New 'Dummy.'—For something more than a year past experiments have been in progress under the auspices of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company, looking to the production of a self-moving car for passenger travel on the city railways, and as the result of these efforts a new dummy has been brought out which is worked by a steam engine constructed on the plan recently patented by Messrs. Bailey & Connell, and the furnace of which is supplied with kerosene or petroleum, instead of coal. The fire is started by a small bed of anthracite coal, which lasts all day without replenishing, as it is used merely to act as a sort of wick for the kerosene oil, which is the real fuel. There is a tank of kerosene at the point on the platform furthest from the fire. From this a small pipe leads to the fire, and a small quantity of kerosene is squirted in occasionally. No cinders or smoke are generated, but sufficient heat is evolved, the patentees claim, to keep up steam constantly in the engine with a very trifling expenditure of oil. Limited trials of this dummy have been successful, and if on further tests it shall meet the expectation of its projectors, the result will be to revolutionize the city traveling of Brooklyn, and save no end of passengers' time, horse-flesh, and wear and tear of paving stones.—American Artisan.

Lafayette Dist., Montgomery Conference.

DISTRICT MEETING, CHANGES IN CIRCUITS, ETC., ETC.

Mr. Editor: For years past the Talladega District has been a prominent field in our Conference, extending over some of the most fertile valleys, mountainous regions and densely populated neighborhoods in the middle portion of Alabama, with an intelligent and enterprising population, and a membership equal in intelligence and piety to any district in the Conference. Preachers laboring in that district were supposed to be men of endurance, and willing to work for their Master's cause. But that district no longer appears on the minutes of the Annual Conference. It is no more.

At the last session of the Montgomery Conference the best portion of the work was severed from its old connection for the convenience of others—whether by fair or foul means the Great Shepherd knoweth—and some other appointments added to the less desirable territory and organized into the Lafayette District, which extends from the Mobile to the Georgia Conference, about one hundred and twenty miles in length, embracing some fine country, good citizens, pious members and good circuits and stations, as well as some very rough and mountainous regions, poor people, and some quite destitute of the Word of Life.

There are two missions in the district, the Isabella and Wedowee, served respectively by Brothers Jos. T. Talley and W. D. Nicholson, good and faithful men, and true to the cause of Southern Methodism. Neither of them can be influenced by kindred ties, nor bought with Church Extension bribes. It is to be regretted that the Missionary Board did not find it in their power to appropriate to these missions more than one-half what they ought to have appropriated.

The church extension movements of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, in this section, may be regarded as a perfect failure. Two years since it burst forth as fire in stubble, and its friends at a distance, whose liberality had extended even unto the hated South, seeing through the glasses of those they bought with money, flattered themselves that the Methodist Episcopal Church South was in the throes of death. A few months only were required to fully establish political Methodism in every hamlet of the sunny South. But to their chagrin the wasp has been growing beautifully less ever since, and now Radical Methodism here is almost ready to be numbered with the things that were. Those marketable men who foully slander those upon whom, in former days, they subsisted, by publishing to itching ears "that they were not allowed to express their sentiments in Alabama," are shunned as though "an evil disease cleaved fast unto them." Our troubles from that quarter are nearly at an end. Praise the Lord.

Our district meeting convened on the 16th instant, at Hillabee Camp Ground, in a very pleasant portion of Tallapoosa county, thickly settled by excellent citizens and pious members of the church, where the standard of Methodism was planted by itinerant hands before the Indians were entirely removed from the country, and where her embattled hosts still push the war into the enemy's ranks.

In due time, on the first day of the meeting, quite a respectable number of delegates and brethren were on the ground, ready to listen to the opening sermon, by Brother W. S. Turner. His subject was: "The Ministry and its Relation to the Church." Before he had concluded his discourse we all promised, in our hearts, to preach more for the glory of God and the salvation of sinners, and less for personal popularity.

Everybody was anxious to see the bishop, receive godly admonitions, and from his lips hear the Word of Life. But no bishop came. On being assured of the disappointment, all tried to console themselves with the reflection that the meeting of a board of trustees of a college, or the kind greetings of city friends accustomed to the advice and labors of bishops, was of vastly more importance than an episcopal visit to the people of the country, unaccustomed to such privileges.

Having heard the sermon of Bro. Turner, and being thereby provoked to zeal and good works, the brethren addressed themselves to the work before them with a heart and mind demanded by the interests of the church of God, which had called them together.

All were delighted to learn, from the report of the Committee on the General State of the Church, that the indications were much more encouraging than any person expected to hear. In most of the circuits the discipline of the church had been faithfully executed; not with rigor, but firmly and in the fear of God. Not only this, but there were evidences of a gradual improvement in the spirituality of the membership, which, after all, is the most important subject to be looked after in the present state of the church.

For the last quarter of a century this subject has engrossed the thoughts and enlisted the hearts of the purest and most self-sacrificing of our fathers, and for its attainment wise and good men have advised different changes in our economy. The division of circuits, an increase of pastoral labor, the introduction of the lay element, and the extension of the pastorate, have been demanded of and all obtained at the hands of the General Conference, and yet there is evidently a gradual decline in the spirituality of the church. The more we yield to the demand for changes in the organic law of the church, the further we get from the desired object. The more we look after ritualism, the more rapidly do we decline in the spirit and power of the living God in the hearts of our membership. Oh, for the prophetic cry: "Awake! Awake! put on thy strength, O Zion. Arise, shake thyself from the dust, O daughter of Zion." From these changes there are no visible results; and yet our ears are made to ring with the daily cry for: Change, change.

We could but regret that so little had been done for the financial interests of the church. Pastoral, missionary and educational are all behind; and as an extenuation of the manifest failure of the church in this respect, the old plea, "the pressure of the times," was offered, and accepted, of course. How shall we answer the great Head of the Church in the day of retribution, as he charges upon us, "Ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings?" Money has been obtained for every other purpose. Luxuries, self-indulgence, personal adornments and political enterprises have all been met, while ministers of the Gospel, for the want of a reasonable support, have been forced to engage in secular pursuits in order to meet the wants of their families.

Not the least of all the exercises was the ministration of the Word, earnest and spiritual. There was evidently a deep sense of the necessity of spiritual growth pervading the entire ministry and membership, and every sermon and prayer seemed to be burdened with this subject. The Spirit of the Lord was present at every hour's service. The closing exercise, at three o'clock on Sunday evening, was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. All renewed their covenant to live more for God and eternity. O, that there may remain such a heart in them that they may keep all the commandments of the Lord, that he may soon subdue their enemies under them, and turn his hand against their adversaries.

Your's, in Christ,
Jos. T. Curry, P. E.

A recipe for cherry soup (soupe aux cerises) is given by the Salut Public of Lyons. Take, it says, a quantity of fine ripe cherries, cook them in water with sugar and a little vanilla; fry some slices of bread in fresh butter, throw them into the decoction of cherries, mix well up, and serve hot. This soup seems a favorite dish in Germany.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Spring Hill, Ala., August 11, 1868.

Mr. Editor: We are now in the midst of one of the most interesting revivals at this place it has ever been my fortune to witness. The meeting has been going on for more than a week, and up to this time twenty-four persons have joined the church, and about thirty professed conversions. The interest pervades the entire community and the awakening appears to be general. Most of the young men and women of the community have professed religion, or are at the altar as seekers. The work seems to be a genuine work of grace.

Your brother,
J. D. Cameron.

EMMERT HILLS CIRCUIT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: There are some encouraging indications in this part of the Lord's vineyard. The Sunday school cause, especially, is receiving more than ordinary attention.

I have lately closed a series of religious services, resulting in several conversions, and the reviving of the membership of the church. We are still looking and praying for better times.

Crops have suffered considerably from the protracted drought with which the country has been scourged.

J. C. Hucknee.

JACKSON CIRCUIT, SELMA DISTRICT, MOBILE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: Permit me to say to the brethren, through the columns of the Advocate, that the work of God is being revived in our midst.

The third quarterly meeting was held at Union Church, on the 25th and 26th of July. Dr. Mitchell, who is always in the right place at the right time, was with us in the beginning of the meeting, which was on the 24th, and remained, doing valuable service, until Monday evening, when he left for his home in Summerfield. Brother E. Phillips, of Suggsville, came and remained until Thursday evening, when the protracted services closed. The weather was bad and the rain fell in torrents every day, yet the house was all the time crowded with an attentive audience. The preaching of the Word was attended with the demonstration of the Spirit, sinners were convicted, mourners converted and the church abundantly revived. It was enough to touch the hardest heart to see the old and the young and the middle-aged, all singing, weeping and rejoicing together. The labors of the meeting resulted in about fifteen baptisms and twenty-one accessions to the church. Two others made application for membership, who are to receive baptism by immersion at our next appointment. We regret that the meeting closed while mourners were still lingering at the altar unconverted, and while several strong men, becoming very serious in the congregation, had gone so far as to bow at their seats, desiring that the people of God would remember them before the throne of mercy.

A. M. Jones.

ANACOCO CIRCUIT, SHREVEPORT DISTRICT.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed a meeting of six days at Oak Grove Church, on the Bayou Toro, which resulted in a deep religious influence upon this community, and has given a new impetus in behalf of the cause of our Redeemer. Our excellent presiding elder, B. F. Alexander, evinced more than ordinary zeal and diligence, and I will assure you it was with wonderful effect. We had also the good services of our young brother, Richard Adair, who has been appointed for this year upon the Manny Mission. We received twenty-four members into the church, some of whom found peace to their souls, and the church was generally revived.

I believe we have commenced a good work, which will spread a salutary influence over this community, of which I shall expect to give you notice from time to time. The tide of religious feeling has been ebbing for some time in this section of the country, and we are happy in the prospect of a reaction, and pray that the Lord will revive his work among us. We have been blessed with good crops, and prosperity seems to be looming upon our community in the future. In view of the prospects now before us we shall endeavor to redouble our energy in the good cause. Pray, dear brethren, for this back-woods circuit.

I remain, your's in Christ,
James M. Franklin, P. E.

Mr. Editor: Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of "News from the Churches," it seems good for me also to send you a note by the way.

My experience the past year is traced in lines of sadness, forming the darkest page in my itinerant history. The prevalence of epidemics, the failure of crops, financial embarrassments and the political degradation of our State, mark it an eventful year. It closed while dense darkness obscured the future. We however gathered from the wreck the fragments of means, privileges and energy left, and tried again to live. A kind Providence favored our endeavors. The death of winter mysteriously promoted the life of summer, adversity stimulated effort, national oppression prompted to personal independence. The sunshine and showers have been propitious, and the prospect of a bountiful harvest revives the joy of other years. Let us bless the Author of Good, and take courage.

Let us now turn to the pastoral field. The authorities, at our last Conference, assigned me to Plaquemine Brulee, a neat country church, twenty miles south of Opelousas, in a clever community. We enlarged the field by reorganizing two churches—one at Queue Tortue, and one at the Cove. About one hundred and fifteen persons renewed their alliance with the church, and their allegiance to God. We have received about forty-five new members, baptized seventy children and adults, organized three Sabbath schools, and registered one hundred and forty scholars. The schools are doing well. We have just closed a campaign meeting at Plaquemine Brulee, during which several persons professed conversion, seven joined the church, and many were revived. Our esteemed brethren, John Wilkinson and B. F. White, of Opelousas, labored with us.

J. D. Adams.

Mission Work in Hungary.—The American and Foreign Christian Union now employs three laborers in Hungary, under the superintendence of Rev. R. Koenig, of Perth. One of them, Mr. Riedel, was Bible agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society in Albania for three years, and has had his field of labors in Transylvania, a country which had never before been trodden by the foot of a missionary or colporteur. His success is highly encouraging. Mr. Friklich studied for the ministry two years in Basle; and he has his work in several of the southern counties of Hungary as traveling evangelist, preaching in Hungarian, etc. The third is a deaconess from Kaiserswerth.—She is emphatically a home missionary in all branches of detail—visiting the poor, the sick, the blind and cripples of all classes and creeds, and laying hold of such destitute poor as have no care extended to them from any other denomination. She has further succeeded in gathering an interesting Sabbath class of thirty-five or forty children, mostly Roman Catholics. Several Roman Catholics with whom she has become acquainted have given up their connection with the Popish Church and joined our congregation. Among them there are several cases of decided conversion. In addition, Mr. K. has eight colporteurs under his supervision, who report as (chiefly) sold 10,000 copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, in ten different languages, and also 70,000 religious books and tracts. A work so well begun and so admirably sustained, in a country so interesting and important, ought to be encouraged by sympathy and prayers, and to have the means of a great extension. A brother from Athens refers to the "tender interest in behalf of Hungary," especially now that "she has become an open field, and the people can freely return to the principles for which John Huss testified with his blood, to the religion of their fathers, to the Bible, and to the cross of Christ."—Independent.

A SUNSET PICTURE.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

The long beams glide through the lindens and larches,
From uplands clovered and cool,
And flame where the waterfall glassily arches,
And redden the foaming pool.
Dripping and still is the wheel of the mill,
For the daylight's labor is done,
And the 'prentice-lad, in his work-dress clad,
Sits on the doorstep, gloomy and sad,
With the grief of his life begun.
And yonder he marks how the miller's fair daughter
Has crossed the brown foot-plank that spans the fleet water,
And followed the sinking sun.

She has gone by the path that is lonely and shaded,
A flutter of joy in her breast;
She will bide till the purple and garnet have faded
Below the white star of the west.
And the 'prentice-lad knows that the bloom of the rose
Will die from her cheek at the last,
And the vow he has sworn be kept with scorn
By the dark-eyed wooer so proudly born—
His faith to the winds be cast!
A woman from truth unto falsehood turning,
And the old fond lover remembering, yearning—
'Tis the story of ages past!

WOODVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Aug. 3, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: By a resolution of the Board of Trustees of Woodville Female Seminary, a committee, consisting of members of the board, was appointed to attend the examination which closed the late session of the school, and to report their observations for publication in your paper. The committee attended to that duty, and report as follows:

The examination began July 27th, and was continued, through several hours a day, for three consecutive days. The pupils of the primary classes exhibited their attainments in reading, spelling and elementary arithmetic. They did well, and showed that they had fairly begun life's work.

The classes of the middle and collegiate grades were examined in geography, English grammar, arithmetic, some departments of natural science, algebra, trigonometry, intellectual and moral philosophy, Butler's Analogy and Latin. Many questions were put, which, in general, were readily and accurately answered.

The examination in Butler's Analogy and in intellectual and moral philosophy satisfied the most exacting.

There were extended Latin readings from Virgil and Cicero, which were correctly done and freely translated.

The examination in Latin exhibited the rigorously analytic method of teaching and exactness in learning.

The concert, on Tuesday night, was a true musical entertainment, and attested the competency and faithfulness of the teachers, and the ability and diligence of the pupils.

The concluding exercises were performed by the members of the graduating class. The salutatory, in French, was written and read by Miss Sallie Sims.

An original essay, on "The Immortality of the Real," was read by Miss Clara Wailes. She also delivered the valedictory, glowing with true womanly inspiration.

The general expression concerning the efforts of these young ladies was the emphatic "well done." It is not asserted that the examination was faultless. Answers might have been more readily given and in fuller voice, and with greater distinctness of enunciation. Faultlessness was not expected; but excellence was apparent.

The hesitation was often the result of effort to recall fully or to express clearly. The absence of glibness is not deemed a defect. The approving tone of this statement must not be taken for the commendation varnish with which reporters sometimes coat both teachers and pupils. The approval is evoked by the facts.

In this school honest work is done. No one acts teaching and no one plays learning. The teaching is actual, the learning real. The pupils are well governed and well boarded. They are not regulated into automata, not drilled into dyspepsia, not dieted into physical temerity or intellectual insipidity. The table is furnished with generous, home-like food.—The purpose is not to produce shadowyness, and then cramp it into parlor listlessness. The object worked for is the development of full Christian womanhood.

The sleeping rooms are comfortable and neatly kept. There is no herding. The number of occupants of a single room is limited to the requirements of agreeable companionship. The sacredness of separate individuality is recognized, and its preservation believed necessary to right education.

We commend the school to all who desire a reality worth more than it costs. Other schools may work for less rates; but what is furnished here cannot be obtained elsewhere at less price.

UNIVERSITY SYSTEMS OF GERMANY AND ENGLAND.

In Germany the universities, very numerous, and all wonderfully similar in their broad outlines, are supported, with very few exceptions, by grants from their respective governments. Very few of them have any endowments at all. They are under the direct control of the State. A special cabinet minister manages their affairs. They are free from any taint of particular religious government, the most perfect freedom and equality between different religions being of their very essence. They set before themselves a two-fold object—the promotion of learning and science on the one hand, direct education for certain professions, those for which government makes a university degree necessary, on the other. They leave the student entirely free, attempting to exercise no moral or religious control of any kind over him, but simply providing a police for general supervision, a magistrate for law, and a prison for flagrant delinquents. The students have 'the right (within very wide limits) of choosing the subject of their lectures, of hearing what lectures they please, as many or as few as they please, and when and how they please.' They have no general system of examinations like the English universities, the students of the 'bread-studies,' as they are called, divinity, law and medicine, being alone required to pass any examination at all, and that not involving anything but a very faint approach to the honor list of Oxford and Cambridge. The governments, indeed, by insisting on the 'bread-students' hearing certain lectures, exercise a practical control over the education of that portion of the university youth; but the students of 'philosophy,' (which includes everything but the bread-studies,) are under no limitation whatever. The bread-students thus commence at the universities (and have indeed commenced at the public schools, which are equally under the control of the governments) a system in which they find themselves involved throughout their career. 'Every profession is really a State office; they are all offices under government; every clergyman, every lawyer and every medical man is an officer under government, more or less.'

With scarcely an exception these universities possess no collegiate system, no visible university, the students living independently in lodgings, and largely frequenting public houses, where they generally have hired rooms. These institutions are filled with a very much larger proportion of students from the lower class than Oxford and Cambridge, 'five-sixths of them being,' it is said, 'poor men according to our ideas.'

Their leading feature is the professoriate. Everything hangs upon that body. The professors are the governors of the universities under the cabinet minister. They are paid partly by the government and partly by fees. Through the efforts of the State to secure the best men; through the rivalry between States and universities, as well as between the professors themselves; through the professoriate being a regular profession, to which men devote themselves from an early age; and finally in consequence of the few openings for an independent career in Germany—almost all the intellectual eminence of the country is concentrated in the universities. Books are chiefly written there; the press of the country is controlled and influenced directly from those centres; the policy of Germany is powerfully affected by these professors, and they not unfrequently make their way straight from the professorial to the senatorial seat.

As the universities undertake to turn out men completely fitted for the liberal professions, much of the work done at them is of course nothing more than that drilling in multiform detail which in England goes on during apprenticeship, so to speak, in the professions themselves. On all other subjects besides these the rivalry amongst the professors has the good effect of stimulating and advancing the higher class of studies, but, it must also be said, at the expense of anything like a fixing or steadying of the youthful mind. The whole system being that of teaching by professors' lectures, and not by books or examinations, 'school follows school, theory theory, till there is nothing received, nothing old, no foundation laid. In the professed home of free thought there is for the mass no freedom of thought. After a school has had its day some abler man than his fellows strikes out a new line, and anon the whole body of students, who have servilely followed the fashionable teacher, go over to the new man, who demolishes the system of his predecessor. He is always a man of mark. Crowds dwell on his lips, write down every word he says, copy even his physical peculiarities. Unprepared by any previous study, they are at his mercy. There is no time for thought. Brilliant speculation, daring theory, dazzling rhetoric, rule the hour. What is carried away from the professor is wholly untested; there is no attempt to remove erroneous impressions. Thus fashion, accident, individual genius, govern the mental condition of university life. The effect of this 'freedom' on the character and creed of Germany is too well known to need remark. Zealous lecturing, great scholarship, industrious research, profound thought, are no doubt obtained amongst a certain limited class, but at an expense which may well make Englishmen question whether it may not possibly be better to exist without them.

Let us now proceed to describe, side by side with the above outline, what are the fundamental ideas of Oxford and Cambridge.

They differ, in the first place, from the German universities, in being very ancient, independent corporations with independent courts of law, and privileges of various kinds. The State interferes with them no more than it does with any other corporation in the realm. It has on the whole left them to manage their own affairs, with only such occasional interference as any great changes in the nation, or the proof of any particular abuses may demand. There is no such thing as a supervision by any State officer, no action of the State further than the appointment of a very few professors, whose chairs have been founded by past governments. In a word, a leading idea is independence and self-government.

Next, they are in the closest connection with a particular religious system. At Oxford every doctor and master of arts, at Cambridge every member of the Senate, must be a member of the Church of England, and sign a test to that effect. This provision, and the act of uniformity, also protect, though not absolutely, the colleges. Those who are not members of the Church of England may receive their education at the universities freely and without molestation, but may not meddle with the revenues or government of churchmen, and constantly confirmed to churchmen by the nation. This connection discovers itself in university church services and sermons, regular attendance of graduates and undergraduates at college chapels, examinations in elementary divinity, education to a large extent by clergymen, the constant interchange of clergymen between the universities and the parish churches of the realm, the presence of a certain number of university men as bishops in the House of Lords, the preparation at the universities of a large proportion of their students for holy orders. This definite church connection, coloring the relations of the universities with the whole nation, is then another fundamental idea.

Next, these two institutions prescribe to themselves as their main object and duty the education of young men after they leave school. The promotion of learning and science is regarded as of secondary importance. Teaching is the special function of professors and tutors. Certain standard books are used as text-books, a system more developed at Oxford than at Cambridge, but characteristic of both places. Examinations are, with some exceptions, the constant accompaniment of all teaching in all stages; examinations of an extremely severe kind, and attracting the eager competition of the ablest youth of the country, for those abler men; of a somewhat lax nature, too lax, for the rest. To some extent, no doubt, learning and science are promoted; but to a far less degree than in Germany. Thus, naturally, the tutorial element is far more developed than the professorial. There is little or none of that rivalry of professors, that fame of particular men, that tossing and shifting of opinion, which is characteristic of Germany. Thus, naturally, the supervision of the students' course of study is of a different kind. They are free, and yet not free; free within well ascertained limits. They have large areas of choice within those limits, but the border-lines are rigorously defined. Another fundamental idea then, is that of mental and moral training under a fixed but elastic system.

Next, the collegiate system takes the place at Oxford and Cambridge of the perfectly free and independent individualism which almost universally prevails in the German institutions. Every student must belong to some college or hall. Every man's habits of life are known and controlled by university and college officers. He is responsible to a particular college tutor as well as to the head of his house, the proctors and the vice-chancellor. Some modification of this law is found at Cambridge, where a man may live in lodgings from the first, but only in lodgings under the systematic supervision of his college, being as much bound to college chapel, lectures and meals, as if he had rooms within the walls; and at Oxford, after three years' residence, when he migrates to lodgings, under less restraint than at Cambridge. This college life means the constant living, more or less, in the midst of a particular set of men of the same age, mixing with them at meals, lectures, chapel, amusements, the connection with a particular set of senior men as tutors, the obedience to certain not very stringent rules, the esprit de corps of an old established body with which an intimate connection is formed for life by the youth who enters it, and who becomes a sharer in its glories, its difficulties, its character and its influence. These bodies are endowed, some very richly, not by the nation, but by particular benefactors. The officers being paid chiefly out of these endowments, the security for efficiency lies in the test of examination for fellowships, the action of public opinion, the rivalry of colleges. A common, quasi-family life, is then another fundamental idea. The universities are composed of a number of families bound together by very numerous ties, interlacing one another in every possible manner. A visible university, or rather a set of buildings, mostly collegiate, but a few common to all, with their adjuncts of groves and gardens, characterizes Oxford and Cambridge. We can hardly conceive of them except under that aspect.

Finally, the system deliberately adopted is one which contemplates formation of the mind rather than information—general, rather than special preparation for after life. All students alike are obliged to show that they have attained to a certain proficiency in the liberal studies before pursuing even those elements of particular studies which are connected with professions. No State requirements force an examination on the universities for particular professions, all such matters being left in this country to settle themselves by the action of public opinion and the law of supply and demand.

Here, then, there is evidently no slight and trivial difference of detail, but an antagonism of fundamental ideas. The English and the German universities are two distinct species. Nor by any Darwinian theory can we trace the difference to a process of 'natural selection.' They are each of them the result of national circumstances and historical facts. They are not the product of deliberate and philosophical forethought. The national formation of Germany—its division, in consequence of the peculiar and unique growth of its feudal and imperial system, into, for the most part, small, semi-independent, rival territories—the despotic government of those territories—the hold of the reformation over the most active and vigorous portions of the nation—the peculiar character of that reformation—the religious wars which intensified territorial differences—the comparatively late period at which the civilization of the people as a whole took place—these circumstances, taken along with the peculiar nature of the German mind, speculative, industrious, independent, will largely account for the character of their universities. The most distinguished are also the latest creations. Berlin, Bonn and Munich have been founded in the present century. They, no doubt—and all the rest, far more than Oxford and Cambridge—have partaken of the more systematic character of modern ideas, and are far less than our own the result of circumstances.

Oxford and Cambridge are the children of the past. They are themselves a 'history of England.' Their unbroken continuity from the remotest periods of that history, and their share in all the political and religious changes of the country, have made them what they are. They bear a distinctly medieval impress, modified and indented by the changes of every age, so that in each age they have met what was required of them.—It is certainly not the impress they would have borne had they started full-grown, full-armed, from the brain of some modern Jove. Their collegiate character, for example, has mainly grown out of the efforts of good men, at different periods, to mitigate the abuses of the older license, and to promote the national as distinguished from the Roman character of our clergy. The endowments with which they so liberally and nobly supplied their institutions have formed a tutorial system, to which the professoriate has been an addition—a superstructure slowly and laboriously erected. That collegiate and tutorial system has carried with it the adoption of the principle of mental and moral training; for the inmates of a family must conform to the rules of the family, and their work as well as everything else must partake of the 'common life.' The church character of these institutions is the result of the ecclesiastical nature of their medieval foundation, exceptionally saved in England by the peculiar conditions of the English Reformation. Bodies which had been the centres of the reforming movements during the time of the Roman obedience became naturally the centres of the Reformation when church and State reformed themselves. The insularity of our people—the union of the different races of which they are composed—the compactness of the island, with its facilities of communication between all parts—the wealth of its population, affording a very large class of men of leisure—the freedom on the whole from great convulsions—the conservative character of English law—are all ingredients in the formation and perpetuation of our universities. They are, in fact, the only things in England which can stand comparison in every respect with the Constitution of the church and State themselves. They have run parallel with both, and will no doubt share their fate, whatever it may be.—London Quarterly Review.

Francke's Orphan House at Halle.—How it was Built.

BY REV. JOHN W. DODGE.

The tourist who gazes with admiration upon the vast pile of buildings that occupy an entire square of the city of Halle, rivaling in architectural importance the University itself, can form only a slight conception of the real vastness of the establishment known the world over as Francke's Orphan House. The best view is obtained within the spacious rectangle around which are ranged this congeries of edifices.

"Not framed to nice proportions,
But large and massy, for duration built."

Near one end stands the statue of Francke, with an orphan child holding each of his hands. The main building, and the most imposing in appearance, is the orphans' home, where four thousand children are taught and cared for by a corps of two hundred teachers. Around this are grouped a theological seminary, a normal school, publishing, bookselling, and apothecaries establishments, library, institution for widows, for poor students, the poor of the suburbs of the city, and for strolling beggars. This gigantic institution—the largest eleemosynary asylum in the world—has been doing its noble work for Germany through five generations. It stands to-day as a monument of the heroic faith of its founder, August Hermann Francke.

One of our American scholars, well known for his studies in the German—Rev. W. L. Gage—while temporarily residing at Halle, found, at a little book-stall in one of the most retired alleys of the city, an old, dingy, leather-bound volume, which he was assured was valuable, as it contained Francke's own account of the founding of the orphan house. Reassured the next day by Prof. Tholuck, of the University, of the rare value of the book, he purchased it for the small sum of twenty silver groschen—about fifty cents—and has since translated a portion of it, making a charming volume, with the title 'Faith's Work Perfected.'

The story is interesting not merely from its intrinsic merit and rich devotional spirit, but also from the fact that Francke is well known as a profound and correct thinker, a thorough biblical scholar, and a leader of a great religious movement in Germany. We may be satisfied that every particular of his experience is characterized by candor and truthfulness.

In the later years of the seventeenth century it was the custom for the poor of the city of Halle to gather in front of the doors of the citizens on a certain day of the week, to receive alms. Francke, then pastor of the church in Glancha, one of the suburbs of Halle, used to distribute bread to the crowd every Thursday. Becoming dissatisfied with this way of helping them, he determined to make an effort to reclaim the children. Reading his Bible one day, his eye fell on the passage, 'And God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work.' The words burned within him. He wept and prayed; and out of struggle was born a new and peculiar faith. He determined to put the promise to proof; and, as an earnest of his sincerity, he gave out of his poverty a hundred dollars that year to a poor family, saving them from starvation.

About this time—the year 1695—he caused to be put up in the sitting room of his parsonage a poor box, to receive the contributions of those who came to his house, on the front of which he painted an appropriate Scripture motto. About a quarter of a year afterward a person dropped into the box the sum of three dollars and a half. 'Here!' exclaimed he, with exultation of his new faith, 'is a goodly capital to work with. I must do a great work with this. I will found a school for the poor with it.' Taking no counsel of flesh and blood, he bought a dollar and a half's worth of hooks, engaged a poor student to instruct the children two hours daily, and fitted up the room adjoining his study for a school. Strangers began to take interest in the new enterprise, and continued to deposit funds in the box. Toward autumn, the number of children still increasing, he hired a room of his next door neighbor; and, at the beginning of winter, still another. Soon it became evident to him that the children could not be rescued from vice unless subjected to constant supervision. He decided to take a single orphan to train. Four were offered, and he took them all. And now the work widens steadily. The four increased to sixteen in less than three months. A house is purchased. Plans are enlarged, and the promise does not fail. It is not necessary to detail the steps of progress. A new building of masonry is commenced, and from week to week the money for the workmen is received in answer to prayer. By the same means the King of Prussia is moved to give bricks and tiles, and a royal license. An institution is commenced for poor widows, and a free table is furnished for the poor students of the University.

He was often reduced to straits; but the resource of prayer never failed. At one time the steward announced that they were out of meat, grain, wool and clothing. Francke made it the subject of special prayer. While they were at dinner a knock was heard; an old friend opened the door, and offered him seven pounds. Three more soon followed, and all wants were supplied. The circumstances had become known through a friend providentially present. The master mason came one day to inquire if he had any money to pay off the workmen. 'No,' he answered; 'but I have faith in God.' The words were scarcely spoken, when a student came with thirty dollars in his hand. Once he was in great need of a hundred dollars, and there seemed to be no way to turn. He betook himself, as usual, to prayer. The steward came in the morning and at noon, but nothing had appeared. Francke gave thanks to God for past mercies to himself and to the saints of old. Going to the door in the evening, to admit the steward, there stood a gentleman on the other side of the door, with the steward, who handed him a purse of a hundred and fifty dollars. Thus, in ten years from its inception, without solicitation of funds from any quarter, the orphan house had been completed and paid for, and was in constant receipt of means to sustain its usefulness.—New York Independent.

THE Chronicle of the London Missionary Society speaks of the eagerness of the converts in Amoy to spread the "good news." They cannot be content till they go to their relatives in different villages and tell them of Christ. In this way new stations have been formed. At Tientsin, in North China, the missionary, on his first visit, found twenty converts, the fruits of the labors of native Christians. At another place he baptized eight persons, and there were still seven applicants for baptism, the sincerity of whom he thought was put beyond question by the opposition and persecution they were enduring.

THE French Canadian Missionary Society has for its object the evangelization of a million of Canadian Catholics. Since it began its work in 1840 it has circulated 30,000 copies of the French Scriptures, established six churches of converts, and now preaches the pure Gospel at twenty-nine stations. No less than 1,800 French Canadian youth, most of whom entered as Romanists, have been educated in the schools of the society. The work was never more promising than now, when recent political events have loosened the hold of the clergy upon their flocks.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

We are in receipt of reports from these important bodies, and read them with critical interest; but have found, in the action of most of them, the same defect—nothing done for the ADVOCATE. It would seem to be a small matter to gather up a dozen subscribers in such an audience as usually is present on such occasions. But no; the reports are made out and sent on, wrapped up in a well-worded resolution about "our periodicals"—nothing more.

LETTER FROM BISHOP MARVIN.

Bishop Marvin writes as follows to the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

NEW YORK, July 24, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I have been in New York now two days, nearly, and have spent the time pretty industriously. Thanks to the kindness of two friends, Mr. Geo. E. Simpson and Rev. Eugene Hendrix, I have enjoyed good opportunities of seeing the city. Yesterday I saw about as much as a man could well see in one day. I had an observation of the contrasts—the gold room and the Bible House; Five Points and Fifth avenue; Wall street and the Park.

If I had a good capacity for gossip, I could make several long communications for the Advocate out of the material I obtained yesterday. The gold room itself is a study. Then the Sub-Treasury might make one long article. I was shown by a polite official through the Assay building, and had described to me the whole process through which the crude ores of gold and silver are taken, until they are ready for the mint. Much of the process I actually saw. Then I saw Gotham from the tower of Trinity. But I have no time for the wonders of the Bible House, or the surpassing beauties of the Park. I must say, however, that after all I had time to whip over to Brooklyn for a six o'clock dinner with my old friend, R. L. Edwards.

To-day I sail at noon, and the main object of this communication is to say to my friends in Missouri, as you love the church do not delay the endowment of Central College. I am anxious that the five thousand dollar proposition should be met right away.

I leave it as my parting request to the Methodists of Missouri to rally with money to the aid of Dr. Smith. He will do his part faithfully. Let him have that support which his great services demand.

If the Lord spares me to return from the Pacific, I hope to see the endowment a fact accomplished.

E. M. MARVIN.

FORMALISM.

A formalist takes pleasure in performing deeds, and in going through holy exercises which the spiritual man undertakes with diffidence, or wholly shrinks from as a cross. The ancient Pharisees could not consent to be seen with Christ, yet could distribute alms in a crowd, pray at street corners, and cover their robes with texts of Scripture. The Mohammedan prays from the top of the mosque to the centre of the bazar. "There is one God, and Mohammed is his prophet," is the confession of his faith which is always upon his lips; but in Christianity, to confess Christ is both a cross and a virtue. All pagans display their sacrifices and their approaches to the gods, as if they would call heaven and earth to witness to their piety. The less spiritual life there is in the performance, and the more of earth, the more readily does the worshipor crave inspection, and exclaims with immeasurable satisfaction: "Come and see my zeal for the Lord!" The ritualist shoulders his cross with such half-concealed satisfaction that it quite refreshes the world to look on while he is at it. Two hours of muscular flexion, intoning, and altar bee-hiving is thought to be a decided indication of increased piety, both in the priest and the congregation.

Those who find fault with "sound godliness" and "puritanism," allow and approve of any amount of solemn outside action in men and women who attend operas, theaters and the races, who gamble, swear and drink. The world and the formalist keep on good terms with each other; neither is much in the other's way. This noontide repose of the lion and the lamb in the same shade is a moral phenomenon. One wonders whether earth does not sometimes gobble up the offspring of formalism, or whether they can really dwell as serenely together as a prairie-dog and a rattlesnake in the same burrow. A sinner will go a long ways with you if, in turn, you go with him. All forms of Christianity, therefore, are tolerated that do not too earnestly separate from the pleasures and the maxims of the world.

These reflections were suggested by seeing a man walking, on a hot day, in the cabin of a steamboat, reading prayers very devoutly, though he had a state room all to himself, in a cool part of the boat. And we recollect to have seen men using prayer books in the street cars and other public places, as if they were directed to pray only while in public conveyances. We doubt if there can be much accomplished by this perfunctory occupation, beyond impressing thoughtful persons with the notion that these people have so much of it to do that they save time by car-praying. The Saviour must have meant something when exhorting men not to pray in such an open place. He urges them not only to go into the closet, but to "shut the door." If these gentlemen do pray under such unfavorable circumstances to economise time, those who have much to do can certainly learn an important lesson. Still the man who prayed on the boat could have saved as much time in his room as in the cabin: This having one eye on the public, and one directed to heaven in prayer, would seem to be a difficult feat, and is not approved by the Saviour, for he pointed it out as a hollow performance. The man might say that he was taking up his cross on the boat; and so the Pharisees might have answered Christ, that they were mortifying themselves at the corners of the streets. There is in these religionists a marked inclination to ventilate their "first sacrament," the fasting done during lent, the going to mass, and other such acts of devotion and self-affliction, as if their piety should lack witnesses in the last day.

To those who receive the doctrine that faith in God is essential to worship, and that faith is the spiritual apprehension of "things not seen," it seems difficult to pray in a laughing, talking crowd. The soul desires to be aided in its effort to commune with God by the most uninterrupted seclusion. It seeks to "worship in spirit," and God, who is a spirit, seeketh such to worship him. The medium between our spirit and the Holy Spirit we can easily conceive to be a perfectly transparent one; to be direct—that is, without the intervention of any thing or person. "The Spirit witnesseth with our spirits." One seeking the closest intercourse with the God and Father of his spirit should surely imitate the example of the Saviour, who dismissed even his disciples, for the while, that he might pray. All media are fatal to the high New Testament perfectability of prayer, except the medium of that all-powerful 'one Mediator," Jesus Christ. The priestly office, the symbolic service, the divine weight, measure color and form of the first Temple left nothing to the discovery of means aids to devotion, which could affect the senses or the imagination. Yet those were all swept away that we might be left alone with Christ, and that through the power of his name we might come directly to the Father. If lavers, altars, altar cloths, candlesticks, bells, chasubles or jewelled breastplate avail anything, the Jewish ones would have survived the sack of Jerusalem until now. But by the Providence of God they were buried under one hundred feet of rubbish when the office of Levi yielded to the 'order of Melchisedek."

REVIVAL NEWS.

The "News from the Churches" this week will repay perusal. The good Lord is pouring life from his right hand. The mighty Spirit is present at many points, lighting up the Israel of God with his holy Shekinah. In Louisiana and Mississippi and Alabama He is at work in awakening and pardoning men. In view of the sacred assemblings of the people, just at hand, let every member of our Zion, in unison with the ministry, call quickly and passionately upon God, in secret prayer, for a greater outpouring of his Holy Spirit!

When the Military Shal Assist the Civil Authorities.

GEN. BUCHANAN'S INSTRUCTIONS.

The following order was issued on Tuesday by Gen. Buchanan:

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA.
New Orleans, La., Aug. 18, 1868.
General Orders No. 3.

In order to carry out the instructions from the Secretary of War, relative to the assistance to be afforded by the troops on duty in this department to the civil authorities, in case of domestic disturbances or insurrections arising therein, officers commanding districts detachments and posts, will be governed by the following direcions:

Every officer will keep himself well informed of the condition of affairs in his vicinity. Should a necessity arise which, in his opinion, would render the services of troops requisite, he will immediately communicate, by telegraph, with these headquarters, stating the essential facts in the case, and asking for the necessary instructions for his government.

Under no circumstances will any interference of the military with the civil authorities be permitted; nor will the services of the troops be made use of unless upon special instructions, previously communicated, in each case, from these headquarters.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

THOS. H. NEILL,
Maj. 20th Inf., Brev. Brig. Ge., U.S.A.,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

TO SEE THROUGH A GRINDSTONE.—The following curious optical illusion may be now to some of our readers. Roll up a piece of stiff paper in the shape of a tube, with one end just large enough to fit round the eye, and the other end rather smaller. Fold the tube between the thumb and finger of right hand, (do not grasp it with the whole hand,) put the large end close against the right eye, and with the left hand hold a book, or any convenient opaque body, against the side of the tube. Be sure and keep both eyes open, and there will appear to be a hole through the body, and objects are seen as if through one hole instead of through the tube. The right eye sees through the tube, and the left eye sees the object, and the two appearances are so confounded together that they cannot be separated.

FOREIGN papers announce that Gribaldian enlistments are going on in a number of Italian towns.

PLANCHETTE.

A planchette—to quote from the merchant's accompanying description—"is a little board, shaped like a heart, about eight inches by seven; supported on three legs, namely: two pentagraph wheels, (on which she moves about, when pushed, very freely,) and one soft pencil with which she writes her mystic statements." It is, in fact, a portable table-moving apparatus, a condensed spirit-rapping arrangement, which comes along with the other improvements of the age. The dining room mahogany table, with its cumbersome tiltings, is substituted by this light moving toy—the quintessence of the machinery of modern necromancy. Facility has a good deal to do with the extent of vice. The guillotine advanced the French revolution rapidly by the ease with which it cut off a head; and the man who conceived this little plank has done the devil a great service. It can be taken into the bed chamber and become as much an object of solitary devotion as the gods which Rachel stole from Laban.

Biology is a marvelous thing, by which one imagines, at the will of another, that he is drinking wine or water, vinegar or honey. Medical clairvoyants make some mysterious diagnoses of disease, table turners move great weights by the tips of their fingers, the knockers rap out significant answers, and writing mediums seem possessed with powers at which they themselves are surprised. Now it cannot be doubted that here is a class of phenomena of which as yet there is no satisfactory explanation, but, as we believe, wholly natural, not supernatural. By some psychical and physical law, as yet inexplicable, the decisions and truths recorded in the brain of a person can be expressed by the nervous system under certain electrical conditions without the consciousness of any voluntary action or thought on the part of the individual himself. But as unaccountable as all this may be, it is not a whit more so than the process of the fact that a message sent from London at five o'clock arrives in New York at three o'clock on the same afternoon.

Those, however, who practice this modern art of "consultation" with the unknown, claim that it is something more than nervo-electrical in its origin—that it is supernatural, and that by this simple contrivance they pass a thin boundary which separates between spirits and men. They, so to speak, get at the spirits more readily and intelligently than the Chinese do who reach their departed friends by the medium of fire, explosive gases and other imponderables; even succeeding so far as to be able to transfer values from this world to that, for their benefit, by burning gold paper dollars. This honest belief that the veil is pierced which God has put between the visible and invisible world, in so far as the parties themselves are concerned, raises this planchette practice to the first moment as a moral question. Whether the means employed be simple or complex, true or false, real or imaginary, a person or a planchette, if it is believed, by those who use it, that they are thereby consulting the spirits of the departed, it is the ancient vice known to the Greeks and the Egyptians, and is so positively denounced in the laws of Moses. Two Greek words, one signifying the dead, the other divination, make up the modern word necromancy. One of these words was afterward mistaken for niger, black, and hence the practice was called the "black art." Doubtless, from a deep knowledge of the evil consequences of this art, the Jewish law-giver prohibited it with the severest penalty: "*There shall not be found among you any that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, * * * or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination to the Lord; because of these abominations the Lord, thy God, doth drive them out before thee.*" Among the many crimes which brought about the death of Saul, this is mentioned: "for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit to inquire of it."—1 Chr. x, 13.

That the spirits of our beloved dead are roaming about, or can be called to attend upon anybody's planchette, is something quite horrible and incredible. Being, as they are, in Paradise, the prisoners of hope, they await the resurrection morn, and until reclothed with a body are in an unperfect state, not fitted for or capable of any of the least communication with this earth, excepting by a direct miracle upon the part of God. We cannot see them, nor they us. The angels who minister to the saints never were men, but are of that unfallen company, as Gabriel and Michael, who were in existence and shouted for joy when the foundations of this earth were laid. They can hardly be supposed to wait upon the tiltings of a planchette.

But the evil Spirit, who avails himself of all occasions to do mischief, may use this natural phenomena to get possession of the confidence of the good, and, it may be, in the end lead them by its ignis fatuus into darkness. Many have lost their reason by spirit-rapping, and thousands have been made unbelievers or atheists; and, as we are told by "the best society in New York," it is nevertheless a common means for separating between husband and wife, for giving men spiritual wives, and women spiritual husbands. To this source can be traced the vast amount of domestic infidelity which obtains throughout New England. We therefore say to all good people, do not even so much as taste this "cup of devils." "Is it because there is not a God in Israel that ye go to inquire of Beelzebub, the god of Ekron?"

The Late Election in Kentucky.—A Lesson for Politico-Religionists.

On the 3d inst. an election was held in Kentucky. The only State office filled was that of governor. J. W. Stevenson was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Governor Helm. A number of judges of courts, commonwealth attorneys and various county officers were elected. The secular papers express the opinion that the Democratic majority for governor will be about seventy-five thousand in the State. The late election should impart a wholesome lesson to our brethren of the "loyal eighteen persuasion," and all others like them. The "loyal eighteen" preachers who seceded from the Kentucky Conference and joined the Northern Church and Conference in Kentucky, made a political issue with our church. They assailed it from their pulpits, through the public papers, and by pamphlets which they scattered abroad. They wrote many letters to men who had been unwavering in their devotion to the Union, and thus, as well as by appeals personal to such men, sought to induce them to abandon the Church South, as "a disloyal church," "a rebel church," and to unite with "a loyal church."

The term "loyal eighteen" was not applied to them in derision. It was adopted by themselves as their chief ornament and commendation.

Immediately after their secession from us, one of the number published a letter in the Western Advocate, of Cincinnati, entitled "Vindication of the Loyal Eighteen," and they soon flooded the country with a pamphlet addressed "to the loyal members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by one of the eighteen." In that pamphlet, which they so industriously and extensively circulated among our "Union members," the issue made was a political one, and our members were urged on political grounds to abandon our church and unite with them. They wanted none but loyal men in their church.—"Rebels," "Democrats" and "copperheads" they wanted not. We refused to accept the political issue. We claimed that every man has a right to his own political opinions, and that men and women who believe our doctrines and desire to flee from the wrath to come, may have membership in our church regardless of political opinions. We have adhered to our policy, and they to theirs of building up a "loyal church," and they have decided what is loyalty. According to them it is an indorsement of a particular political policy and party.

While they have been prating about their own loyalty and that of their church and party, a political revolution has been going on, and they are left without political sympathizers enough to operate upon to make their church a success. They dug a political pit in which to bury us, but lo! they have fallen into it themselves.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

CIVILIZED WARFARE.

Facts demolish the modern theory of war, and leave it in principle and practice essentially what it has been from the days of Cherdelaomer. Its limitations are not radical but accidental. Its comities are not the result of better feelings, so much as of better circumstances and different tastes. The savage murders his prisoners because he has no place to put them in, and no means to take care of them. Bonaparte killed his prisoners in Syria for the same reason. Our government killed many more in Elmira and Johnson's Island by cold, fever, dysentery and starvation; and Gen. Grant, by a cool calculation of the probabilities of profit and loss, instructed the amiable Butler to prevent the deliverance of the starving Federals in Andersonville. No Tartar ever ordered a convenient butchery more coolly than Gen. Grant consigned the poor wretches to the horrors that sickened their keepers and made them beg to have the miserable men moved even without exchange. Gen. Butler has published Gen. Grant's letter which delivered the Andersonville prisoners to death, with the comment that 'it will be hard on our poor fellows.' As to the protection of females and homes, it seems to be more a matter of policy in the government or discipline on the part of generals, than any moral or chivalric feeling in the army. When Scott invaded Mexico the policy of our government and the safety of the little army required that the people's homes and property should be respected. In the main, there was no difficulty in compelling this. 'The commissaries paid for what they needed, and got plenty.' Soldiers were not permitted to rob. When one wandered off and was killed, Scott did not lay waste a neighborhood or burn the best house that happened to be at hand, nor shoot ten prisoners in cold blood as Col. O'Neile did—who, by the by, was made a general for the atrocious butchery, and strongly recommended by the Methodist Episcopal organ for the sheriffalty of St. Louis. If it had been the policy of the government or the wish of commanders, the army in the South would have behaved as well as in Mexico. It was virtuous there, because of necessity; it was cruel and profligate in the South, because of privilege.

The comity and civilization and limitation of modern wars are all mere phases of temper and expediency; for an army of Americans has proved itself as remorseless as a horde of Huns. Our volunteer general from the quiet walks of domestic life, from the pulpit and deacon's seat, were found as ready to rob and let rob as a French marshal. The plunder of Holly Springs, by the retreating army of Grant, the skinning in Virginia by Hunter and Milroy, and the indiscriminate burning and pillage of South Carolina by Sherman, exhibit a condition of heart and mind in the army over which philosophy may sicken with despair, and which Christianity may ponder with wonder and humiliation.

There are crimes of war excused by necessity; as the burning of "two thousand barns and seventy mills filled with grain" by Sheridan in obedience to orders from Gen. Grant, who seems to have studied the art of war from the devastations of the locust and the destructiveness of fire and the fatality of fever, rather than in books of military science. Some crimes of war are excused as its necessary accidents. Bombs may kill women and children—particularly if directed to every collection of people seen in a cemetery, as in Petersburg, or thrown continually into an ungarrisoned city like Charleston. Straggling soldiers will pillage. Some crimes of war are wages paid for popularity; concessions to public hate and vindictiveness. In looking over Harper's pictorial history of the war, we came across the following little billet-doux from Gen. Halleck to Gen. Sherman: "Should you capture Charleston, I hope that by some accident the place may be destroyed, and if a little salt should be sown upon its site, it may prevent the growth of future crops of nullification and secession." This hint on the way of making civilized war was not unnoticed by the leader of the Christian host, for he replied: "I will bear in mind your suggestion as to Charleston, and don't think 'salt' will be necessary. The whole army is burning with an insatiable desire to wreak vengeance on South Carolina. I almost tremble at her fate, but feel that she deserves all that seems to be in store for her." Sherman's path led him to Columbia; and how well he remembered Halleck's suggestion is on record in the ruins of that pillaged and ruined city, which curiously enough was "destroyed by some accident," for which Sherman is in no way responsible.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

How Preachers are Trained in India.—Rev. J. F. Ullman, of the American Presbyterian Mission, writes with warm interest in regard to a class of sixteen students who have been several months under his care: "More than half of them are very promising young men. They study with a will, and all of them are making progress. The practical exercise of preaching in the bazars and villages is combined with their regular studies; and I trust, with the Lord's blessing upon us, we shall obtain some able workmen, while even those of less ability will become better fitted for their work." Why would it not be equally profitable in our American schools of the prophets if those who are in training for the work of the ministry could have "the practical exercise of preachers" in villages and hamlets, or in market places, thus systematically "combined with their regular studies?"

Northern papers say the bees are refusing to make honey this summer.

OBITUARIES.

Died, on the 6th instant, after four days' illness, Martha, fourth daughter of Judge Porter, of this place. The dear girl had just completed her thirteenth year. From childhood she was distinguished for her devotional and studious habits. She grew up well-nigh blameless in her "walk and conversation." The angels were with her hours before her death. Several times she called her sister's attention to the beautiful angel that was waiting for her, and pointed to the particular part of the room where the angel was.—Doubtless it was her sainted mother, who departed this life while Martha was yet a little child. At the last Martha became speechless, but at times seemed to be engaged in singing, and she would lift her arms as though she desired the angels to hasten her away. She died calmly and hopefully, leaving the impress of an angelic smile upon the features of her pale corpse—a smile, more eloquent than words, of the happiness of her departed spirit.

Death of Hon. Christian Hoover.

When the harvest is ripe the reapers should enter the field and gather the wheat into the garner. When Christians have attained "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," and have "served their own generation by the will of God," we expect to see them fall asleep in Jesus. And yet our selfish hearts reluctantly consent to the removal from earth to heaven of the Christian patriarch whose name stands at the head of this article. We had been so long accustomed to rely on his mature wisdom for counsel, and his ripe Christian experience for comfort and encouragement in our pilgrimage, that we now feel our loss is great. Our father in Israel and the friend of our heart is not, for God hath taken him. He died at his residence, near Summit, Mississippi, on the 27th of July, 1868, at the advanced age of seventy-two years.

As the result of temperance, industrious habits, and uniform tranquility of mind, he generally enjoyed robust health until near the close of life. During the nine days' illness which preceded his death he was mostly in a somnolent state. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. M. L. Hoover, wishing to catch from his dying lips some expression upon which the mind might dwell with pleasure in the midst of heartfelt bereavement, roused him up as he was entering the dark valley, and asked him how he felt. He answered: "Well and happy." This was enough. We would not have another word added. All right there! His triumph in death corresponds most beautifully with his long and consistent Christian life. Judge Hoover was converted early in life, and became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the primitive caste; and while he fully acknowledged his obligation to bear the yoke of Christ, he felt it was his privilege to be happy in a conscious union with Christ. His was a happy Christian experience, and full of hope as to the future of his existence. He was habitually interested in the welfare of the church of his choice, and contributed liberally to advance all her spiritual, material and educational interests. As a citizen he kept himself well posted on the politics, civil jurisprudence and internal improvements of his country, and was among the foremost in every well-conceived enterprise to promote the public good. He excelled in all his domestic relations, and was the revered and beloved centre of the family circle, and the acknowledged patriarch of his neighborhood. By long continued habits of industry and frugality he had acquired a large estate, which, however, was nearly all lost by the results of the late war. This, so far as we are able to see, was not his fault. Somebody else is accountable for this harm and loss, and God will render unto them according to their works in due time. But though he lost his earthly substance, he had rich treasures laid up in heaven, upon the enjoyment of which he has now entered. That the rich blessings of gospel grace may rest on his whole family, is the prayer of one who loves them sincerely for their own, and for their father and mother's sake!

District Meeting.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

Dear Brethren—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.
It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instils the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. Helmbold.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

ADINE'S GUEST.

BY ALTA GRANT.

One golden morn to Adine's home there came
The angel bearer of a sweet behest—
With loving care,
Adine, thy house prepare,
For Christ the Lord this day shall be thy guest.

With awe Adine the heavenly message heard—
A holy hush fell on her heart and face—
And going to and fro,
She whispered low:
"To-day His presence shall make glad this place."

Long hours she watched—and while she bent her ear,
And thro' the twilight strained her eager sight,
A shadow crossed the floor,
And at the door
A sad-eyed child begged shelter from the night.

But Adine, waiting for her Kingly guest,
With hope and fear at war within her heart,
No thought or care
The weary child could spare,
And with ungracious alms bade him depart.

Then suddenly the childish form was changed,
And with a look that smote her like a sword—
All fair and bright
In robes of silvery white—
He turned and said: "Adine, behold thy Lord!"

And while with trembling hands her face she hid,
The glory faded that thro' the place had shone:
The sheen of pinions fair
Swept thro' the silent air,
And in the twilight dim she stood alone.

Still for the Master's coming Adine waits,
But help from those who need no more withholds,
For, evermore,
In all who seek her door
Adine the image of her Lord beholds!

—Little Corporal.

Our Feathered Cousins, the Parrots.

BY GRACE GREENWOOD.

These strangely interesting birds, according to natural history, belong to the second bird family, the Psittacidæ. I never knew how many wonderful and splendid varieties this family contained until I saw living varieties of all, or nearly all, in the known world, in the Zoological Gardens of London, where they are kept in a great gallery—a beautiful parrot paradise all by themselves. They were a wonder to behold, but a perfect astonishment to listen to. The confusion of tongues was something almost distracting. The Tower of Babel, in its talkingest day, never approached it, I am sure. A large sewing-circle of elderly ladies might come nearer the mark. The colors of their plumage I have no words to describe. They fill my memory with tropic splendors, whenever I think of them, to this day.

'Tis strange that but one species of parrots was known to the ancient Greeks and Romans—the Parakeet of India—at least, up to the time of Nero. That gentle prince, with his amiable love of pets, is said to have sent emissaries far up the Nile, to collect new varieties, for the gratification of his royal whim and dainty appetite; for, when the poor little captives ceased to amuse him by their conversational powers, he ate them. I hope they lay hard on his stomach, and made him talk in his sleep!

The early Portuguese navigators found parrots at the Cape of Good Hope, and at other points on the African coast; and the very first creatures that welcomed Columbus to the isles of the New World were Parakeets. The Macaws of South America are very handsome birds, but not remarkably tractable or agreeable. They are fond of old friends; but are fierce to strangers, and have a singular dislike to children. The gray and scarlet parrot, called the Yaco, is a charming bird for a pet. It is clever and docile, and learns readily to talk, preferring to imitate the voices of children. The Cockatoos of New Guinea are very pretty and graceful pets. They do not like to be caged, but may be safely allowed to have the range of the premises, as they will immediately come when called—thus setting an excellent example to rebellious children. The green parrot, most common in this country, is a native of Africa.

Dear old Dr. Goldsmith, whose Natural History is all out of fashion now, except with us old folks, tells some amusing stories about parrots. Among these is an anecdote of a famous fellow, belonging to King Henry the Seventh, Queen Elizabeth's grandfather. This bird, sitting on his perch in the palace yard at Westminster, used to hear the talk of gentlemen who came to the river to take boats. And one day, while overlooking the busy traffic of the Thames, he fell from a tree, into the water; and while there floating helplessly, he cried: "A boat! Twenty pounds for a boat!" A waterman rescued him, and took him to the king, demanding his twenty pounds. The king, who was not remarkably generous, hesitated about giving so large a sum; but finally agreed to leave the amount of the reward to the parrot. That ungrateful fellow, who sat on his perch, still shaking the water from his feathers, when appealed to, turned his head slyly on one side, and said: "Give the knave a groat." (About four pence.) I hope, children, you won't doubt the truth of this story; it isn't good to get into skeptical habits of mind in early life.

For many years there lived in the porter's lodge of the old Pennsylvania Hospital a distinguished and venerable citizen—a parrot, of rare cleverness and intelligence. This famous bird belonged to the porter, and was one of many feathered pets, the chief favorite and familiar. A remarkable affection and sympathy existed between these two friends; yet, I am sorry to say, their relations were not altogether pleasant and peaceful. Innumerable were their quarrels and make-ups. The bird was very knowing, and almost supernaturally gifted as a talker—especially, like some human orators, in the language of railing and taunting. The old man, his master, had one deplorable weakness—he would occasionally drink too much bad whisky; so much that, getting quite beside himself, he would leave his lodge and his innocent feathered family, and go off on a desperate spree, which sometimes lasted for days. Now, Master Paul Parrot thought this weakness, through which he suffered in loneliness and neglect, very reprehensible and not to be winked at; and when the fit of dissipation was coming on his master, it is said, would remonstrate with him, in a friendly way, like a very Mentor. When this proved in vain, and he saw the misguided old man leave the lodge for some of his disreputable haunts, he would endeavor to put a good face on the matter, would hop about on his perch in great excitement, and call out to the other birds: "The old man has gone on a spree!—on a spree! He won't be back for a week! Let's have a high old time. Ha! ha!"

When the old porter came home this naughty bird would be very apt to mock and taunt him, calling out: "So you've come back, have you? Oh! how drunk you are! Now we'll have a row." And there always was a row; for the indignant porter never failed to beat Mr. Paul, for his impudence, soundly. Then the bird, seeking the dignified retirement of the darkest corner of the lodge, sulked and muttered till, the old porter's good humor returning, he made friendly overtures. The two were reconciled, and "everything was lovely" again.

At length there came a time when the porter, bowed by years and infirmities, yielded to the stern law of nature, and went on his sprees no more. He was dead. As his successor was no bird-fancier, the feathered family at the lodge was broken up and dispersed. The clever parrot was kindly treated in a new home; but he never seemed happy. He evidently missed his old master—missed his caresses and his scoldings. Or perhaps he found the steady goings-on of a moral household too dull for his taste. He refused to be reconstructed, grew sullen and morose, rejected food, and died.

There is another curious parrot in Philadelphia, in a store kept by a maiden lady whose voice is so exceeding shrill and parrot-like that it is difficult to tell when she leaves off talking and the parrot begins. One day, as a customer was examining an article on the counter, Miss Polly called out: "What are you doing with that? Put it down!—put it down!" The lady looked round, very indignantly, for the offender, saying: "Well, ma'am, I must say you have a very impudent child."

There is in the same city another parrot, who recites a verse of an old song, in a most distinct and triumphant manner:

"O! pretty Polly,
Don't you cry.
For your true love
Will come by and by."

There is in Brooklyn, New York, a parrot that sings many of the popular airs correctly, and with as much expression as many fashionable singers give to them. This bird is singularly social and affectionate, and has a horror of being alone. He will sometimes awake in the middle of the night, and arouse the household by crying: "Oh dear! I am all alone!—all alone! Somebody come to me!"

I have heard much of a clever parrot once kept by some relatives of ours, on an old place, in a quiet little village. Mistress Polly had free range of the house and yard, and throughout the town was as well known as the oldest inhabitant. Through all the pleasant weather she haunted the tall trees in front of the house, climbing to the highest branches, and from there superintending the affairs of the neighborhood, and making astronomical and meteorological observations. In the spring and autumn she watched from these lofty perches the flight of great flocks of pigeons and crows, with intense but decidedly unfriendly interest. She would scream and scold at them in a most insolent and defiant manner, evidently criticising the order of their march and all their manœuvers and evolutions—for all the world like a newspaper editor, finding fault with the conduct of great armies. Doubtless she was astonished and disgusted to see the great host sweep steadily on, following their leader, paying no heed to her shrieking, railing, evil prophesies. Yet she was never so absorbed by her duties on the watch-tower that she failed to come to her meals. These she took with the family, perched on the back of a chair or the corner of the table. She was very fond of coffee, and was always provided with a cup. She would take it up by the handle with her claws, and drink from it without spilling a drop. A terrible gossip and busy-body was she, taking perpetually and doing all the mischief that lay in her power. She was the terror and torment of all cats and kittens; for, wary and watchful as they might be, Polly was always surprising them by attacks in the rear, and cunning ambuscades, and flank movements. Nothing more still and soft-footed could be imagined than her approaches; nothing more sly, sudden and sharp than the nips she gave with her horrid hooked bill. A cat's extended tail was especially tempting to her. She generally fought the battle out on that line. "In maiden meditation fancy free," this parrot roamed about the yard, and laughed and railed at patient sitting hens, and the proud mothers of newly-hatched chicks and ducklings. Sometimes she would follow a brood about, sneering and advising, until the poor mother was in an agony of worriment. At last she came to grief, in this way: A spirited speckled hen, with a fine brood of young ones, tired of being snubbed and of hearing her offspring depreciated, and shocked at seeing the domestic virtues set at naught by a flaunting foreign fowl, of infidel sentiments, turned upon her, sprang upon her back, and began pecking and tearing at her sleek plumage like mad! The feathers fell all around, like a shower of green snow; and the parrot began screaming with all her might: 'Let up! Let up! Poor Polly! Poor Polly!"

Her mistress came to the rescue, and Polly skulked away to her cage, where she remained several days, sullen and deeply humiliated; but, when she emerged from her retirement, she gave the hens and chickens a wide berth.

Several parrots, the pets and companions of religious persons, have been distinguished by their piety, or what passed for such. These have usually belonged to devout Catholics. I have read of one, named Vert-Vert—the inmate of a convent in France, and taught by the holy nuns—who was esteemed a most blessed and miraculously gifted bird. His fame spread far and wide. Many made pilgrimages to the convent, to be edified by his pious exhortations; and at last the nuns of another convent, in a distant province, solicited the loan of him for a few months, for the good of their souls. He went forth as a sort of feathered apostle, followed by the prayers and blessings of the bereaved sisters, and looking very solemn and important. But, unfortunately, on his journey, he was compelled to spend a night on a steamer; and, being kept awake by such new scenes, and perhaps a little seasickness, he listened too much to the unprofitable and profane talk of the sailors and some soldiers who were on board. And so it happened that, when he reached the convent, where he was received with great joy and impressive religious ceremonies, instead of edifying the good sisters with exhortations and chants, delivered in a grave, decorous manner, he horrified them by shouting like a rough old sea captain and swearing like a major general, while he assumed the most knowing, rollicking air imaginable. Those saintly women stopped their ears, and fled from him as though he had been a demon-bird, and he was immediately sent home in utter disgrace. There, through fasts and penances, he was brought round to more correct habits and behavior; but he never became the shining light he had been before his sudden fall. No more pilgrimages were made to his perch. Though grown a sadder and a wiser bird, it was impossible to tell whether he most sorrowed for his fault or regretted the wicked world of which he had had a taste. Still he made a good end, I believe, within the convent's hallowed cloisters.

A certain pious cardinal in Rome once gave a hundred crowns in gold for a parrot that could repeat the Apostles' Creed. Another religiously trained parrot once served as a chaplain on board of a ship—actually reciting the service for the sailors, who listened and responded with becoming solemnity. I have never seen a clerical parrot; but I have seen clergymen who strongly suggested parrots, in going through the solemn lessons they had by rote and not by heart. By the way, the parrot would make a very economical sort of minister. After the first cost of the bird, his education, and decent housing, there would be no demands on the congregation for increase of salary. As he would have no scruples about repeating old sermons, he would not desire new fields of labor. Parrots seldom have any family, so he would expect no donation parties; they never have dyspepsia, so he would require no trips to Europe. The parrot voice is rather harsh, to be sure; but the monotony of such a preacher's discourse would finally insure the quiet repose so desirable for fashionable worshipers, exhausted by week-day pleasures and cares. And, if he could be guarded against the dangerous influence of heretical people and "new lights," his orthodoxy could doubtless be depended upon. He would not, I fear, be very popular in the sewing-circles and Dorcas societies—for he would talk down all the ladies.—New York Independent.

FARM AND GARDEN.

DEEP OR SHALLOW PLOWING.

A Quaker farmer of Pennsylvania, who has been disgusted with some of the fine theories discussed by the American Institute Farmers' Club, has been moved to write to that body as follows:

The bare fact that we do sometimes dig materials from the bottom of wells that prove, on exposure, more fertile than the soil above, is not evidence that the subsoil is always of like character. It has so occurred in my experience. When a boy, working for my father, who was a great admirer of Judge Buel, and the Cultivator of years ago, we set a bar shear plow built expressly for two pair of stout cattle at 12 inches deep, and kept that depth throughout the field. The result was a very inferior crop, and some disappointment. I waited to see the improvement, but to my eye the damage was plain more years than friend Quinn has been plowing in Jersey. Neither is it true that the system of farming pursued in those days has produced the evil consequences attributed to shallow plowing, such as short, unhealthy growth, insect ravages, and diminished average crops. I am tired of this poor-mouthed croaking.

One would think, from the tenor of our modern papers, that the present farming community are a miserable set of thriftless blockheads, and that even our wives could not make a cup of coffee or cook a steak. The truth is our system has doubled and trebled the produce of Chester, Delaware and Newcastle counties, and advanced the price of land from $18 per acre to $150, and on upward. That system is generally practiced in these parts to-day, and is founded on a seven-field course. First—Corn, with lime applied in quantity, and manure as suited the fancy of the applicant, mostly forty bushels per acre, spread the fall preceding. Second—Oats, barley or potatoes, or all of them, followed in the fall by wheat, with all the manure that could be made on the farm and seeded to grass, which was often allowed an annual dressing of one and one-half bushels plaster per acre, until that field's turn came for corn. Some farms had other resources than the barn-yard for manure, but the great improvement of this section of country has been effected under this system of culture and by men nearly all advocates of deep plowing. Yet our best farms are only plowed eight inches deep, and this depth has been gradually acquired. There are many of us, who are fast growing to be old farmers, that remember the sedge grass and rabbit fields of our boyhood, which being brought under this process, are now the finest green grass pastures, and produce from fifty to one hundred bushels of corn per acre. True, this system was established by our fathers, and in the old fogy times, but it has resulted in many thousand comfortable and even elegant homes, churches, schools, mills, shops, etc., all built up by this shallow system. For this reason the club should pause before adopting friend Greeley's recommendation to turn this immense tract of highly productive soil upside down two or three feet under ground. Now I never wrote where there was danger of being printed before, but if thee would like to see the proof of these things, write me a note and I will attend to it, and if thee comes, I will show thee a broad extent of well cultivated country, an acre or two of old sedge grass yet, and some fine farms owned by men who started life as farmers as bare-handed as hands are made.—American Farmer.

How to Fit Collars to Horses' Shoulders.—It is very important to have a collar fit nicely and snugly to the shoulders of the horse. It enables him to work with a great deal more ease and to apply a great deal more strength. It prevents galling and wounding, as the friction is avoided. Collars are so made, or should be so made, as to throw the chief force on the lower part of the shoulder. The horse can apply but little strength on the upper part, and for this reason breast collars are coming greatly into vogue—as the strength is exerted on the lower part of the shoulder. But we started out to tell our readers how to make a new collar to fit the shoulder of the horse. The collar should be purchased of the proper size; just before putting it on, the first time, immerse it in water, letting it remain about a minute, and immediately put it on the horse, being careful to have the hames so adjusted at the top and bottom as to fit the shoulder, and then put the horse to work. The collar, by being wet, will adapt itself to the shoulder, and should dry on the horse. When taken off it should be left in the same shape it occupied on the horse, and ever after you will have a snug fitting collar and no wounds.—Valley Farmer.

CHOWDER.

We copy as follows from the Turf, Field and Farm:

Daniel Webster's Chowder.—Four tablespoonfuls of onions fried with pork.

One quart of boiled potatoes, well mashed.

One and one-half pounds of ship biscuit, broken.

One teaspoonful of thyme.

One teaspoonful of summer savory.

One-half bottle of mushroom catsup.

One bottle of port or claret.

One-half nutmeg, grated.

A few cloves, mace, allspice, and slices of lemon and some black pepper.

Six pounds of blue or white cat, cut in slices.

Twenty five oysters.

The whole to be put in a pot, covered with an inch of water, cooked slowly and stirred gently.

Mr. Scott, of great reputation both as an angler and a caterer, publishes the following in the New York Spirit of the Times:

'The old-fashioned iron pot is the best to make it in, but in lieu of it a copper bottomed saucepan, as deep as it is wide, will answer. First take your fish—almost any kind will answer, but cod and sea bass are the best—clean and scale your fish, and cut them into pieces two inches square; parboil a few onions; peel a few potatoes and quarter them; cut up some salt pork into the thinnest possible slices, and cover the bottom and sides of your pot with it to prevent your chowder from burning; place upon the pork a layer of fish, and season it with salt and a little black pepper. (Since I read 'My Peninsular Medal,' I have been very chary of black pepper, for that authority states that it inflames the stomach without stimulating it, while cayenne stimulates without inflaming; but a dash of black pepper is useful for its fragrance.) Next, a layer of the parboiled onions, quartered; next, a layer of potatoes, and season the layers; next, a layer of ripe tomatoes, sliced and seasoned (tomato requires more salt than other vegetables;) next, a layer of cracked sea biscuit; next, a layer of fish; then sprinkle this layer with infinitessimal pieces of salt pork, but sparingly; then your layers of onions, potatoes, tomatoes and sea bicuit, with proper seasoning of each layer; pour water enough to cover the contents of the pot, but no more; cover the pot and put it away over a slow fire, where it will simmer or boil slowly for an hour and a half. A half hour before dishing the chowder, pour upon it a bottle of Burgundy or claret. In seasoning the different layers of the chowder, tomato catsup will answer where ripe tomatoes cannot be had. Sauces are also introduced sometimes, and in case the party has been used to highly-seasoned food, either Harvey, Soyer or Worcestershire sauces may be used sparingly. Many prefer to season with a greater variety of spices and condiments. I often season with allspice, but camp chowder should be simple, and composed of edibles easily obtainable.'

Making Tomato Vinegar.—In reply to a query on this subject, published in our Club recently, Mr. S. H. Kridelbaugh, agricultural editor of The National Platform, Des Moines, Iowa, writes us as follows: 'In your columns of the 9th May, 1868, I see an inquiry from J. D. T., Norfolk, Virginia, concerning tomato vinegar, and for his benefit, and all others who may have use for it, I here relate my process for manufacturing that article: Take one bushel of ripe tomatoes, wash them in an open tub, and add one quart of molasses that weighs eleven pounds to the gallon, and thoroughly mix the whole together, in which condition let the tub stand several days, not neglecting to frequently stir the mixture in it. When a decided vinegar odor is given off, the juice should be strained from the pomace and put into casks, and let stand until the process is completed. Vinegar thus made is equal to the best, and to succeed in its manufacture only requires faithfully following out these directions.'—Rural New Yorker.

SCIENTIFIC.

MISCELLANEA.

Concerning Claret.—The Lyons (France) Medical Gazette asserts that clarets called pure frequently contain alum in considerable quantity; and a doctor, writing to the same journal, states that, after unsuccessfully treating a whole family for acute stomachic pains, it occurred to him to analyze their wine, when he found alum to the extent of two drachms per bottle in it. When the wine was changed, the gastralgia ceased. It seems hardly probable that alum alone would be introduced in such proportion into simple grape-juice; and one is led to infer that the liquid was altogether a concoction, of which the mineral salt was a prominent ingredient. If the French wines supplied to natives are thus sophisticated, what are we to expect of the pure and wholesome drinks that flow into our own market?

A French chemist tells the Academy of Sciences that he believes he has discovered a philosopher's stone in a veritable means of fabricating real diamonds. His process consists in vaporizing molten iron, and condensing the vapor in a peculiar manner, when, as he says, the diamond ought to be one of the products of the condensation. Granted that it ought to be, the question is, will it be? The alchemist does not state whether he has actually made a jewel; but M. Dumas, the secretary of the Academy, says that 'the experiment is worth trying.'

One of the most extensive shoe manufacturers in Lynn worked seven years on his bench to gain a capital of $1,135, with which he commenced business. His earnings were $5 a week, and he spent but $3 for all expenses. Now he has become a wealthy man, and a liberal one withal. During 1867 he did a business of $300,000, whose profits were $40,000, and the total loss by bad debts was one case of boots worth $150.

Hydrophobia.—Another cure for hydrophobia is announced. It is said that horseradish and sweet oil—a tablespoonful of this mixture as often as it can be swallowed and retained on the stomach, together with a poultice of the same over the wound—has proved a cure for this appalling malady.

When gunpowder is heated nearly up to the point of decomposition previously to ignition, the force of its explosion is greatly increased. It is stated that a temperature of 160 degrees Fahr. increases the force of the explosion one-fifth, while a temperature of 400 degrees nearly doubles it.

Importation of Steam Plows.—Congress has just passed a joint resolution admitting steam plows free of duty for one year from June 30, 1868. We hope this will be taken advantage of, and that the practicability of plowing by steam may have a fair trial in this country.

Mosquito Bites.—As a remedy for mosquito bites, keep a vial of glycerine at hand, and apply freely to the bites. It will relieve the irritation and swelling at once. One application is generally sufficient.—American Artisan.

Refrigerating Cars.—The experiment, tried a year ago, of bringing fresh animal food from the West in refrigerating cars has this season been repeated with very great success, a car from Illinois having arrived in New York city, on the 14th inst., laden with beef, mutton, poultry, etc., most of which was slaughtered on the 4th and 5th of the month, when the thermometer ranged from ninety to one hundred degrees, and which reached its destination in a perfectly sweet and juicy condition. The external appearance of this car is similar to an ordinary freight car. At each end on the car a partition forms a spacious ice box, each of which is filled with ice, placed on a grate in such a manner as to allow a current of cold air to circulate constantly through a flue near the top of the car, over the ice, down to the floor, then up among the poultry, mutton and beef, and again around through the flue, and over the ice. The circulation of air is effected by a large ventilator wheel placed horizontally at the top of the car, near the middle. The forward movement of the car keeps this wheel in motion, which in turn produces a current of cold air constantly from the ice to the meat in one direction, and from the meat to the ice in another direction. By this means every piece of meat is kept at a uniform temperature of about forty degrees during the entire passage of about six days and nights, while the car is exposed by day to the fervid heat of the summer.—American Artisan.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISS

128 miles from New Orleans, on N. O. J. & G. N. Rail Road.

The next session will open on Wednesday, the 11th of September, 1867.

There is a full corps of teachers; the instruction will be thorough; the discipline firm and strict.

The building is large and well arranged; the play ground ample; the location healthy.

The Institution is under control of the M. E. Church, South.

The entire expenses in the Collegiate Department for board, tuition, books and incidentals (not including music and the ornamental branches) need not exceed $125 00 for term of twenty weeks.

Each boarder must furnish her towels, one pair of blankets and sheets.

For further information, address
REV. H. F. JOHNSON,
jy-13-0m Pres't Whitworth Female College.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,

Washington county, Virginia.

The FALL SESSION of this institution begins on the 20th of August next.

Our terms, for a session of five months, are as follows:

Tuition in Collegiate course, payable in advance	$30 00
Fuel, room rent and contingent fee, payable in advance	10 00
Board, at $13 per month	65 00
Washing	7 50

Tuition in the Preparatory Department is $5 less. Board is payable monthly in advance. Students supply their own beds and furniture for their rooms, and take their meals with the families boarding them.

We invite those seeking collegiate culture to consider the excellent advantages here offered.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therefore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1860.

This Invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

With the exception of a moderate business in the supply of country orders by the wholesale trade, the general market has continued extremely dull since our last weekly report. A wide difference between the views of factors and buyers has prevented the execution of some small orders pending for our leading staple, the movement in which has been of limited extent. The new crop has commenced coming in as freely as expected, the receipts thus far embracing 9 bales up to last Saturday, and 38 since. Nothing of any moment has been done in sugar and molasses, very little in tobacco, and only a jobbing and retail business in Western produce, without any material variation in prices.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, but with showers on Saturday and Monday, indicating that the rainy weather is not yet over in the country. All our accounts from the interior complain of too much rain for the cotton, and some state that the crop has been already materially injured. The boll worm, also, is said to be doing injury, and upon the whole the intelligence received is rather of a discouraging character. Much will depend on the weather for the rest of the season.

The river remains about the same, being twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed on Friday at a complete stand-still, and with no basis for regular quotations, since which, the accounts from both Liverpool and New York being of a favorable tenor, factors have been more stringent in their pretensions. On Saturday operations continued suspended, encouraging accounts from Liverpool, where prices had advanced ¼d., Middling Uplands being quoted at 10¼d. and Orleans at 10⅜d., inducing factors to ask from one to two cents above the limits of pending orders. We noticed, however, a sale of 2 bales of the new crop, classing Middling, taken for shipment to New York, at 32c. On Monday 17 bales sold at full prices, and a mixed lot of 46 bales, which, from its irregular character, could hardly be regarded as a basis for quotations. In view, however, of a further improvement at Liverpool, where Middling Uplands had risen to 10⅞d. and Orleans to 11⅛d., factors asked still higher prices, claiming 26c. for Good Ordinary, 27½ to 28c. for Low Middling, and 29 to 30c. for Middling, the inside figures of which were fully one cent above the views of buyers. On Tuesday we noticed further sales of 30 bales of the better qualities; 2 bales new Middling sold at 30c.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 100 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 68 bales, against 39 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 29 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 587,189 bales, against 711,850 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 292,082 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 13,246 bales to Great Britain, of 92,799 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 788 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

SUGAR.—During the past three days the market for foreign sugars has been quiet, but firm. On Saturday a lot of 210 hogsheads Cuba sugar sold on private terms. The small amount of Louisiana sugar now on hand has been retailing at 13¾ to 15¼c. per pound for fair to prime, 16¼ to 16⅜c. for yellow clarified, and 17c. for white.

MOLASSES.—There is still no market for this article. Holders ask 45 to 50c. per gallon, but sales of large lots could not be effected at all.

FLOUR.—Since our review of Saturday the flour market has been dull and prices a shade easier.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks. 12 00

INCIDENTAL FEES—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition FREE, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing, fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00
French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

THE RADICAL PROGRAMME.

A few days ago a writer in the National Intelligencer distinctly and specifically charged, (1) that the Radical leaders have determined, in spite of the will of the people, to make the General of the Army the chief executive officer of the nation, by force if necessary, and (2) that Gen. Grant is a party to this conspiracy.

The Radical Senaters from Alabama, at the instance of the Revolutionary Committee at Washington, telegraphed to their friends in the Legislatnre of Alabama, in substance, that they must prevent an election for President in this State.

We have it from a Radical occnpying a prominent position in that party in this State, threugh a source unquestionably correct, that he was assured by the leaders of that party, at Montgomery, that Grant was to be the next President, by force if necessary, and that letters from those near that General in Washington were shown him in order to convince him, and that he had acted upon that information in identifying himself with the Radical party.

It is only with reference to this plan that we can account fer the determined efforts of Governor Brownlow, of Tennessee, and Governor Warmoth, of Louisiana, to insugurate hostilities in those States.

It is only on the supposition that the revolutionists intend to prevent an election this fall that we can account for the remarkable fact that they are as yet making nothing like a systematic canvass of any one of the Northern States.

It is only as a preparation of the public mind for the development of their scheme that they would have ordered the Legislatures of Florida and Alabama to enact laws preventing the holding of elections in those States; for this legislation, if an election be held, will cost Gen. Grant twice as many Northern votes as his friends could have hoped to secnre in the South.

Bloodshed in the South may not be absolutely necessary to the success of the revolutionary plans, but it would greatly aid them, and hence the conduct of Brownlow and Warmoth, and the incendiary harangues of the lesser agents of the Washington Directory in Alabama. Indeed, if they can provoke anything like a serious outbreak in Tennessee or Louisiana, or succeed in bringing about a war of races in Alabama or other Southern States, their work, as we can easily see, will be half accomplished.

But with or without the desired disturbances or conflicts in the South, we think they propose something like this: Congress will reassemble in September. At once a law will be passed making General Grant next in order of succession to Mr. Johnson. Mr. Johnson will be impeached, convicted and deposed. Gen. Grant will be inaugurated as Mr. Johnson's successor. And it will be declared that this term of office is four years from his inauguration. All will be done under the forms of law. Any opposition must take the appearance of resistance to lawful authority, and that will be fatal to it, for the people will not look beneath the forms into the legality of legislation. And to further satisfy the people, the Supreme Court has done enough to leave no doubt it will give the sanction of the judicial department to whatever Congress may do.

It is six weeks until the reassembling of Congress. The people may by that time take such an attitude as to intimidate the conspirators. God may put it into their hearts to realize their danger, and thus save them. But the denoument, for weal or woe, is at hand.

In the meantime, our course at the South is plain. We must scrupulously keep the peace, quietly for the time being submit to the authorities placed over us by Congress, and by all means in our power unite the two races here for action at the ballot-box, or, if need be, in defense of our homes and property and liberty. There must be no antagonism among us. We must live together, black and white, in peace, and all prosper and be happy, or cut each other's throats until one or the other is exterminated. United, we can live through the progressing revolution, and in the end perhaps hold the power to shape it for our good and that of our children. Divided, we will be the prey of ourselves, the mock and scorn of our enemies, the pity of the world.—Selma Times and Messenger.

When we feel a strong desire to thrust our advice upon others, it is usually because we suspect their weakness; but we ought rather to suspect our own.

A NEW METHODIST CHURCH.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new M street Methodist Southern Church, of which the Rev. W. V. Tudor is pastor, was an occasion of more than ordinary interest and importance. We copy the following from the Morning Chronicle of the 5th instant:

INTERESTING CEREMONIES.—LAYING OF A CORNER-STONE.

The religious and Masonic ceremonies attendant upon the laying of the corner-stone of the new Methodist Episcopal Church South, corner of Ninth and K streets, were witnessed yesterday evening by a large concourse of spectators. The project of erecting the sacred edifice originated with the members of the M street Methodist Church some six or seven months since, and purchasing a lot upon the ground mentioned, at a cost of $20,000, they prepared at once to build. The architect, S. T. G. Morsell, submitted the plan of a building, sixty-two by ninety feet, to be of press-brick, angular roof, and plain style of architecture, similar to many of the churches of the same persuasion in other cities. Approval was given to the plan by the committee, Rev. W. V. Tudor, prospective pastor, being one, and preparations were at once made to commence the work, lay the corner-stone, and proceed as rapidly with the erection of the church as possible.

The members of the M street church, assisted by others throughout the city, subscribed money, selected the day for the gratifying solemnities, and with the same enterprise as the Methodist who hews his way with his axe into the forests of the far West—who erects his little chapel—who has been the pioneer of religion to the Rocky Mountains—with the same zeal these ladies and gentlemen went energetically to the work, not forgetting the increased growth of the East, and the necessity of places of worship to correspond with the population.

The Masonic fraternity met at their asylums at four P. M., and with Heald's Band in attendance prepared to take a part in the proceedings. Around and about Ninth and K streets a large crowd gathered long ere the hour announced for the ceremonies. A stand was erected in the middle of the lot, and accommodations made for the clergy, orators, reporters, etc., and where ample opportunity was afforded to members of the press to make their notes.

Rev. Mr. Tudor rose and said they would have a collection taken up, as the rule had always been in a Methodist assemblage to have one. After the collection Rev. A. W. Wilson, of Baltimore, was introduced. He said he was rather unfortunately situated, as Dr. Samson had given them a text upon which he did not feel at liberty to enlarge. It was true that the church was essentially unlike that of any other body.

What distinguished the church from all other associations of the earth? It was not simply a gathering of men—that which lies at the base of the church was character. The church was not a piece of mechanism, but a living organism.—The church of Christ was an aggregation, a gathering together of all those who had felt the power of a spiritual life. God's kingdom was founded long before any of these circumstances upon which we say so much existed. God has said: 'He had set his kingdom upon the holy hill of Zion.' When we consider that outside the limits of time, when the circumstances of life were unknown, when the church of God was established, we must know that, so long established, the church must stand. Among angels and men, wherever spiritual things exist, there is power. All the oppression and tyranny of the Roman empire would have accomplished nothing against God's creatures had not men's hearts been corrupt.

The power that builds a church lies in the hearts of men. When we look at all other things we look merely at results. Where did the present idea of the church find its origin? There was a power in the person, the humanity of Jesus Christ, that bound men to him; and when he said to his disciples, 'Follow me,' they needed nothing more to induce them to follow him. They went out with the same power that possessed Christ, and that power induced others to follow them. He intended that his church should live. He intended that wherever the disciples went they should preach, and with power—the power given them by him.

He spoke for some time, and concluded by wishing the church a career of prosperity and happiness, trusting in the power and strength of the Almighty.

Rev. Mr. Tudor, pastor of the Fourteenth street Methodist Episcopal Church, next addressed the assemblage. He said they had laid the corner-stone, and hoped soon to rear up a church to the credit and good of mankind, and to the glory of God. He hoped that all denominations would work in unity, and join in one accord in the work of the Almighty.

After singing the doxology, the audience was dismissed by a benediction by Rev. Dr. Samson, and the audience dispersed.

WHITHER ARE WE TENDING?—WHAT NEXT?

Last week we published an incendiary extract from a public address made to the freedmen of this county, by Daniel Price, teacher of the negro school, in which assassination of the whites was advised. We withheld comment to afford Mr. Price an opportunity to enter a disclaimer, if he had any to make. No refutation or explanation of the charge embraced in the extract has been made. Instead of being afforded the gratification of publishing to the world a disclaimer of either the language or the sentiments attributed to Mr. Price, it becomes our duty to lay before the public the following, copied from the original document:

LIVINGSTON, Ala., July 8, 1868.

MR. THOMAS TARTT: A colored man, (David Brown,) a member of the Union League, was beaten by you for the sole reason that he was a member of the League. This is the man's own statement, and you are probably aware that his affidavit in a court of justice will carry as much weight as yours. You know very well there is no possible redress for him, at present, from the courts. Now, for your information, I will state that the members of the League are mutually bound to protect each other, and if it becomes necessary, in order to do this, to treat you or any one else with violence. Shoulder the blame yourself. You whites who learned nothing from the war, will, it is hoped, soon learn to attend to your own duties, and they will be made learn that there is a difference in whaling a freedman and pounding a slave; it is a game that two can play at now, and he only needs some one to start him to make as efficient a workman as any of the NOBLE CHIVALRY of the sunny South. I will tell you candidly if we cannot get protection from the laws we will have it from somewhere else.

Respectfully, etc.,

DANIEL PRICE.

The circumstances eliciting the above, as related to us, are these: the negro, David Brown, was formerly in the employ of Mr. Tartt, but had been discharged for cause, and forbidden to come on the place. He twice afterwards went upon the place of Mr. T., and was warned off. He returned a third time, and was in the act of stealing some of Mr. Tartt's property, when that gentleman discovered him, and struck him a few blows. Hence the communication of Mr. Price, in which the civil law is set at defiance, and the objects of the League are voluntarily disclosed.—Livingston Journal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Fuller was commissioned this afternoon as Collector of Customs at New Orleans.

The following is an extract from Evarts' opinion:

Nothing can be less in accordance with the nature of our government or the disposition of our people than a frequent or ready resort to military aid in execution of the duties confided to civil officers. Courage, vigor and intrepidity are appropriate qualities for the civil service which the marshals of the United States are expected to perform, and a reinforcement of their power by extraordinary means is permitted by the law only in extraordinary emergencies.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Generals Rousseau and Fuller are both making preparations to repair to their respective posts in Louisiana.

Judge Cadwalader, of Philadelphia, refuses to administer the official oath to O'Neill, appointed by the President United States Attorney, on the ground that under the tenure-of-office act the President could not appoint.

LETTER FROM DR. PIERCE.

We copy the following letter, from Dr. Lovick Pierce, from the Nashville Christian Advocate:

I am looking to a trip with my bishop to Kentucky next month, and now expect to be in Nashville the first Sunday, being the 6th day. The bishop speaks of going out to Franklin. I undertake this journey to comply with the wishes so often made by my Kentucky friends. The bishop earnestly advises it. Old men are naturally afraid of that which is high; some of them, also, of that which is long. In this last evidence of old age I am not so timid. Since the first of May up to date I have traveled fully fifteen hundred miles, preached seventy-three sermons, lectured many Sunday schools, and much of the time endured the most intense heat I ever suffered in my life. But through it, and under it all, I have been kept in fine health. If I was to claim any excellency in the line of apostolicity, I would claim it on this ground: So much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel in Nashville, and Kentucky also; but my courage is more easily challenged than in days of yore. But if I can gratify, and especially benefit, my friends in Kentucky, I will endeavor to do so, beginning at the Kentucky Conference and visiting a few places, so as to resume my own work in South Georgia Conference by the first Sunday in October. Our general news is, that while we are far below our proper grade in spiritual godliness, still the evils which were hindering our onward and upward course are giving away to evident signs of a more genuine Methodistic piety. And here let me say, that in my opinion this better state of the church has been excited into budding beauty and hopeful promise by this institution of district meetings and the use made of them. They are a new order of class meetings, leading to a more thorough knowledge of the church, and of one another. To these voluntary associations I add the wise provisions of our authoritative church meetings. These, if faithfully carried out, can improve what a voluntary association can only commend. Through church meetings, properly held, and thereby our Discipline once more restored to its moral majesty, the triumph of Methodism is only a question of time; but I tremble for our ark whenever church meetings are either neglected or misused.

COLUMBUS, August 11, 1868.

COL. THOMAS C. JOHNSON.

The body of Col. Johnson reached this city last week, and was interred from Centenary Church with appropriate funeral services. There was no sermon. The pure life and valuable services of this lamented gentleman will be commemorated by an appropriate discourse at a future day. We have at last learned how he came to so sudden and terrible a death. He was en route from New York to St. Louis, and had reached Matteon, Illinois, by the night train. At this place the sleeping car is detached and run back upon a switch. Being still in this car, and learning that the train was passing off, he ran to the end and leaped off, not observing, in the momentary excitement, that the car was still in motion. In leaping he fell just before the wheels, the brakes of which broke his back, and otherwise injured him, causing his death in a few hours. He was able, after receiving these injuries, to dictate a dispatch to his family, but this was soon followed by another, that told us he was no more a citizen of this world. When we have a full account of his last moments we shall doubtless learn in the midst of bodily torture he felt a Divine peace in his soul and a full assurance of eternal blessedness. How uncertain is life! When we last saw our friend he was in Centenary Church, at the meeting of the college trustees. When we entered that church again it was to read over his noble and manly form the solemn burial service of the church.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

LEGISLATURE OF LOUISIANA.

W. Pope Noble offered the following:

WHEREAS, Grave charges are current, affecting the official honesty and integrity of Gov. H. C. Warmoth, and it is alleged proofs can be adduced establishing his complicity in acts of fraud and corruption in his administration of the State government; therefore "Be it Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to investigate these charges, and if established, that the same committee be authorized and instructed to prepare articles of impeachment forthwith against H. C. Warmoth, Governor of the State of Louisiana.

"W. POPE NOBLE, of Orleans."

Mr. Noble stated that rumors and certified statements affecting the official integrity of H. C. Warmoth, Governor of Louisiana, had been current on the streets and in the newspapers for some time. It was due both to the House and Senate that these charges be investigated, that it may be ascertained whether they are true or false, and so proclaim it.

Mr. Peter Harper, (Rad.,) of St. Charles, was not in favor of suspending the rules to entertain a resolution which was brought up for political capital.

Dr. Gray, of St. James, was opposed to suspending the rules, and characterized the resolution as a "bombshell" stuffed for the sake of political capital.

Mr. Heidenhain, (Rad.,) was in favor of suspending the rules, and for his part was in favor of appointing a committee to investigate the charges, for the reason that if it were done otherwise the Democratic papers in the city would "howl" about it.

Dr. Gray, (Rad.,) of St. James, was in favor of letting them howl. There was no one that these same Democratic papers howled about more than himself, (Heidenhain,) and yet it did not seem to have any effect.

R. H. Isabelle (c. Rad.) and Wm. Murrell (c. Rad.) were both opposed to suspending the rules.

F. Morey, (Rad.,) of Ouachita, was in favor of suspending the rules, in order that an investigation may be had, and characterized the motive of Mr. Noble as right.

The yeas and nays were called upon the motion, but the rules were not suspended.

The vote of the House against the proposed inquiry was 43, and 21 for it, all the friends of Gov. Warmoth voting in the majority.

But a few weeks ago the predecessor of the present Governor, a gentleman of the highest reputation in this State, who was never before suspected, much less charged with any breach of law, duty or morality, was compelled to appear and answer to a charge of one of the gravest offences known to the law, upon the information of an ignorant negro and recent slave, who could not write, and had no knowledge of the very complaint to which his mark was affixed. Everybody knew how false, vile and dishonest this charge against Governor Baker was, and yet that gentleman and honored public official did not hesitate to appear before a partisan judge, and demand an investigation of the matter. It was only after the investigation had exposed the utter falsehood and corrupt purposes of the accusation that it was abandoned, and the Governor discharged of the foul imputations which had been made against him.—New Orleans Times.

HEADQUARTERS BUREAU OF REFUGEES, FREEDMEN AND ABANDONED LANDS, STATE OF LOUISIANA, New Orleans, Aug. 24, 1868.
Orders No. 16.

In compliance with paragraph 7, General Orders No. 55, War Department, dated Adjutant General's office, Washington, D. C., July 28, 1868, the undersigned relinquishes the duties of Assistant Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, State of Louisiana, to Brevet Major Gen. Edward Hatch, Colonel, 9th Cavalry.

RANDOLPH MACON COLLEGE.—It gives us real satisfaction to announce that our excellent friend and brother, Rev. James A. Duncan, D.D., is now the president of Randolph Macon College.

Dr. Garland not being able to accept the presidency, by reason of other engagements, the trustees, by their committee, unanimously selected Dr. Duncan for the presidency. After most mature reflection, he determined to accept the position. We are glad he has done so, for we feel certain that, with such a corps of associates as the committee of the board will place with him in the professorships, there will come to the institution the greatest prosperity. With Dr. Duncan's talents, and eloquence, and learning, with his life-long devotion to the church—for he was born a Methodist, and we may say grew up in the college, being the son of Professor Duncan, who so long filled with eminent ability the chair of ancient languages—these, with his genial and engaging manners, his remarkable capacity for winning the confidence and love of young people, and his power as a preacher, eminently fit him for the position to which he has been called.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

A GREAT WANT.—'The man of God' who officiated at the interment of the remains of Thaddeus Stevens was so powerfully moved by a sense of the irreparable loss which religion and humanity have sustained in the departure of 'a great and good man,' as to give expression to the wish that he might be favored with 'another man like Thaddeus Stevens.' Will all the people say 'amen?' Very doubtful. However, we publish what this holy man says about the great void, and the angel that was sent to bear God's servant to the skies. He says:

'We had hoped that a favoring Providence would have spared your Representative at least till the close of another session of Congress, for grave questions are pending, involving the interests of thirty millions of people, which seem to us to require prominently his wise counsels and executive skill. But it is otherwise ordered, no doubt wisely; therefore we bow in submission to the will of the Supreme Ruler, who, when the clock of time struck the hour, sent his angel to unbar the gates of the future, and said to his servant: 'Well done; come up higher!' And now, till the morning of the resurrection, we commit all that remains of our departed friend to the grave, and to the guardianship of that God who watches alike over the living and the dead; and as the month of the grave closes upon this sacred dust, we will pray God to give to Vermont another son—to Lancaster another citizen—to Pennsylvania another statesman—to the country another patriot—to the poor another friend—to freedom another advocate—to the race another benefactor, and to the world another man like Thaddeus Stevens.'—Lynchburg Examiner.

HOW TO READ THE CLOUDS.—Soft-looking or delicate clouds foretell fine weather, with moderate or light breezes; hard edged, oily-looking clouds, wind. A dark, gloomy blue sky is windy; but a light, bright blue sky indicates fine weather. Generally the softer clouds look the less wind, but perhaps more rain may be expected; and the harder, more "greasy," rolled, tufted or rugged, the stronger the coming wind will prove. Also a bright yellow sky at sunset presages wind; a pale yellow, wet; and a greenish, sickly-looking color, wind and rain. Thus, by the prevalence of red, yellow or other tints the coming weather may be foretold very nearly; indeed, if aided by instruments, almost exactly. Small inky-looking clouds foretell rain; light send clouds, driving across heavy masses, show wind and rain; but if alone may indicate wind only.

There is a Christian friendship which human philosophy seldom comprehends; it is the association of two souls who put in common their faith and prayers, and raise themselves together toward God.

The pleasure of doing good is the only one that never wears out.

THE DOOR OF THE HEART.

Tyle the Door carefully, Brothers of skill,
Vigilant workers in Valley and Hill;
"Cowans and eavesdroppers" ever alert,
Tyle the Door carefully, Door of the Heart.

CHORUS—Carefully, carefully,
Tyle the Door carefully,
Tyle the Door carefully,
Door of the Heart!

Guard it from envyings, let them not in,
Malice and whisperings—creatures of sin;
Bid all unrighteousness sternly depart,
Brothers in holiness Tyling the Heart.

CHORUS—Hollily, hollily,
Tyle the Door hollily,
Tyle the Door hollily,
Door of the Heart!

But should the Angels of mercy draw nigh,
Messengers sent from the Master on high,
Should they come knocking with mystical art,
Joyfully open the Door of the Heart.

CHORUS—Joyfully, joyfully,
Ope the Door joyfully,
Ope the Door joyfully,
Door of the Heart!

Are they not present, those Angels, to-night,
Laden with riches and sparkling with light?
Oh! to enjoy all the bliss they impart,
Let us in gratitude open the Heart.

CHORUS—Gratefully, thankfully,
Ope the Door thankfully,
Ope the Door thankfully,
Door of the Heart!

PREACHING TO CHILDREN.

MR. EDITOR: The relation of a pastor to the children of his charge is like that of a shepherd to the lambs of his flock. It is his duty to make special efforts to bring them to a saving knowledge of Christ as early as possible, and to "feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost has made him overseer," and of which they constitute an important part. Christ, that great and good Shepherd of the sheep, whose example we should all endeavor to follow, "gathers the lambs with his arms, and carries them in his bosom."—Isaiah xl, 11. The best means of accomplishing this great work for the children is to preach to them at stated times from the pulpit, with a view to immediate results. By this I do not mean lectures on morals or Scripture incidents, important as these may be, but presenting and elucidating to them the grand and glorious truths of Christianity, and enforcing upon them the high and holy obligations of religion. The Sabbath school is sometimes given to the children as a kind of substitute for public worship and public preaching. "By what authority do we these things, and who gave us this authority?" God sent us to preach the Gospel, and to preach it to every creature; and we have as much authority to substitute a Bible class for this with adults as we have to substitute a Sabbath school for it with children. Sabbath schools and Bible classes are highly important for those for whom they are respectively designed; but they are less important and of less authority than the stated and public ministration of the Word. The minds and hearts of children are the virgin soil in which to plant good seed, with the hope of an abundant yield. What folly is there in passing by good ground, and sowing by the wayside, on stony places, and among thorns! Let us rather plant and cultivate that fresh and fertile soil, which will "bring forth, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold." Some parents are opposed to their children joining the church and becoming religious while young. Christ administers a solemn rebuke to such parents by saying: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Where else had our children better be than within the pales of the church and in the arms of Jesus, except in heaven? And how shall we better bring them there than by preaching to them, as God has commanded us to do?

Eastern Shore, Mobile Conference.

MR. EDITOR: While laboring in the army as missionary to Clayton's division, to which I had been assigned by Bishop Andrew, in December, 1864, I found myself drawn, by the moving of my "charge," from "Blue Grass" to the "Sand," and as a part of our division was left on picket at Eastern Shore, I had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of nearly or quite all the citizens of that county.

Feeling myself somewhat drawn out after them, because of the goodness of their hearts, I have, of course, felt a desire ever since to pay them my respects. Accordingly, on my return from your city, a few weeks since, when I arrived at Mobile I took passage on board the little steamer Annie, where I met Dr. Hamilton. This was very pleasant to meet that venerable man, to hear him speak in words of kindness—not the man I had taken him to be at all, but gentle, kind, loving, courteous—anything else than the austerity I had thought. He is a true disciple, a master of logic, a thorough divine, a close friend, a fatherly and industrious pastor. I saw but little of him on the boat. He seemed to know every one, and every one to know him. A company of young men on my left seemed to take great delight in taking the name of the Lord God in vain till the Doctor appeared, and afterward not one oath did I hear from them.

But we are at the landing. The Doctor has gone ashore and called me. "Here," said he, "is Brother Grace," whom I was proud to meet, for, although I was unacquainted with him, I had heard of his works, and before leaving the shore I had the pleasure of seeing for myself his way of doing business.

I found the faithful few still there, and a long list of new names added. A splendid choir has been introduced, pretty gravel walks to the church door from the outside gate, and neatness and prosperity generally prevail.

As a pastor Brother Grace has been very efficient—abundant in labors. He has done much for the broken down church on that side of the bay, and is still doing well. His estimable lady is also a power there for good, as is evidenced by the interest she takes in the Sunday school, in which she seems to be one of the most efficient laborers.

Brother and Sister Grace have largely developed all the interests of the church, and brought out the real working power of their congregation. Music, vocal and instrumental, Scripture knowledge, prayer, faith and unity, all have been enlarged under their administration.

But, Mr. Editor, there is a secret in this. The great and mysterious question is: "How did they succeed?" Answer: They tried.

It was the writer's privilege to speak to the old people, and the young ones too, about "grace and the dying Lamb," at Brother G.'s quarterly meeting, both on Saturday and Sunday, as the presiding elder, Rev. Dr. Dorman, was not present.

No section of country through which I have passed shows more signs of religious prosperity than Eastern Shore. One cannot feel otherwise there than at home, although there is that certain drawback which you always find at public houses, viz: profanity. O, when shall the "wickedness of the wicked come to an end," and "holiness to the Lord" be written on every heart? May the weekly meeting be blessed to that end.

Your's, in Christ,

J. A. PARKER.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

PINE LEVEL, Ala., July 20, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The 16th instant was a day full of interest to Pine Level and vicinity. On that day we had a splendid Sabbath school celebration. The day was clear, serene and warm. Early in the morning the old and young began to assemble. By ten o'clock a vast crowd was in attendance. The Union Sabbath School, of Pine Level, with a few pupils from other schools, assembled in the Institute and formed in procession, headed by their untiring and successful superintendent, Rev. J. T. Miles, of the Baptist Church, and thus marched through town to the Methodist Church, where seats had been reserved for them. Being seated, the order of the day was announced. Led by Mr. H. W. Clarke, the school sang an appropriate hymn, in melting strains of sweetness, followed by a suitable prayer by Rev. Mr. Landrun. Another hymn, which seemed to surpass the first, was sung, followed by an address by the Rev. B. A. Jackson, of the Baptist Church. The address was happily conceived, symmetrically arranged, and clothed in beautiful language, at times rising to the sublime. This address occupied thirty minutes. Another hymn was sung, which completely filled the ear and heart with melody, "wafting the soul, as upon a wave of glory, right up to the gates of heaven." Then came another address, by the writer, which occupied forty-five minutes, followed by the climacteric hymn.

The invitation to dinner was soon announced by the Committee of Arrangement, whereupon an extended table, within the inclosure of the church grounds, amid the beautiful shade trees, was surrounded by merry hearts and joyful countenances. The vast crowd partook to satisfaction of the bountiful supplies of rich and delicate provisions, closing with some delicious watermelons and ripe, juicy peaches, after which some time was spent in joyful association, and general intermingling of old and young. Thus closed the exercises of the Sabbath school celebration in Pine Level—a day long to be remembered. With quickened energies, increased zeal, refreshed minds and hearts, and redoubled resolutions in the Sabbath school cause, the audience scattered in all directions for their homes.

Late in the afternoon the Lord sent vast clouds, black with thunder and rain, to purify the atmosphere and refresh the parched earth for the good of man and beast.

OUR MISSIONARY COLLECTIONS.

MR. EDITOR: As the time for the meeting of the Mobile Conference is rapidly approaching, our missionary collections must soon be raised. In view of this fact I send this article to the ADVOCATE to elicit information. Scarcely any domestic missions are recognized in the minutes of the Mobile Conference, and nothing said with regard to appropriations for their support. Neither were any appropriations read out in presence of the Conference.—Therefore we are somewhat in the dark as to the plan of taking our collections.

Some are willing to support foreign missions, some domestic. Others are willing to contribute to the payment of the missionary debt.

The more minute the information we have the more clearly and successfully can we present the missionary cause to the people. Will some one, having information, let us know exactly how much was appropriated to our home work, and how much we are expected to raise to aid in the payment of the missionary debt?

JACKSON DISTRICT MEETING,

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The district meeting for the Jacksonville District, Mississippi Conference, was held in Jackson, Mississippi, from July 30th to August 2d, Rev. R. Abbey, P. E., presiding. Our beloved Bishop Paine being sick, we were not favored with his presence and ministrations.

Brother J. H. Ledbetter, layman, was elected secretary, and the following committees were appointed: 1. On the General State of the Church. 2. On Sunday Schools. 3. On Education. 4. On our Relations to the Colored People. 5. On Lay Delegation. 6. On Finances. 7. On the Literature of the Church. 8. On Ministry to the Children. 9. On the Publication of the Conference Minutes.

It would be too much to ask you to publish the reports of all these committees, but we would be glad to have published the following reports of the Committee on Finance:

NO. I.—FINANCIAL REPORT OF THE JACKSON DISTRICT MEETING.

Your committee, appointed on Finance, beg leave to submit the following report:

They recommend the following plan for raising the pastors', presiding elder's and bishop's salaries, and securing the widows' and orphans' fund:

1. Let the Annual Conference assess each station and circuit their pro rata share for the bishop's and presiding elder's salaries, and the widows' and orphans' fund.

2. Immediately after the appointments by the Annual Conference, let the stewards of each station and circuit meet and determine the amount necessary for the support of their pastor. Then add to the pastor's salary their apportionment of the bishop's and presiding elder's salaries, and widows' and orphans' fund.

3. Let the stewards then make an assessment on each member of the church, the aggregate of which will cover the amount for the above purposes, and submit their action to the first church meeting for approval.

4. When the assessment is approved by the church meeting, send to each member of the church the aggregate amount to be raised by their station or circuit, and their proportion of this amount, which urge the member to pay in monthly instalments, and continue to send to each member monthly statements of the amount they have paid, and the amount due by them.

5. Let each member understand that the stewards keep a regular account with them and the church.

6. At the end of the Conference year pro rata the whole amount collected, in accordance with the assessments for the foregoing purposes.

7. We would recommend the collection of the fund for home and foreign missions in compliance with the plan laid down by the Discipline.

Respectfully submitted.

J. C. KITTRELL,
Chairman.

NO. II.—A FINANCIAL PLAN FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

It is suggested that we organize a mutual life insurance society, to be called —— ——, upon the following plan:

1. The official members and laity of each station and circuit shall secure a life policy on their pastor, in amount from one to five thousand dollars.

2. Dispose of the policy as follows: Within ninety days after the death of the pastor the society shall pay in cash, to his widow and orphans, one-half of the amount of his policy. The remaining half to be retained by the company as a perpetual sinking fund, the principal of which fund shall never be paid out or disposed of for any purpose except as hereinafter provided for.

3. In the event the losses of the society should exceed its receipts, then and in that event this sinking fund shall be, if deemed expedient by the directors, used before the operating capital of the society.

4. This sinking fund of the society shall be invested by the directors of the society for the benefit of the needy interests of the church, to be determined after consultation with a committee of equal numbers of ministers and laymen appointed by and from the Annual Conference.

5. The management of the affairs of the society shall be in the hands of five directors elected biennially by the lay delegates to the Annual Conference.

6. The directors to elect a president, secretary and such other officers or servants as the interests of the society may require.

7. All salaries to be determined by the directors of the society.

8. Each Annual Conference shall appoint a committee of three laymen to investigate the books of the society and report in writing, to the next Annual Conference, its condition.

9. The books of the society shall at all times be subject to the inspection and investigation of any policy holder.

10. The society will issue policies of any and all characters, to be determined by the directors, to any applicant approved by them.

11. All policies shall be non-forfeitiag.

12. No minister of the Gospel shall ever hold any office of profit in the society.

J. C. KITTRELL,
Chairman.

The following laymen were elected to represent this district in the next Annual Conference:

Delegates—Gov. B. G. Humphries, J. C. Kittrell, J. B. Robertson, —— Cameron. Alternates—G. W. Harper, Capt. J. P. Stevens, J. B. Graves, Rev. —— Shrock.

It is proper to add that the Committee on the State of the Church, of which the presiding elder was chairman, reported the church in an improving condition, and recommended the observance of the "week of prayer."

A MEMBER.

The following preamble and resolution were passed by the meeting:

WHEREAS, We have learned that the venerable Bishop Paine, who was expected to preside at this meeting, is in a very low state of health and not expected to live:

Resolved, That we will earnestly pray God almighty to spare him to the church.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

SPRING HILL, August 17, 1868.

Our meeting at this place still goes on with unabated interest. Forty-one have professed conversion and thirty-five have joined the church. The influence has taken the community pretty much by families. There are several families where the last member, that is old enough, has been converted and joined the church. Nearly half of the converts are young men. May God thrust some of them out into the ministry. The altar is still crowded with penitents.

Your's truly,

CLIMATIC CURIOSITIES.—The changes in a country's climate by settlement and cultivation of the soil often seem strange and inconsistent. A letter from a late traveler in Nebraska notes some curious contrasts: "It is a frequent subject of remark in the Ohio valley that settling the country, clearing and ditching the land, constantly makes it drier; that old wells and springs are drying up, and each succeeding summer branches run dry which never did before. The French agricultural report makes the same complaint, and calls upon the government to stop the destruction of the forests, as the means of preserving the rivers. But here, with settlement, exactly the reverse phenomena are presented, and the quantity of rain in western Nebraska and Kansas has doubled within the memory of man. Perhaps this is due somewhat to the trees planted on new farms, but I think also that the breaking up of the sod allows it to absorb more moisture than it could in the prairie state, and in many instances turning a hundred acres of sod will renew an old spring.—Fresh branches are starting in gullies which have been dry for hundreds, perhaps thousands of years. Thus 'springs break out in the thirsty wilderness, and streams of water in the dry ground!' Here is an important principle at work, which will enable agriculture to make great advances on what is now the American desert." Akin to these are the facts of heavy rains this summer in Colorado and California, States where the rule of dry summers seems to have been invariable heretofore. Who shall divine the law of such revolutions?

A Hard Case.—No "Real Bishop" at the Meeting.

From the correspondence of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE we make the following extract—as a text for a brief and timely discourse:

"The district meeting for the Camden district, Montgomery Conference, was held at Pineville, Oak Hill circuit, July 10 to 12. The people of the vicinity had been looking forward to the time with considerable interest, expecting, among other important events, the coming of a real bishop. There were old members of our church in this inland community who had never seen a bishop. They had often heard of them—had several times been asked to contribute something to their support—had excused themselves from any great liberality under the plea that the bishop's orbit tracks its course along railroads and navigable streams, taking in its sweep large cities and central villages. Now he was to tread ground never before trod by episcopal feet; and his advent and ministrations were looked for with an eagerness little appreciated by those accustomed to see and hear the great ones of the church. For miles around the people were ready to flock in to hear, and, we trust, to receive the gospel from one whom the church, by her episcopal consecration, had emphasized as a prince in Israel. The time came, and the bishop—did not. Of course we were greatly disappointed. The effect upon our meeting was doubtless deleterious.

"Our district meeting was presided over with dignity and courtesy by the presiding elder, Rev. Anson West. All the pastoral charges were represented except one."

Our files happen to show that the first district meeting of the Camden district was organized and presided over by a bishop—in 1866. The second was favored with the presence and labors of another bishop. The secretary, in reporting the third meeting, thinks theirs a hard case. Why should not the people of Pineville see a "real bishop!" They have had two in their district in the last two years. But they could not afford to leave home for a few miles, and a few days, to enjoy the sight. The church must keep bishops enough, and the bishops must have time enough, to go to Pineville and vicinity, and be seen and heard—and all other places and people like unto Pineville; else they will feel hurt, neglected and passed by.

What is the use of such men and officials as Rev. Anson West, the presiding elder, who came to the rescue, and "presided with dignity and courtesy" over the meeting. Some are moving for a bishop to every conference. This increase would not supply the demand of the Pinevilles. Methodism already has not only a bishop for every conference, but a half dozen or more of them. The presiding elders are superintendents of their districts, with all the substantial powers of the bishop, (except ordination,) in his absence.

Our bishops are necessary to the working of the itinerancy. They belong to the whole church, and the good they do in our economy reaches every part. Stations and circuits that never saw bishops in person, nevertheless receive benefits from these ecclesiastical functionaries. They enjoy the advantages, many and great, of a system to which the episcopacy contributes. Are the Pineville people, therefore, wronged when "asked to contribute something to the support" of an arm of the service which is felt even where not seen.

A word more. Let our people have done with the notion that seems to obtain at Pineville, and other places we wot of, that the power of the gospel is confined to the "princes in Israel"—"the great ones of the church." Their absence is "deleterious to the meeting," etc. This is an offense: it is a grief to the Spirit. Cease from man—under every name. Let the pastor and presiding elder attend to their appropriate work and magnify their office. How has the work been carried on thus far, and how has it prospered in other days?

We see a growing disposition, in some quarters, to charge all shortcomings, and failures, and want of success to—the absence of bishops. Perhaps the cause lies nearer home—neglecting the diligent and prayerful use of means which are within our reach, and which God has honored in the salvation of souls and the edification of his church. Read, on the second page of this issue, the interesting report of the Fayetteville district meeting, in the Arkansas Conference. Certain it is there was no lack of service, even in the absence of "a real bishop." Besides the presiding elder and other bishops, they were honored with the presence of the "Bishop of Souls."—Memphis Christian Advocate.

SUMMER NIGHTS.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

The west is broken into bars,
Of orange, gold and gray;
Gone is the sun, come are the stars,
And night unfolds the day.

My boat glides down the gliding stream,
Whose flitting, glowing breast
Is lighted with one fading gleam,
The death-smile of the west.

The river flows, the sky is still;
It hath no ceaseless quest;
Sad hearts and eyes may flow and fill,
To think of such a rest.

The stream flows on. The skies repose.
All night the star beams play.
In clouds and gleams the river flows.
The sky is clear alway.

"THE LONDON TIMES."

In every country there are two or three journals which are regarded by foreigners as representative organs. They are not always the best papers, nor the most widely circulated papers; but there is something about them characteristic of the nation and its institutions. Not to multiply illustrations which will at once occur to every reader, I may mention that England would not be itself without the Times. There are many thousands of Englishmen who never read it, just as there are many thousands of Americans who never read the New-York Herald; but it is universally accepted as the exponent of British public opinion, even when it sets that public opinion most at defiance, as I think it did during the recent American civil war, and the still more recent Garibaldian invasion. The general rule of newspapers is that their influence secures a large circulation, and this large circulation brings them a corresponding amount of advertising. The Times is a remarkable exception to this rule. In circulation it is surpassed by several journals, in influence by few; in advertisements, by none. Its London rivals in enterprise are the Telegraph and the News; but it crushes them daily by appearing with a quadruple sheet of advertisements, in spite of their lower rates and more popular subscriptions. It has almost every requisite of a good newspaper except the news, and almost every requisite of a good advertising medium except a large circulation. Its real specialty is its typographical perfection; its professed specialty is its editorials, scarcely one of which you can read carefully without detecting a fearful blunder in grammar, rhetoric or fact; its popular specialty is its almost verbatim reports of the debates in Parliament, which uniformly eclipse those of the other journals, that expunge all Disraeli's sarcasm when they represent Liberal principles, and all Gladstone's argument when they advocate Conservative politics. The Times depends upon Reuter's telegrams for its foreign news, upon the previous evening's papers for its local news, and upon extensive clippings for its general news; but its political news, derived from private and social sources, is always wonderfully accurate. All through the debates upon the Reform Bill, I noticed that, while the government organs were repeatedly misinformed as to the policy of Mr. Disraeli, and the Liberal organs were very wide of the mark as to the course chosen by Mr. Gladstone, the editorial prognostications of the Times were invariably verified by the Parliamentary leaders. In fact, a careful reader has only to peruse the leaders in the Times to be fully informed of the political news in England. In this regard that journal is the only one that has been able to combine complete independence with reliable information. But, so far as foreign politics are concerned, it is impossible to trust a newspaper which represented the Confederates as successful in the American war, declared Garibaldi the conqueror of Rome, and persistently represents Napoleon as insecurely seated upon the throne of France.

Whatever it may have been in the past, the Times, under its present management, is a close corporation, in which nepotism is the rule, and to which outside talent has no access. Its conductors distinctly avow that they are determined to make each department a specialty under the charge of writers technically educated—a policy which would absolutely abolish the profession of a journalist if it could be carried into effect. But the Times violates its own ideas by its own appointments, e. g., it allows Mr. Tom Taylor to write its art criticisms, though he is not a painter; and Mr. John Oxenford to write its dramatic criticisms, though he is not an actor. It assumes the greatest possible mystery in regard to its editorial writers, although they are sufficiently well known to have their portraits paraded in the satirical papers, and prides itself upon a correspondence which is too tardy for news and too soon for prophecy, and which might as well be written up in the office from the files of foreign journals. It never corrects an error, and never apologizes for an injustice, and is therefore the best-hated newspaper in existence. Its forte is Napoleonic, and consists in putting forth its great strength upon great occasions; but it could always be beaten on its own ground, if other London journals would but employ the telegraph properly. Its receipts are enormous, and its expenditures economically lavish and generously mean. Its internal organization is a model for all other newspapers in the world, since it provides its employees with substantial reasons to remain in its service, and takes every possible precaution against interruption in its business. One of its chief attractions is its amateur correspondence; but it is so ignorant of the first principles of journalism, that although the reputed speeches of Mr. Murphy, the anti-popish lecturer, have been discussed for weeks in its columns by numerous letter-writers, it has not yet had the tact to send a phonographic reporter to take down Mr. Murphy's speeches word for word, and thus end all controversy—a plan which would have been suggested to an American editor at once. In its faults, as in its virtues, I consider the London Times unique; and because it is generally conceded to be the most distinguished newspaper in the world, and because all writers, no matter what they may say publicly, are privately anxious for the honor of contributing to its pages, it seems amply worthy of the space occupied in criticising it. More than this: I find it feared in England to an extent incomprehensible in the United States. Politicians live in dread of it, although they know that its opinions are as variable as the weathercock; artists, authors, singers and actors shudder before it, although they know that its criticisms may be tempered by social influences, by judicious flattery, by apropos engagements for a concert, or by well-paid offers to revise successful plays; and attaches of other newspapers so tremble, when its name is mentioned, as to sink their voices to a whisper, frightened lest the very walls have ears. Only after a visit to England can any American understand the surprise of the cockney prisoner in the play, when the threat of writing to the Times produced no effect upon the brigands, his captors, or the boldness of my publishers in venturing to print what I have written.—Tinsley's Magazine.

STRANGE FREAKS OF LIGHTNING.

Lightning, like light, furnishes another wonderful succession of marvels. How delicate, how subtile! It performs its work sometimes with scarcely a touch. It is a most extravagant idea to compare the cause of thunder and the effect of lightning to the noise and effects of a cannon and cannon ball. We are face to face with an essential superior force. It might be said that it constitutes a transition between this world and a better one; in fact, it is really subject to transcendental laws which our weak intelligence cannot grasp.

Bodies have been killed repeatedly by lightning, and they have not given the slightest trace of any wound or scar, no slight touch of a burn or contusion, no hint of the way by which the bird sprung from his confinement. Delicate and most subtile, we have said, has often been its work. Think of its melting a bracelet from a lady's wrist, yet leaving the wrist untouched; think of its melting a pair of crystal goblets suddenly, without breaking them. Arago tells how the lightning one day visited the shop of a Suabian cobbler, did not touch the artisan, but magnetized all his tools. One can well imagine the immense dismay of the poor fellow. His hammer, pincers and awl attracted all the needles, pins, tacks and nails, causing them to adhere firmly to the tools.

The amazed shoemaker thought that everything in the shop was suddenly bedeviled, or else that he was dreaming.—And there are several well authenticated cases like this, showing that iron can be rendered magnetic by the electric current. We read of a merchant of Wakefield who had placed in a corner of his room a box of knives and forks and iron tools, destined to be sent to the colonies. In came the lightning, struck open the box, spread all the articles on the floor, and it was found, when they were picked up, that every one had acquired new properties—they had all been affected by the subtle touch of the current. Some remained intact, others were melted, but they had all been rendered more or less magnetic, so that there was not a single nail in the box but what might have served the purpose of a mariner's compass. Such anecdotes excite the sense of the marvelous; and in popular science they become windows through which the young inquirer is able to look abroad into its astonishing fields.—Eclectic and Congregational Review.

POPULAR TALES FROM ITALY.

The following tales were communicated, in the first instance, to Dr. H. Grimm, of Berlin, by a young Neapolitan, who served as a model to the painters at Rome. Dr. H. Grimm, whose death in September, 1863, shortly after he had received them, prevented their publication. The appearance, in the Jahrbuch fur Romanische und Englische Literatur, of the Venetian tales, edited by Dr. Reinhold Kohler, and afterward partially described in All The Year Round, having attracted the notice of Dr. H. Grimm, he sent another copy of his Neapolitan tales to Dr. Kohler, who makes them known through the same medium. These tales we give here, told in our own fashion, conceiving that while by their resemblance in principle to many popular stories of various countries, they may interest ethnologists, they will be found sufficiently novel in some of their details to entertain the reader who merely seeks amusement.

Three brothers, the two eldest of whom hated the youngest with an intensity consistent with that state of natural feeling which we find represented in so many fairy tales, mustered sufficient friendship to go out for a day's shooting. Of course, they lost their way in a wood, and of course the office of climbing a tree, and endeavoring to ascertain their whereabout, devolved upon the youngest. A palace, splendidly illuminated, presented itself to his gaze, and thither they directed their steps. The knocks which they inflicted with their guns upon the door brought no response, so they made an entrance by main force, and found a large empty hall, in which there was a well-spread table with three plates, three goblets, and as many chairs. They naturally availed themselves of an opportunity so inviting, and, when they had feasted sufficiently, took their rest in an adjoining chamber, which was furnished with three beds. The two eldest, like dolts as they were, went fast asleep; the youngest, with the prudence proper to number three, kept wide awake.

When they had all risen in the morning, the eldest agreed to remain in the palace, and cook the dinner, while the other two went out with their guns. While alone, occupied with his useful duties, he received a visit from a man of gigantic stature, who seemed by no means gratified to find him making himself so completely at home, and told him he would give him as many blows with a cudgel as there are days in the year. This was no empty menace. The giant thrashed the intruder with arithmetical precision, and then conveniently retired. Being of a reserved disposition, the eldest brother, on the return of the rest, did not find it expedient to describe what had happened, but attributed the paleness, naturally produced by the three hundred and sixty-five blows, to an illness with which he had been attacked in the course of the day.

The second brother, who kept house on the day following, found himself in the same position as the eldest, with this variation of detail, that he received blows equal in number to the days in two years. He, likewise, when his brother returned, ascribed his paleness to an indisposition; but, rightly suspecting that the eldest had been initiated into the private manners and customs of the castle, he favored him with a wink, which the youngest, ever acute, did not fail to observe.

As the sharp third had, however, listened attentively when his brothers, supposing him to be asleep, had confessed their sufferings to each other, he was well primed with information when his turn arrived for keeping house, and he received the regular visit from the giant. That huge specimen of humanity, increasing his vindictiveness by the law of arithmetical progression, proposed to chastise the third delinquent with a number of blows equal to that of the days in three years; but the youth boldly answered him that he himself must prepare to receive as many blows as there are days in six years. The giant changed the subject by remarking that he was taller than the defiant youngster; but the latter refuted the assertion by standing on a chair. Whether the giant failed to detect the rude artifice, or whether he scorned to imitate so paltry a device, we cannot say. Certain it is, that, by merely stretching his neck, he overtopped the small braggart, who, to maintain his ascendancy, was forced to mount from the chair to the table. Still the elongation of neck continued; and though by setting the chair on the table, the youth secured for himself a pedestal more elevated, the giant did not desist, but vigorously went on augmenting the distance between his head and his shoulders.

Now, the position which is rendered familiar to modern eyes by the figure of a clown in the itinerant Fantoccini, however convenient it might be for a short person walking in a crowd, or standing in a theater at the back of a crowded pit, is anything but suitable to the purpose of self-defence. So, when the giant's neck was at its longest, the youngster on his table-supported chair found no difficulty in striking off the giant's head with his cutlass. When he had afterward hewed the body into pieces and flung them into a well, his victory was complete.

To his brothers, when they came back, he expressed a wish to descend into the well at once; and, fastening himself to a cord, to which a bell was also attached, requested them to let him down, warning them that if, after three days, the bell gave no sound they might fairly consider him dead. Here was a case in which he might count on their compliance, and they cheerfully granted his request; though they knew no more than we ourselves what he could possibly want at the bottom of a strange well.

We may suppose that he was guided by a correct instinct, for when he had reached the bottom of the well he found himself in a large meadow, richly adorned with flowers, and somewhat disfigured by the presence of an ugly old woman, who sat by a fire boiling a caldron. To the young man's question as to the purpose of her occupation, she replied that her son had been cut to pieces, and that she intended to restore him to life by boiling him in the caldron. Perceiving at once that the dismembered son could be no other than the giant, the youth prevented the old lady from carrying out her kindly purpose by suddenly pushing her into the caldron, and boiling her to death.

This virtuous act performed, a short walk across the meadow brought our adventurer to a palace, at the gates of which he knocked, but was informed by a lovely damsel, who appeared at the window, that, if he entered, he would be devoured by two serpents; she added that her husband, a magician, was at home and in bed, and that he likewise could eat human flesh. Of these little difficulties the youth made short work. He struck off, first the heads of the serpents, then the head of the magician, and finally roasted a portion of each for his dinner. The magician's widow, who had been carried off against her will, was so highly delighted with him that she wished to accompany him; but he declined the offer, and she therefore gave him a ring for a keepsake. A second palace, in which the youth found another lady, who gave him a handkerchief, another magician in bed, and two lions, and where he killed and partially ate the lions and the magician, we may pass over, and follow him to a third palace, where the victims were a third magician and two tigers, and where there was a lady more beautiful than the second, who was herself more beautiful than the first; though, as they were all sisters, there was a strong family likeness between them.

Accompanied by the third and most exquisite beauty, who presented him with a costly jewel, the youth returned his steps, picking up the other two sisters on his backward route, until he was once more at the bottom of the well. Here he rung the bell, and attached to the rope the least lovely sister, who, however, was quite handsome enough to cause a fray between the two brothers, when they had drawn her up. The similar ascent of the second and then of the third sister varied the object of the fray, but it still continued. As for the third brother, who remained at the bottom, he felt so doubtful as to the probable manner of his reception, that, when the rope was about to rise for the fourth time, he fastened to it a heavy stone, in lieu of his own sweet person. The result proved that his caution had not been superfluous, for when the stone had risen about half-way the brothers let go the rope, and it fell with a heavy sound, impressing them with the pleasant but false belief that they had committed fratricide.

Not knowing what to do next, the solitary youth began to rub the jewel given to him by the third lady, and it immediately asked him what he required? His first wish, which was simply to leave the well, was modest enough; but the second, which he expressed after the first had been granted, showed a somewhat covetous disposition, inasmuch as it was to be the most handsome, learned, valiant and clever person who had ever lived in the world. Raised to this standard of excellence, the youth, traveling anew, came to the kingdom governed by the royal father of the three young ladies, but could find no lodging in the principal city, so great was the throng that had been gathered together by the reason of the approaching marriage of his brothers with two of the king's daughters. Fortunately, a hospitable cobbler allowed him to rest in his shop, warning him at the same time that he could give him no breakfast; whereupon the youth, by a rub on the jewel, summoned a great dog, whom he instructed to enter the palace, and upset the breakfast-table. His instructions were punctually followed, the king being so much incensed that—what?—he ordered the guard not to allow the dog to pass on any future occasion.

On the following day, however, the royal breakfast-table was upset by another dog, stronger than the first. This was traced by the guard to the residence of the cobbler, who would have been immediately dragged off to prison had not the youth stepped forward and declared that he himself was the owner of the intrusive animals.

"To the gallows with him!" naturally exclaimed the king, when the owner of the dogs was brought to the palace; but when his first outbreak was over, he was considerate enough to grant the prisoner's modest request for permission to speak a few words.

"Whose ring is this?" cried the youth, availing himself of his opportunity.

"Mine!" shrieked the shortest of the princesses.

"And who claims this ring?"

"I do!" shrieked the one of middling stature.

"And who gave me this jewel?"

"I did," replied the third and tallest princess, "because you freed me from the conjurer."

Thus truth came to light, and we have only to record that the youngest brother married the handsomest princess, and that his two seniors were hanged.

MILTON'S UNPUBLISHED POEM.

Prof. Morley, of the University College, London, thought he had unearthed a hidden and precious treasure when he recently transcribed an old poem, and sent it inconsiderately into print as Milton's.

We shall let him here repeat his story as he told it to the London Spectator:

SIR: As the discovery of an unpublished poem by Milton is matter of interest to all readers, and the authenticity of such a poem cannot be too strictly and generally tested, I shall be obliged if you will give publicity to the fact that such a poem has been found. It exists in the handwriting of Milton himself, on a blank page in the volume of "Poems, both English and Latin," which contains his "Comus," "Lucidas," "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso." It is signed with his initials, and dated October, 1647. It was discovered in this manner:

I had undertaken to contribute a small pleasure book of literature to a cheap popular series; and, in forming such a volume from the writings of the poets who lived in the time of Charles I. and the Commonwealth, where I did not myself possess original editions of their works to quote from, I looked for them in the reading-room of the British Museum. Fortunately it did not seem to me useless to read a proof containing passages from Milton with help of the original edition of his English and Latin poems, published in 1645. There are two copies of that book in the Museum: one in the general library, which would be the edition commonly consulted; and the other in the noble collection formed by George III., known as the King's Library, which was the copy I referred to. The volume contains first the English, then the Latin, poems of that first period of Milton's life, each separately paged. The Latin poems end on page 87, leaving the reverse of the leaf blank; and this blank I found covered with handwriting, which, to any one familiar with the collection of fac-similes in the late Mr. Sotheby's "Ramblings in Elucidation of the Autograph of Milton," would, I think, convey at first glance the impression it conveyed to me, that this was the handwriting of John Milton.

It proved to be a transcript of a poem of fifty-four lines, which Milton, either for himself or some friend, had added to this volume. It is entitled simply "An Epitaph," and signed by him, "J. M., October, 1647." He was then in his 39th year. As the page is about the size of a leaf of note paper, the handwriting is small. Thirty-six lines were first written, which filled the left-hand side of the page; then a line was lightly drawn to the right of them, and, the book being turned sideways, the rest of the poem was packed into three little columns, eight lines in each of the first two columns, and the other two lines at the top of the third column, followed by the initials and date. Upon the small blank space left in this corner of the page the Museum stamp is affixed, covering part of Milton's signature.

The book is in the one place in the world where it is most accessible to the scrutiny of experts, and inquiry will no doubt be made into its history. Its pressmark is 238 h 35 in the King's Library. The poem, I think, speaks for itself. I need hardly add that the following copy of it has the MS. contractions expanded and the spelling modernized; but it should be stated that the word here printed "chest," as the rhyme shows it was meant to be pronounced, was written "clat," and that the last three syllables of the last line but two, though close to the edge of the binding, and almost effaced by the sticking to them of some paper from the cover, are consistent, in the few marks that are visible, with the reading here conjectured and placed within brackets.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY MORLEY.

"AN EPITAPH.

He whom Heaven did call away
Out of this Hermitage of clay
Has left some reliques in this Urn
As a pledge of his return.

Meanwhile the Muses do deplore
The loss of this their paramour,
With whom he sported ere the day
Budded forth its tender ray.
And now Apollo leaves his lays
And puts on cypress for his bays;
The sacred sisters tune their quills
Only to the blubbering rills.
And while his doom they think upon
Make their own tears their Helicon;
Leaving the two-tops Mount divine
To turn votaries to his shrine.

Think not, reader, me less blest,
Sleeping in this narrow chest,
Than if my ashes did lie bid
Under some stately pyramid.
If a rich tomb makes happy, then
That Bee was happier far than men
Who, busy in the thymy wood,
Was fettered by the golden flood
Which from the Amber-weeping tree
Distilleth down so plenteously;
For so this little wanton elf
Most gloriously enshrined itself.
A tomb whose beauty might compare
With Cleopatra's sepulcher.

To this little bed my dust
Incurtained round I here intrust;
While my pure and nobler part
Lies entomb'd in every heart.

Then pass on gently, ye that mourn,
Touch not this mine hallowed Urn;
These Ashes, which do here remain,
A vital tincture still retain;
A seminal form within the deeps
Of this little chaos sleeps;
The thread of life untwisted is
Into its first existencies;
Infant nature cradled here
In its principles appear;
This plant, though entered into dust,
In its Ashes rest it must
Until sweet Psyche shall inspire
A softening and vitific fire,
And in her fostering arms enfold
This heavy and this earthly mold;
Then as I am I'll be no more
But bloom and blossom [as] a [flower]
When this cold numbness shall retreat
By a more than chymick heat.

J. M., Oct., 1647."

On the day after the publication of this discovered treasure Prof. Morley, its discoverer, was thrown into total eclipse by the following note, addressed to the London Times:

"SIR: I have had to-day so many applications to see the edition of Milton's Poems, 1645, in the King's Library, in consequence of a letter by Professor Morley, in your columns of yesterday, attributing a MS. copy of verses at the end of the volume to the poet Milton, that I am induced to make it known that the poem is subscribed with the initials 'P. M.,' and not 'J. M.,' as represented by Mr. Morley; and that, moreover, the handwriting is not Milton's.

"In this opinion I am confirmed by Mr. Bond, the keeper of the Department of MSS. I remain, etc.,

THE ABSURDITY OF DRINKING.—It has become a sort of popular—almost national—faith that it is not possible to be truly happy unless you drink. Among certain classes—and they are by no means exclusively the lowest—drink is the beginning and end of everything. The very name of liquor is held to be synonymous with enjoyment, and the dearer the liquor the more it is prized and coveted. Yet every man who is not a downright drunkard is well aware that the pleasures of drinking are, beyond a certain point, a mockery, a delusion and a snare. I put it to any one who has stood half the night at a porter bar or sat half the night in a club room, drinking, smoking and bandying reckless talk, if the enjoyment of such an evening has been anything like that of a few quiet hours spent at home with a book or newspaper? The evil influence of tavern pleasure on the health is too obvious to be denied by any one, and the illusory nature of the pleasures themselves would be undeniable, also, if the persons who indulge in them did not deceive themselves and put the truth out of sight.

No one ever brought any good out of a drinking-bout yet. It is a short, feverish spasm of animal enjoyment, which leaves nothing behind but moroseness, regret, bad temper, self-reproach and headache. I should like to ask you, sir, if you say your prayers when you come home in that state? No—you don't. You are ashamed to say them. You postpone them until you have purged yourself, your mind and your lips, by more sober and rational behavior. Next night when you pass the hours quietly at home with a book or a friend, you feel that you have had real enjoyment, and that the time has passed pleasantly, that you have learned something, and that you have not injured your health. You are not ashamed to say your prayers, and you get up next morning with a clear head, a good appetite, and an increased faculty for work and enjoyment of life.—All the Year Round.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise—beginning on the eleventh of July. Our losses by mail have been very heavy of late. Send the money forward, and send it in the safest way.

BISHOP PAINE.

We have had the pleasure of seeing a letter of a recent date from Bishop Paine. So positive an evidence of his improved health was a great relief to the anxiety which we had felt, in common with the whole church. May the Head of "the body" long continue him to our Israel!

REVIVALS.

The revival at Spring Hill, Alabama, it will be seen by the communication from Rev. J. D. Cameron, still goes on.

A letter from Rev. J. T. Daves, of the Louisiana Conference, dated Bastrop, August 15th, says: "We are having a deeply interesting meeting. Several conversions—eighteen or twenty at the altar last night. A wonderful seriousness pervades the community. Rev. W. G. McGaughey is present, aiding us very much. Larger and more serious congregations have not assembled here since the war."

Financial Report No. 2 of the Jackson District Meeting, Miss. Conference.

We do not exactly understand this plan, but anything that suggests a method of aiding widows and orphans of itinerant preachers we are heartily in favor of. Indeed we would go further, and advocate a society which would insure an annual support to every faithful itinerant. Might not each circuit and station resolve itself into something of the kind? Life insurances are being taken, and succeed on all sides. Why not pay for the living, as well as the dead?

THE CONFESSIONAL IN AUSTRIA.—Several of the large towns in Austria have protested against the papal allocution. The Lloyd of Pesth says: "We shall no more tolerate the interference of Rome in our legislation than we did that of Vienna. We shall tremble as little before a council of churchmen in Rome as we did before a council of war in Vienna. A nation which has passed without wavering through the fusilades of Haynau will be able to defend its independence against the thunders of the Vatican."

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

We believe in wide, simultaneous assemblings for prayer. The Lord of Hosts is the God of Israel.—Heaven itself is glorious in its volume. The affluence of nature shows us the boundless breadth of the Creator. One single sphere, if we were near to it, would appear, in its rapid motion, to be an arc of purest light stretching across the sky, and each star as if one solid topaz, sapphire, amethyst or diamond. Who shall say it is not? So great, too, is the number of these gems that every angel and every man might be made sole possessor of one, as our father Adam once was. Yet what are all these mazy rings of light to the space in which they move! and both together make but the pavement of heaven as figured with mosaic.

Then if we might look higher, to the spirits, the seraphs, the purest powers in their lofty seats around that ONE THRONE, amid the snow-white glory of perfect light; if we regard their grandeur or their number, their age, their knowledge, their power, their obedience, their humility, their love, the mind is bewildered amid these richer evidences of the fullness of the Father. And yet there sits beside him ANOTHER, by whom and in whom all these consist—the adorable, puissant Son.

When the morning opens, and there streams up from hill and vale, lawn and woodland, flower and tree, the incense-breathings of a refreshed earth, we see how men ought to pray. All the families, with their little ones, all the churches, every village and city, and "all the people" should swell the stream of prayer. Unanimity is the lesson—"that they may be one, as WE are." O amazing concord! O perfected harmony—"one Lord, one faith, one baptism!" As if a father should say to his little ones, if you will take hold of hands and all come and ask me together, I will give you what you want. Yes, our wants may bring us to it; for we are needy alike, sinful alike, and equally frail. And so we must repent alike, and believe, and meet each other in the temple of prayer. One common calamity may drive us to the one throne of grace and melt us down into one spirit. Then it is we have power with the Father of men—when a united earth calls upon a united heaven.

The question is often asked, why not always expect and always have—why these special seasons? But surely we may ask, why is there ether, and also lightning, dew and flood, rivulet and ocean! Why feed four thousand rather than one widow, or why convert three thousand in one day, and by one flood of life! That God may be glorified in the eyes of every Parthian and Phrygian, every Crete and Arabian, glorified by the amount and brightness of the encompassing Shekinah. A shaft of fire from a cloud is no greater wonder than the milder flow of star-light. But God sees fit to use both; and he affirms his truth, as he indorsed the authority of Samuel, by lightning and hail-stones in the midst of harvest. "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy." This is asking for a direct outpouring in the midst of things, before the time is up—out of order, if you will—suddenly as a rushing wind. Wicked men need to see the unbelieving to be impressed by the very way in which the answer comes—that they may be convinced.

Methodism in this country took its great start in the West, about the year 1800. It began in a union meeting of Presbyterians and Methodists, in the Cumberland Valley, and swept like a freshet from heaven over the whole land. Its waters never have run down. But the people are thicker now, and we need that God should raise another gate. It is the only hope in this day of defection and moral corruption—the only hope that we see for our country, no matter what party is in power. Our people need to lay on the ground and grasp the stones in an agony of prayer, that God would avert the cup of death, which we see has been mixed for us by the adversary. They should never let the angel of blessing go until they can see the breaking of the day, and feel the enriching strength of his divine nature. Nay, more of good, much more, than in the days of Jacob do the New Testament promises hold forth to effectual, fervent prayer; by so much as the intercession of the Saviour was mightier than that of Israel.—"Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name"—as if he had said: "Try this new power if you would be full." It is by the new manhood alone that prayer, in all its potency, is wielded, for Christ taught men how, by prayer, to change earth into heaven.

THE PORTABLE DEMON.

Our rationale of "the planchette" and other spiritualistic contrivances we gave in the last week's ADVOCATE: 1. That it was a natural phenomenon. 2. That in some inexplicable way thoughts and decisions already recorded in the brain might become, by the subtle action of a nervo-galvanic current, under certain electrical conditions, intelligible without any conscious effort upon the part of the "medium." 3. That this natural phenomenon is called into use by persons who believe it to be supernatural, and who resort to it as a means of "consulting the dead," in the spirit and practice of necromancy. 4. That this practice is to them, who thus regard it, a sin. And 5. That its consequences are mentally and morally destructive, and only evil.

We can readily understand how good people can be confounded by its unexpected communications. Thoughts and words which the mind took no notice of at the time they were received, come forth without bidding, and startle one as an apparition from the dead. Of one hundred sentences read or heard, probably not five are noticed; yet the whole hundred have made really the same impression on the eye or on the ear that the five have; but not being under the control of the will, there are ninety-five of them which await a fever, or some other exciting cause, before they discover themselves as a part of the memory. In some cases the associating link by which they are joined to the past is perceived; but in many instances these intermediate links are wanting, and the sentences, therefore, seem to come wholly from without, though they be in reality from within.

Now when this mysterious law of the brain and the nerves is brought into play, and words are written by the hand without the conscious exercise of thought, it would not be difficult for any one to look on the writing with superstitious awe. Some good souls have thought these whispers from the hidden galleries of their own brain were messages from the land of spirits—there was but a step between them and their own dead! That Satan is always ready to take advantage of our ignorance and our superstition, as well as of every natural law by which he may lead and mould men to ruin, we are assured by God's word; nor can we doubt that he has by this very mystery brought thousands to the madhouse and the pit.

These electro-nervous communications of the brain are not unlike the combinations and ideas which occur in dreams, only they are not so much the ravelings of the day's thought, or the still, quivering nerve-ends of the body, as it passes into sleep or is coming out of it. They have lain dormant in the brain, it may be, for years. They were stored away without thought, and are now brought forth without any conscious agency of the mind. It is not, therefore, surprising that in the past fifteen years no revelations of real moment have been made by spirit-rappers. The communications were worth the combined value of the brains about the board—nothing more. No truth, no poetry, no law, nothing in morals, in physics or metaphysics, have come by this route which the world did not know previously. If the state of the dead was inquired after, the answer tallied with the preconceived notion of the inquirer. "Where are you?" was decided long before it was answered. "Where is Mr. Mac.?" The response that Mr. Mac. is not happy creates no surprise. "What ought Cousin Sally to do?" The answer is as prompt as it is satisfactory: "Tell her to join the church." "What kind of a man is Mr. ——?" The reply is equally sensible, though not quite so agreeable to the party spoken of: "Stingy, stingy, stingy." By another circle: "What sort of man is Dr. ——?" "Beware of Dr. ——; he is very unreliable." Of course one circle has no faith in such answers when coming from another circle.

Messages are sent sometimes to persons about their departed friends from mediums—an unsolicited favor. We can conceive of no grander impertinence. If a man is so silly as to suppose that he is calling up the dead by his "planchette," let him call up his own departed relatives, and accord them heaven or hell, bliss or misery, as it may please him; but let him not disturb the repose or the fair name of any other dead.

It certainly must be a distracting belief that spirits, evil and good, are waiting their turn at the table. We have known one pious soul, who thought she had discovered a new door to truth and heaven, wind up at last with the frequent use of a flesh brush, as the only means by which she could keep scraped of a sort of barnacle devil! This practice brings back those superstitious horrors which the Holy Scriptures have dispelled. It sets up a domestic demon in every house in place of the family altar. It records every storm that ever swept the deep of human passion, which the violence of malice or jealousy, fear or lust may have raised, and intensifies its energy tenfold by the belief that it has come direct from the world of spirits. To our mind it is difficult to conceive of a machinery more potent for the breaking up of all that is of worth, morally, socially, spiritually, in our homes or in our country. In the language of the Prophet Isaiah we conclude: "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? to the law and to the testimony? If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

POLITICAL DEMONSTRATION.

A mammoth procession of the Democratic party will take place this evening. The city papers speak of it as likely to be as great "a display as ever occurred in any city on this continent." The marching of this immense body of men, carrying torches, will be impressive, as they all know how to keep step. We suppose that with half an hour's notice they could go through the brigade evolutions of "Hardee's Practice." "The preparations and appointments are all on the most magnificent scale. Neither expense nor pains have been spared." In this connection we give Mr. Greeley's estimate of the Republican chances in November:

"Now let us suppose that the enemies of human rights should—no matter by what means—carry Pennsylvania and Ohio in October, winning, likewise, some local triumphs in other States; what then? Shall we not see the very men who now shirk effort, on the plea that Grant cannot be beaten, lying down in inaction because (they will say) he is already beaten, and cannot possibly be elected? How swift will be their transition from blind presumption to cowardly despair.

The States are entitled to choose 317 electors, whereof 159 are a majority. There should be no doubt of General Grant carrying at least these:

Maine	7	Michigan	8
New Hampshire	5	Wisconsin	8
Massachusetts	12	Minnesota	4
Rhode Island	4	Iowa	8
Vermont	5	Missouri	11
West Virginia	5	Kansas	3
Ohio	21	Tennessee	10
Indiana	13	North Carolina	9
Illinois	16	South Carolina	4
Louisiana	6
Total			159

PEOPLE often fancy the world is becoming Christian, when, in fact, Christianity is only becoming worldly.—Archdeacon Hare.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE HOME MONTHLY.—Nashville, Tennessee: Southern Publishing House. The August number of this magazine is enriched by articles from Hon. H. S. Foote, Rev. Dr. McFerrin, Mrs. Jane T. H. Cross, Rev. R. Abbey and others, whose names are the guarantee for a rich table of contents. There are some twenty pages added to its size. It is gradually becoming more purely literary, and this we consider an improvement in its conduct. Many delightful articles have appeared in its pages during the past year, and it is growing in favor with the young.

From the Leonard Scott Publishing Company: The July number of the LONDON QUARTERLY comes to us by this morning's mail. This we consider the greatest among the English Leviathans. We open its cover cautiously, and look on at the several parts of its huge proportions with much wonder, and a flow of expectation that secures a relish, no matter where one begins. The Life of Garrick.—What a troop of thoughts spring out of their caverns at that name, "Garrick!" Indian Railways, Coleridge as a Poet, Gunpowder, Marco Palo, History of Lace, Sir Robert Murchison and Moderate Schools of Geology, Proverbs, Ancient and Modern, Ireland Once More. "In conclusion," we suppose—well, that Irish head is a long one, in the discourse on English politics; and it is quite difficult to decide whether the Irishman or the Englishman has the more love for his neighbor. But until all the Irish turn Protestants—which, by the by, would be the shortest way to end the question—we suppose Ireland will be a fruitful theme for English reviewers: the cause of her wretchedness, her over-grown population, and "the passionate attachment with which her cottiers cling to their squalid cabins and their scanty holdings." These are wonders to an Englishman, but to nobody else. The injustice and the narrowness of the policy of the English government toward Ireland will always excite the indignation of mankind. No amount of diversion, by the discussion of American slavery, can serve to allay the righteous horror with which men see this vulture slowly tearing Ireland to pieces.

We have also received from the Messrs. Harper & Brothers, by Mr. George Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans, the following recent publications, to be noticed fully hereafter.

DR. SMITH'S NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS, by Albert Barnes.

CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE. Stories by Charles Nordhoff.

THE MOONSTONE, by Wilkie Collins.

We have, by mail, a pamphlet of one hundred pages, entitled the POLITICAL STATUS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, by Rumsay Smithson, a member of the Illinois Conference, (Southern.) Canton, Illinois, 1868. Here are all the deliverances of Northern Conferences, pulpits and bishops. Their fierce denunciations, their political backings, their exhortations to war, to impeachment, their whole earnest committal as Conferences, and as a church, to the policy of the Black Republican party. In fact, that party would seem to include Northern Methodism entire; we see no dissent, no exception, no single voice raised in protest. But preachers and people, bishops and elders, they all flow one way.

When Radicalism is in the ascendant, they are; if it goes down they go with it. Like the "loyal eighteen" of Kentucky, they have risked all on a political card—every blanket and pipe. If the ball passes the line they are ruined. No church in this country ever put up so heavy a stake, or ventured upon so large an interest in one political venture. If the Democratic party does succeed outside of Kentucky, as it has inside of it, that powerful church will go down like Erie stock did after the Methodist brother had sold out. This pamphlet will serve, after the event, to demonstrate to the world that godly men could ever under any excitement, so fully commit themselves to earth and wealth. In this connection, per contra, we notice three numbers more of the PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT REBELLION. Harper & Bros., New York, folio, 1868. If a man wishes to read history in two parts—first one side of the truth and then the other side of it—we advise him, by all means, to take this for one of the halves. Here are Northern heroes, and heroes only; here are victories, and victories only. Surely there never was so great a race as the people whose battles are here recounted—that great IDEA that landed on Plymouth Rock in the seventeenth century. Well, here we have it dressed up in soldier's clothes, seeking the bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth. Here it is in pictures, easy to read, so that a man can without an effort indoctrinate his little children in the greatness of that wonderful idea, until they, too, shall feel of what a great stock they have come. Three numbers, 33, 34, 35, complete the history. It includes the last drop, even the riot in New Orleans, and records General Sheridan's letter, in which he says: "It was a murder which the mayor and police perpetrated without the shadow of a necessity. Furthermore, I believe it was premeditated," etc. No statement of the mayor is given, or any rebutting evidence. What a pity the recent letter of Governor Warmoth to the President, with the likenesses of that one hundred and fifty loyalists who have been murdered in Louisiana during the last six weeks, could not also have been embalmed in this beautiful tomb of truth! Fortunately, the public will not be wholly dependent upon these elaborate Radical publications for a true history of the past.

Mr. Henry Clay Dean has presented us, in his CRIMES OF THE CIVIL WAR AND CURSE OF THE FUNDING SYSTEM, an antidote of pungent efficiency. This work is an octavo of 512 pages. Wm. T. Smithson, publisher, Baltimore, 1868. For sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street.

We have seen no such summary as this is of the enormities upon the laws of war, and of peace, committed during the war, and since the surrender, by the Radical party. It is a powerful campaign document in the struggle which is now going on for the supremacy of law over anarchy, of republican government over arbitrary power. The bond question, in all its terrors, is set forth. "To this extremity," says the author, "are the bondholders driving the people, unwilling to risk the payment of the hateful debt in the ordinary chances of business. The bondholders, through their instruments in Congress, have invoked the military power, ostensibly to restore the Southern States to the Union, but really to organize a monstrous standing army, to establish the English funding system, and collect the taxes, and pay the interest in all time to come, to abolish the forms, as they have already destroyed the spirit of liberty." Mr. Dean was arrested at Keokuk, "under the reign of Mr. Lincoln," and was thrown into a loathsome prison, and after several weeks' confinement was released unconditionally, having "never seen anything like charges," his sole offense being, as he believes, that he was a Democrat.

We give the titles of some of its chapters: Destruction of Self-Government, Destruction of Civilization by Mongrelism, Invasion of Personal Rights, Destruction of Fair and Free Elections, Duress of Congress, Degradation of the Judiciary, Infidelity of the Clergy, Curse of the Funding System, The War Debt not a Just Debt, Bondholders and Bondsmen, etc., etc. The work is full of information on these themes.

A CORRECTION.

TRENTON, La., August 14, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of some weeks since I noticed a communication from one who signs himself "Pilgrim," in which he gives us some account of things about Monroe and Trenton. I wish to correct an error into which "Pilgrim" has fallen, as it does my predecessor a slight injustice. Some years ago there was a society organized in Monroe, but during the war it was scattered, like many other churches in the country. When I came to Monroe I found a small society in existence, which has had some increase the past year. My labors at this point have been, principally, gathering in the scattered members of the church. The community here have a very grateful recollection of the labors of Brother Trippett, and others, who preceded me. At Trenton, one mile above, on the opposite side of the river, we have organized a church, and have a house of our own, and a good Sabbath school in operation. I know not who "Pilgrim" is, but I suppose that he got the two places confused in his mind.

OBITUARIES.

DAVID CARMIN ELLIS was born in Jefferson county, Mississippi, November 22, 1810, and died at his residence, near Port Gibson, Mississippi, April 28, 1868.

He was the subject of deep religious impressions early in life. His youth was passed in that portion of Jefferson in which have lived and died many of the Lord's chosen, and from which has gone forth such a host of holy men and women. His parents were members of the Baptist church, and faithful attendants at Salem church. Here young Ellis first felt the Gospel to be the power of God. At the age of sixteen he deeply realized that he was a sinner—sought relief in prayer and reading the Holy Scriptures. But for months all his efforts seemed to be la vain, and he went with his head bowed down. One afternoon his anguish, on account of his sins, became so great that he fled to the silent grove to pour out the sorrows of his hardened heart:

> "—— in solitude to shed
> The penitential tear,
> And all the promises to plead
> Where none but God can hear."

He kneeled before the Lord and cried for mercy through the merits of Christ. While thus engaged he fully gave his heart to God, trusted in the atonement of Jesus, and felt the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, filling his soul. He exclaimed: "Surely God is in this place. It is none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven." He remained upon his knees adoring and praising God until long after the sun had hid himself behind the western hills, and the stars were looking from a cloudless sky like cheerful witnesses upon the scene, which made the angels in heaven rejoice. The bush beneath which the youth sought and obtained the forgiveness of his sins stands to-day, with spreading branches and rich foliage—his Ebenezer. The stars which looked with seeming delight have cheered his path for forty-one years, and served as nightly reminders of the vows he had made to God.

He resolved to be religious without publicly connecting with the church; but after fruitless efforts he yielded to the advice of a pious mother, and was baptized and received as a communicant in the Baptist Church, near Grand Gulf, Mississippi. In a few years the society of which he was a member was torn by dissentions produced by false teachers, and he thought it his duty to withdraw from those who walked disorderly. He lived for several years out of the church and devoid of spiritual comfort. During this period he married, and not a great while after he and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in Port Gibson. Ever after he proved himself a devoted and consistent member, ready at all times to aid the church to the extent of his ability. His heart was ever willing and his hand ever open in her support. His liberality was only limited by his means.

Death was not a surprise to his friends, his family or himself. Suffering from consumption, he had been expecting it for months, and had endeavored to set his house in order. He gave every necessary direction in regard to business, counseled each member of his family, and earnestly entreated them to "live for Christ." About an hour before the spirit took its departure there was every indication that the final moment had come—but a slight movement of the heart, breathing almost imperceptible. He revived, saw his family weeping, and inquired: "Have I been talking?" "No, you have been sleeping, so quietly we thought you had gone." "Then, Brother J——, you thought the transfer had been made?" "Yes." "Why did you call me back? It takes this old body a long time to die." Looking around, he said: "What a beautiful and impressive scene is this. Here is my family—my wife, children, pastor—waiting calmly, patiently, prayerfully for me to die. I have fought the good fight. I have faith that henceforth there is laid up for me a crown." The eyes closed, the voice was hushed, the spirit gone.

A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

DEAR BRETHREN—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

RECOLLECTIONS OF REV. JOHN JOHNSON AND HIS HOUSE.

An Autobiography, by Mrs. SUSANNAH JOHNSON. Edited by Rev. ADAM C. JOHNSON, M. D.

The above book will be published at Nashville, September 15th, in one 12mo. volume of 310 pages. It records the varied experiences of a pioneer Methodist preacher of no small celebrity, as well as the toils and privations of his family, and forms a most entertaining and affecting biography. It contains no chapter that can be read without emotion. In short, it is a faithful picture of the men and manners of early times, and as such will have an interest far beyond the sphere of Mr. Johnson's labors, extensive as they were.

It may be ordered from

A. H. REDFORD, Agent, Nashville,
Or from P. M. PINCKARD, Saint Louis.

Price, $1 50, with usual discount.

I offer the following

PREMIUMS TO AGENTS.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE, the SAFEST AND MOST EFFECTIVE REMEDY FOR WORMS THAT HAS EVER BEEN DISCOVERED.

This celebrated specific for Worms is used with the utmost freedom and confidence by gentlemen who have obtained eminence in the medical profession, and many of these, throwing aside their prejudices, have cheerfully given certificates testifying to its superiority. It is used extensively, for the simple reason that Nothing has yet been Discovered which can be Substituted in its Place.

And it is given without apprehension, because every one knows its perfect safety. It has now been before the public for over Forty Years, and has attested its superiority in thousands of cases, throughout all parts of the world.

It is the imperative duty of every parent to watch the health of his child, and to provide himself with this potent specific.

Be careful to observe the initials of the name, and see that you get

A CLEAR, SMOOTH SKIN AND beautiful complexion follow the use of HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED EXTRACT SARSAPARILLA.

It removes black spots, pimples, moth-patches and all eruptions of the skin.

IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER months the system naturally undergoes a change, and Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla is an assistant of the greatest value.

YOUNG LADIES, BEWARE OF the injurious effects of Face Powders and Washes. All such remedies close up the pores of the skin, and in a short time destroy the complexion. If you would have a fresh, healthy and youthful appearance, use Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla.

NOT A FEW OF THE WORST disorders that afflict mankind arise from corruption of the blood. Helmbold's Extract Sarsaparilla is a remedy of the utmost value.

HELMBOLD'S EXTRACT SARSAparilla cleanses and renovates the blood, instills the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors that make disease.

THOSE WHO DESIRE BRILLIancy of complexion must purify and enrich the blood, which Helmbold's Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla invariably does. Ask for Helmbold's. Take no other.

HELMBOLD'S HIGHLY CONCENtrated Fluid Extract Sarsaparilla eradicates eruptive and ulcerative diseases of the throat, nose, eyelids, scalp and skin, which so disfigure the appearance, purging the evil effects of mercury, and removing all taints, the remnants of disease, hereditary or otherwise, and is taken by adults and children with perfect safety.

Two tablespoonfuls of Helmbold's Extract of Sarsaparilla, added to a pint of water, is equal to the Lisbon Diet Drink, and one bottle is equal to a gallon of the Syrup of Sarsaparilla, or the decoctions as usually made.

HELMBOLD'S CONCENTRATED Extract Buchu is the great diuretic.—Helmbold's Concentrated Extract Sarsaparilla is the great Blood Purifier. Both are prepared according to rules of pharmacy and chemistry, and are the most active that can be made.

The best test of their purity and superiority will be a comparison with the properties as set forth in the United States Dispensatory.

My laboratory for the manufacture of Fluid Extracts has been visited by thousands of physicians and druggists from all parts of the United States, and the mode of preparation received their unanimous commendation.

Helmbold's Highly Concentrated Fluid Extracts are pleasant in taste and odor, and immediate in their action.

None are genuine unless done up in the steel-engraved wrapper, and signed H. T. HELMBOLD.

The proprietor was compelled to adopt such a wrapper because of the growing popularity of his articles, and to prevent spurious and dangerous counterfeiting.

H. T. HELMBOLD, druggist, of eighteen years' experience, and manufacturer of Helmbold's Genuine Preparations.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

A SINGING LESSON.

A nightingale made a mistake!
She sang a few notes out of tune;
Her heart was ready to break,
And she hid from the moon!
She wrung her claws, poor thing,
But was far too proud to weep;
She tucked her head under her wing,
And pretended to be asleep!

A lark, arm in arm with a thrush,
Came sauntering up to the place;
The nightingale felt herself h ush,
Though feathers hid her face.
She knew they had heard her song,
She felt them snigger and sneer;
She thought that this life was too long,
And wished she could skip a year!

"O Nightingale!" cooed a dove,
"O Nightingale, what's the use?
You bird of beauty and love,
Why behave like a goose?
Don't skulk away from our sight,
Like common contemptible fowl,
You bird of joy and delight,
Why behave like an owl?

"Only think of all you have done,
Only think of all you can do;
A false note is really fun
For such a bird as you!
Lift up your proud little crest,
Open your musical beak—
Other birds have to do their best,
But you need only speak."

The nightingale shyly took
Her head from under her wing,
And, giving the dove a look,
Straightway began to sing.
There was never a bird could pass—
The night was divinely calm,
And the people stood on the grass
To hear that wonderful psalm.

The nightingale did not care,
She only sang to the skies,
Her song ascended there,
And there she fixed her eyes.
The people who listened below
She knew but little about;
And this tale has a moral, I know,
If you'll try to find it out.

—Aunt Judy's Magazine.

THE TWO PICTURES.

Will you look at two pictures, and see if either one belongs to you?

The first is a little boy. I will not tell you his name, nor his age, nor where he lives, nor who are his parents I am sure he would not like to be known; but I must tell you about him that you may avoid his faults, and take good warning by his conduct.

This little boy has a kind mother, and she wishes that he should grow up to be a useful and pious young man. Yet, sad to tell, he does not himself care to do right, or to obey his parents, or to please God. There can be no doubt that he has a very hard and wicked heart; for when he is naughty and grieves his mother, he does not care for her tears. And when he is told of a fault, he is stubborn, and will not ask to be forgiven, nor show any desire to amend.

Our Lord Jesus Christ, who came into the world to die for sinners, was once a little child. He has left a pattern for children who wish to be like him. As a child he was 'subject in all things.' He never grieved his mother's heart by a sullen or evil temper, nor made her shed a tear by any unkind conduct. Oh! how much did Mary love the holy child Jesus! But the little boy of whom we write does not wish to be like Jesus. He does not love to hear about him as a kind Saviour. I do not think he ever truly prays to God to change his hard heart, and to give him the grace of his Holy Spirit, that he may be a better child. He may say his prayers, but he does not really pray, for he does not mean what he says, but is looking about him all the time he is on his knees, or is thinking of something else.

What is to become of this little boy if he does not seek for grace to turn from his evil ways? He will certainly grow worse. He will walk in the path of the wicked all the days he lives on earth; and then, when he dies, how sad will his end be? And what is the end of every sinner, who will not forsake his sins, and look to Jesus Christ for pardon through his precious blood? He will be cast into the place of woe along with the devil and the wicked angels. The wrath of God will abide upon him. Never, no never, will he dwell with God, or taste the joys of heaven.

Now, let us look at another picture. It is that of a little boy who obeys his parents because it is right, because they love him, and because God has said, 'Honor thy father and thy mother'—one who is as careful to obey them when out of sight as when under their eye. There were several lads seen standing at the corner of a street. One proposed to the rest that they should all go and see the people on their way to the flower show. 'Oh, yes! capital, so we will!' they all cried. 'But see, here is William Hall coming; let us ask him to go with us.' Then they said, 'Come with us, William, and see the gentlemen and ladies at the flower show.' 'Yes,' said William, 'if my mother will give me leave; I will run and ask her.' 'Oh! oh! the baby!' they shouted aloud; 'so you must run and ask your mother!' 'I did not ask my mother,' said one boy. 'Nor I,' said two or three more. 'Come along with us,' they still said, 'if you do not want to be called a coward as long as you live. Do you not see we are all waiting?'

William stood with one foot forward and flush on his face. Tears came into his eyes as he heard the word 'coward.' Now was the time to see if he was brave enough to be called a coward, rather than do wrong. 'I will not go without I first ask my mother,' said he firmly. 'and I am no coward either. I promised that I would not go out of the street without she gave me leave; and I should be a coward if I were to tell a wicked lie.' The rest now ran away mocking and shouting; and William went quietly to his home. In the evening William was seen, with a happy face, taking a pleasant walk along with his dear mother.

Will you look at these two pictures and see if you can find your own likeness in either? Are you like the boy who does not honor his parents? Then you do not fear God nor obey his word, and he is angry with you every day. Or, are you like him who would rather have the scorn and bad name of the rude lads than disobey his mother?

DYING SISTER.—Little Anna lay in bed, near the window. The deep flush of fever was on her cheeks. In the same room was her brother Robert, busily engaged in making a ship. His poor sister could ill bear the noise of the hammer; but he worked on as though he did not trouble himself much about her. Was he not an unkind boy?

'Do, please, dear Robert, give me a glass of water! My throat is so dry, and my head aches so very much,' said Anna in a gentle voice. Again was the loud knocking of the hammer heard; and once more Anna begged for a glass of cold water, when Robert called out sharply—

'Wait a minute, Anna; I can't fetch it yet.' At last he poured out a glass, from a jug which was warm with standing where the sun shone brightly upon it.

'Oh, not that water, Robert; please fetch me a little fresh and cool from the spring.'

'Don't plague me so, Anna, you see how busy I am. I am sure that this water is quite good enough.'

Knock, knock went the hammer again.

'Oh, my poor head,' said the invalid, softly, as she took the glass, drank a little and lay back on the pillow.

That was the last time that Anna asked Robert for a proof of brotherly love. The next day she died; and as the little coffin stood in the room ready to be carried to the grave, no one shed more bitter tears than the little boy who would rather have his own selfish way than listen to the wishes of his dying sister.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HYBRIDIZING GRAPES.

The analysis of grapes is a matter of so much consequence to this country, now that we are engaged in the wine making business, that the agricultural division of the Patent Office employed Dr. Jackson to make the required experiments and thus settle the question as to the character of the acid which predominated in the American grape. The result showed that tartaric acid was in every specimen, in great excess over the nominal demands for wine and for table uses. The Doctor also settled the fact that sugar was largely deficient.

Subsequently, D. M. Balch, of Salem, Massachusetts, a graduate of the scientific school of Cambridge, Massachusetts, made some chemical investigations, with the following results. He says: 'To answer the questions, which, if any, of the native grapes, ordinarily ripening in this vicinity, is best adapted to wine making, (at Salem), I have analyzed the fresh must of several varieties. I also had another object in view, namely: to ascertain if the table adapted to Oechsle's must scale, by Gall, from numerous analyses of European musts, in 1851-52-53, was applicable to the must of our native grapes.

'My method of analysis was as follows: The grapes were gathered when dry, pressed, and the juice strained through linen. The specific gravity of this clear must was taken by weight, in a bottle with a perforated stopper. A portion of the must was diluted with fifty times its bulk of water. The sugar contents were ascertained by an accurate method, and the results were as follows: [We will state here that to produce a wine that shall keep, it is necessary that the must should contain at least fifteen per cent. of sugar.] We now give the results of the tests: Clinton, 13 77 per cent. of sugar; Alley, 10.37; Franklin, 14 70; Union Village, 10 00; Allen's Hybrid, 16 20; Adirondac, 14 00; Concord, 11 83; Hartford Prolific, 15.01; Delaware, 20.63; Rogers, No. 15, 16 47; Rogers, No. 4, 17.30; Rogers, No. 22, 16.70.' We have italicised the only grapes out of some twenty five varieties examined by Mr. Balch, which were really wine fruit.

Now, wines excessively acid, corrected by large additions of sugar, become cordials, that any one familiar with our native wines immediately detects and is displeased with, no matter how sweet and pleasant they may be to those unaccustomed to taste our native juices. Best wines reduced to five-tenths of one per cent. of acid by the addition of sugared water, when the sugar, by the degree of the hydrometer of Beaume, does not exceed fifteen degrees, are so nearly natural that it requires a good wine expert to detect the sugar added to the wine; but the least additional quantity is at once detected. Wines can very easily be made without sugar from many of our native improved seedling vines, and especially from our hybrids; and such wines have a peculiar relish, greatly loved after the palate becomes accustomed to the absence of sugar and other articles so often present in the wines imported, which we are taught to believe pure. 'A sweet nectar' is the idea of wine derived from poetry, and from the high enthusiastic glow that travelers, in rainbow colors, throw over all they see and taste in Europe. But truth shows us that wines are not often sweet, nor have that 'cream of perfume in one delicious drop,' the over-wrought, ecstatic imagination would have them possess. Yet, a sober, hearty relish can be easily acquired from many of our native wines, far more chaste and healthful, both for the table and the sick bedside, than any of foreign lands. This correction of American ideas of wine is in daily progress among us. Many of those who, five or ten years ago, never tasted a pure wine, now instantly detect the smallest mixture of sugar, brandy or other impurity, even that necessary to raise the must to fifteen degrees of Beaume.

But native wine made of less than the above rule of sugar in the grape, though they would soon so please the consumer that he would have only wines made without sugar artificially added, are yet perishable, and the next art for our yet inexperienced wine makers to learn is, how to bottle early, for when once safely in the bottle wine will keep, though perishable in the wood cask. And in this art, perhaps, more than others, do we need progress, namely, how to bottle at a few months' age safely, so that the bottle shall not explode, nor the individual character of the grape be lost.

When that is done, we need but one more rule to the perfect in wine making, and that is that each man can make his own wine; that we seek not to blend the aromas and flavors into one common rule, but each make his aroma and flavor, with no addition to the pure juice, but by more manipulations only. And when that is done, the individual or the local vineyard brand becomes a mine of wealth.

The truth is, the native wines over most of our territory, east of the Rooky Mountains, are more sure in the sites where they flourish than is the apple, or pear, or peach, and far more sure than the grape in Germany. We lose, by insects alone, one-half the apples that set on our trees; but who ever heard of a tenth of our grapes being lost by insects? We often lose a third or a half of our peaches by disease; yet, if a few grapes rot or are mildewed in any one locality, a host of declaimers publish the fact.

There is no crop more sure than that of our grapes on every spot where they ought to be planted, and it will need not a dozen years, if we act wisely, to make our wines as surely as we do any other article we attempt to make by our own plans. In this light such analyses as those given above are valuable, and when their number is so large as to give us light everywhere, the end we seek will have been obtained. —New York Day Book.

A REMARKABLE interest has been manifested at Talca, in Chile, to hear religious truth. The Rev. Mr. Gilbert went there and preached in Spanish. He had an audience of unexpected numbers; and opposition and discussion have only tended to increase amongst the people a desire for further instruction. It was only a few months ago that Mr. Gilbert was mobbed in the streets; and now from thirty to sixty persons gather regularly to hear the Scriptures read and the Gospel taught by Mr. Sayre, who, like Paul in ancient Rome, preaches to them in his own hired house. A church has been organized in Valparaiso, and a church edifice is now erecting. The Valparaiso Bible Society has, during the past year, distributed 1,072 copies of the Scriptures and 3,631 copies of other publications.

"I NEVER give alms to strangers," said Hunx to a poor Irish woman. "Sure, then, your honor will never relieve an angel," was her quick reply.

SCIENTIFIC.

SCIENTIFIC DARING.

One dull day in autumn, just after noon, a balloon rose in the air at the foot of Cleet Hills, on the western edge of the great central plain of England. It was inflated with the lightest of gases which chemical skill could produce; it rose with amazing velocity.

A mile up, and it entered a stratum of cloud more than a thousand feet thick. Emerging from this, the sunshine brightly on the air-ship; the sky overhead was of the clearest and deepest blue; and below lay cloudland—an immeasurable expanse of cloud, whose surface looked as solid as that of the earth, now wholly lost to view. Lofty mountains and deep, dark ravines appeared below; the peaks and sides of those cloud mountains next the sun glittering like snow, but casting shadows as black as if they were solid rock.

Up rose the balloon with tremendous velocity. Four miles above earth! A pigeon was let loose; it dropped down through the air as if it had been a stone. The air was too thin to enable it to fly. It was as if a bark laden to the deck were to pass from the heavy waters of the open sea into an inland unsaline lake; the bark would sink at once in the thinner water. Up, up, still higher! The spectrum, opposed to the sun, showed marvelously clear; lines appeared which are invisible in the denser atmosphere on the earth's surface; but as the car swung round in its gyrating upward flight, the moment the direct rays of the sun passed off the prism, there was no spectrum at all. The air was so pure, so free from the comparatively solid aqueous matter, that there was no reflected light; the air was too thin to retain or reflect any portion of the rays which fell upon it. And what a silence profound! The heights of the sky were as still as the deepest depths of the ocean, where, as was found during the search for the lost Atlantic cable, the fine mud lies as unstirred from year to year as the dust which imperceptibly gathers on the furniture in a deserted house. No sound, no life—only the bright sunshine falling through a sky which it could not warm.

Up—five miles above earth—higher than the inaccessible summit of Chimborazo or Dewangiri. Despite the sunshine everything freezes. The air grows too thin to support life, even for a few minutes. Two men only in that adventurous balloon—the one steering the air-ship, the other watching the scientific instruments, and recording them with a rapidity bred of long practice.

Suddenly, as the latter looks at the instruments, his sight grows dim; he takes a lens to help his sight, and can only mark, from the falling barometer, that they are still rising rapidly. A flask of brandy lies within a foot of him; he tries to reach it, but his arms refuse to obey his will. He tries to call his comrade, who has gone into the ring above; a whisper in that deep stillness would suffice—but no sound comes from his lips—he is voiceless. His head droops on his shoulders; with an effort he raises it—it falls on the other shoulder; once more, with a resolute effort, he raises it—it falls backward. For a moment he sees dimly the figure of his comrade in the ring above; then sensation fails him—he lies back unconscious.

Some minutes pass—the balloon still rising upward. Seven miles above earth! The steersman comes down in the car; he sees his comrade in a swoon, and feels his own senses failing him. He saw at once that life or death hung upon a few moments. The balloon was still rising rapidly; it must be made to descend at once, or they are both dead men. He seized, or tried to seize the valve, in order to open it, and let out a portion of the inflated gas. His hands are purple with the intense cold—they are paralyzed—they will not respond to his will. It was a fearful moment. In another minute, in their upward flight, he would be senseless as his comrade. But he was a bold, self-possessed man, trained in a hundred balloon ascents, and ready for every emergency. He seized the valve with his teeth; it opened a little—once, twice, thrice. The balloon began to descend.

Then the swooned marksman heard a voice calling to him, "Come, take an observation—try!" He heard as in a dream, but could neither see nor move. Again he heard, in firmer and commanding tones, "Take an observation—now, then, do try!" He returned to consciousness, and saw the steersman standing before him. He looked at his instruments; they must have been nearly eight miles up; but now the barometer was rising rapidly, the balloon was descending. Brandy was used. The aeronauts revived. They had been higher above earth than mortal man, or any living thing, had ever been before. But now they were safe.

Such are the perils which science demands of her votaries, and which they encounter bravely and cheerfully. Such was the memorable balloon ascent of Messrs. Coxwell and Glaisher, from Wolverhampton, on the 5th of September, 1862. A madness, thousands will say, a perilous absurdity, a tempting of Providence, a risking of life for no adequate purpose. One minute more of inaction—of compulsory inaction—on the part of the steersman, whose senses were failing him, and the air-ship, with its intensely rarefied gas, would have been floating untended, with two corpses, in the wide realms of space. What would have become of it? How far it would have ascended with its lifeless freight; how long it would have floated all unseen in the empyrean, who shall say?—Once a Week.

MANUFACTURE OF ARTIFICIAL DIAMONDS.—The French publication, La Propagation Industrielle, publishes a description by M. Carlisle Saix of his method of producing colorless, colored or black diamonds. The system is based on the principle that when a current of chlorine or of hydrochloric gas passes through cast iron in a liquid state perchloride or protochloride of iron is formed, both of which vaporize, the cast iron remaining in both cases perfectly intact, because the chlorine cannot directly unite with it. The crystallization of the carbon is then within the general rule, for in a body which is dissolved and capable of crystallization, crystallization takes place each time that the dissolving agent evaporates, the size of the crystals depending always on the slowness of the operation. 1. To obtain colorless diamonds, a current of dry chlorine must be brought to the bottom of the crucible, containing the cast iron, by means of a bent tube of china or fire-clay. No organic coloring matter resists the action of chlorine, so that the perchloride of iron in evaporating leaves the carbon to become a colorless crystal. 2 When it is desired to give the crystal a blue, green, pink or yellow tint, it is only necessary to mix with the cast iron certain metallic oxides in sufficient quantity, such as those of chromium, cobalt and others, or their salts, which will give these colors. 3. To obtain black diamonds, hydrochloric gas must be brought to the bottom of the crucible in the same manner as for colored or colorless diamonds. Protochloride of iron will be formed, which is volatile, but in this case the carbon will remain black, in consequence of the presence of hydrogen. This explains the fact of all diamonds having the same chemical and mineral properties, and why in nature the black diamond is found in the greatest quantity, because its formation in alluvial soils requires only the presence of sulphuric acid and marine salt, whereas the others require the presence of particular oxides which are often wanting. To obtain all these varieties of diamonds special furnaces are not necessary; the crucibles must be covered to prevent the oxidization of the cast iron, which might change the carbon into carbonic oxide, and diminish, in consequence, the yield of the operation; these crucibles should be provided with a small tube, reaching outside the furnace, which will enable the chlorides resulting from the reaction to be gathered. When the liquid cast iron has been almost completely evaporated out of the crucibles, the diamonds can be removed without disturbing the crucible, and by means of solvents any cast iron which might be adhering to them can be removed.

THIN SHEET IRON.—A considerable demonstration was some time ago made in the United States over a piece of sheet iron the 1,000th of an inch thick, and upon which a letter was written and sent to Pittsburg. This excited the emulation of our English brethren, and, after repeated experiments, we are now informed that Messrs. Hallam & Co. have rolled a sheet so thin that 4,800 are required to make a thickness of an inch. The thickest rolled sheets of iron are the armor-plates of Brown, in Sheffield, which plates are each fifteen inches thick.—American Artisan.

ALMOST simultaneous honors are being offered to Luther in Germany, to Huss in Bohemia, and Savonarola in Italy. The cell which the Florentine Reformer once occupied in St. Mark's is now the repository of pictures, books and other relics connected with his name, person and history. Among other things, there are his Bible, covered with Latin annotations in his handwriting, and written skeletons of the sermons which he thundered out in the cathedral of Florence. One of the new squares of that capital has been named the "Piazza Savonarola."

HIGHLY CONSECRATED.

The following description of the ceremony of consecrating a bishop is abridged from the New York Tribune of the 13th instant:

The Rev. Bartholomew F. McQuaid was yesterday consecrated the Right Rev. Bishop of Rochester, by the Most Rev. Archbishop McCloskey, in the cathedral in Mott street. Seven bishops, seventy-four priests, thirty acolytes, and a congregation that comfortably filled, but did not crowd the cathedral, assisted. The pageant was imposing, and even to the non-Catholic the ceremonies must have been impressive. To witness them one dollar was charged as an admission fee, a sum which no one who appreciates a spectacle, and was present yesterday, will regret to-day having expended. Half-past 10 A. M. was the time announced when the exercises would begin. Soon after the clock showed this hour the procession emerged from the Sacristy. First came the Master of Ceremonies, Rev. Mr. McNierny, the Crucifer, wearing the stole and chasuble; and, on either side, an acolyte clad in crimson cassock, and beretta and white surplice, and each bearing a lighted taper. Two boys, robed in black cassock and white surplice, followed, and behind these were thirty others dressed in the crimson cassock and beretta, and white surplice. Sixty-eight priests who wore the stan and surplice succeeded, and behind these were eight youths, attendants on the clergy, robed in white garments with scarlet trimmings; the candidate for episcopal honors; Bishop Bailey, of Newark, New Jersey; Bacon, of Portland, Maine; Williams, of Philadelphia; Conroy, of Albany; Loughlin, of Brooklyn, Long Island; McFarland, of Hartford, Connecticut; and Goesbriand, of Vermont, came next. Following were the sub-deacons, deacons, deacons of honor, the archdeacon, the Rev. Dr. Starrs, V. G., the Most Rev. Archbishop McCloskey, train bearer, and the Rev. Mr Kearney, Assistant Master of Ceremonies. In this order the procession moved down the aisle, on the epistle side of the altar, and up the centre main aisle to the sanctuary inclosure, where acolytes, priests, bishops and archbishops, in turn, made the genuflection in honor of the unseen Son of God, whom every child of the church firmly believes rests on every altar at the same time, throughout the whole world. Chairs were provided for the reverend clergy and were placed without the altar; the bishops occupied a place reserved for them within the sanctuary, and the archbishop was escorted to his throne. While the march to the altar was in progress, Mr. Gustave Schmitz performed a brilliant composition on the organ. All being seated the music ceased, and the attendants commenced to robe the archbishop for the celebration of the mass of consecration. The ceremonial of consecration was initiated by Archbishop McCloskey interrogating the candidate as to whether he was willing to enter the episcopacy, and, being answered in the affirmative, priests and bishops chanted the Litany of the Saints. The consecrating prelate then recited a prayer; the hands of the candidate were incased in gloves of spotless white, and the priests sang the hymn "Veni, Spiritus Sanctus." The mass was now proceeded with to the close of the "Kyrie," when the head of the candidate was anointed with the holy chrism, and the 132d Psalm was sung by the priests. The pastoral staff was bestowed in these words, uttered in the language of the church: "Receive the pastoral staff, that you may use it for the correction of vices, the deliverance of judgments, without anger, fostering virtue, and restoring troubled minds to the tranquility of enduring peace." The episcopal ring was presented by the archbishop, who said: "Receive this ring as a sign of faith, and preserve it free from stain." After the Agnus Dei the candidate was presented with the miter, and ascended to the altar, walked to the Gospel side, and knelt down. The consecrating prelate uttered in a very few words in a low tone; the kneeling bishop arose, walked three steps, knelt again, and the archbishop recited the prescribed language, and the like ceremony was performed for the third time. The Right Rev. Bishop then descended from the altar, and, attended by the Master of Ceremonies and deacons, proceeded down the main aisle to the entrance of the cathedral, and bestowed his blessing on the congregation as he moved along, and till he returned to the altar. When the Most Rev. Archbishop pronounced the archiepiscopal benediction the priests and acolytes arose, the choir of thirty voices sang Te Deum, by Cocia, and the ceremony of consecration ended. The magnificent vestments which the bishop wore were presented to him by the people of Newark, and the lay and clerical students at Seton Hall.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
BROOKHAVEN, MISS

125 miles from New Orleans, on N. O. J & G. N. Rail-Road.

The next session will open on Wednesday, the 11th of September, 1867.

There is a full corps of teachers; the instruction will be thorough; the discipline firm and strict.

The building is large and well arranged; the play ground ample; the location healthy.

The institution is under control of the M. E. Church, South.

The entire expenses in the Collegiate Department for board, tuition, books and incidentals (not including music and the ornamental branches) need not exceed $125 00 for term of twenty weeks.

Each boarder must furnish her towels, one pair of blankets and sheets.

For further information, address
REV. H. F. JOHNSON,

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

W. H. WATKINS, President.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE,
Washington county, Virginia.

The FALL SESSION of this institution begins on the 20th of August next

Our terms, for a session of five months, are as follows:

Tuition in Collegiate course, payable in advance.....$30 00
Fuel, room rent and contingent fee, payable in advance..... 10 00
Board, at $13 per month..... 65 00
Washing..... 7 50

Tuition in the Preparatory Department is $5 less. Board is payable monthly in advance. Students supply their own beds and furniture for their rooms, and take their meals with the families boarding them.

We invite those seeking collegiate culture to consider the excellent advantages here offered.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

Constitutes it as good a medium for reaching the people who trade with this city and Mobile as any offered in the Southwest.

Our Circulation is Wideuing Daily

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES,	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00
Three	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents; not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent Texas Tonic," or Vegetable Medicine:

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefitted:

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama,

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1823.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 613 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 11th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We are still without any improvement to notice in the general market, which continues extremely dull, nearly every branch of trade participating in the prevailing apathy. A moderate business is, nevertheless, doing in the supply of country orders by the wholesale trade. A wide difference between the views of factors and buyers has prevented the execution of some small orders pending for our leading staple, the movement in which has been of limited extent. The new crop has commenced coming in as freely as expected, the receipts thus far embracing 72 bales up to last Saturday, and 159 since. Nothing of any moment has been done in sugar and molasses, very little in tobacco, and only a jobbing and retail business in Western produce, without any material variation in prices.

The weather has been clear and pleasant. We have now some reason to hope that the wet spell has ceased, and that we shall hear no further complaints from the country on the subject. Clear, warm weather to mature the bolls, and favorable for picking, will have a material influence on the extent of the cotton crop. The accounts from the country are more hopeful and confident, but from some points they are still discouraging.

The river remains about the same, being twelve feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—On Saturday, with telegrams representing the New York market steady at 30c. for Middling Uplands, and the Liverpool market buoyant at 10¾d. to 10⅞d. for Middling Uplands, and 11d. to 11⅛d. for Orleans, (against 10¾d. to 11d. on Friday,) factors continued very firm in their pretensions, and the sales were confined to 13 bales, in addition to 5 bales new Strict Low Middling, sold late on Friday, at 29c. On Monday, with a slight decline in prices at Liverpool toward the close, and Middling Uplands quoted at New York at 30 to 30½c., a few buyers came forward, and some factors evincing a willingness to meet the demand, 100 bales changed hands, at 27½ to 28c. for new Low Middling, and 29c. for new Middling, but very irregular prices for old. On Tuesday the Liverpool telegrams reported no change in rates, Middling Uplands being quoted at 10¾d. and Orleans at 11d., while at New York prices showed no variation. There was a moderate inquiry in this market, resulting in sales of 135 bales, at 28c. for new Strict Low Middling, 28½ to 29c. for new Middling, and 27c. for old Middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 253 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 188 bales, against 68 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 120 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 587,458 bales, against 712,611 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 278,943 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 12,113 bales to Great Britain, of 92,627 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 788 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

SUGAR.—During the past three days the market for foreign sugars has been quiet, but firm. There has been very little demand for round lots, and the retail demand has been only moderate. No sale of any importance has come within our notice. The small amount of Louisiana sugar now on hand has been retailing at 13 to 14¾c. per pound for fair to prime, 16¼ to 16½c. for yellow clarified, and 16¾ to 17c. for white.

MOLASSES.—There is still no market for this article. Holders ask 45 to 50c. per gallon, but sales of large lots could not be effected at these prices, as there is no demand for the article.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks	12 00

INCIDENTAL FEES—First session, $2 50; second session, $2; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition FREE, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $5 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

The Fall Session of this well-known institution will open on WEDNESDAY, the 30th day of September, with a full corps of experienced teachers.

The following are the terms for a session of four and a half months, payable one half at entrance and the remainder on the 1st day of December:

Board, including washing, fuel and room-rent, in gold	$67 50
Tuition in English and Latin, in currency	25 00
French, in currency	15 00
Music, in currency	30 00
Use of instrument, in currency	7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency	2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Travelling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a coverlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCE

VOLUME XIV.—NUMBER 33.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 685.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1868.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—113 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Quite a number of Southern post offices have been discontinued in the South from causes which can easily be remedied.

The post office department desires advice from the patrons of the several post offices discontinued of acceptable persons who can take the oath. Married women and minors are excluded by law from charge of post offices, but can act as assistants.

The President proclaims the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Nicaragua. It is of a liberal character of friendship, commerce and navigation. There is to be a reciprocal freedom of commerce, but this does not include the coasting trade. American citizens to enjoy the same security and right of locomotion as the natives in Nicaragua. The United States accords protection to the routes of communication through Nicaragua, and guarantees their neutrality and security, on condition that the persons or company managing the same do not adopt or establish such regulations concerning traffic as are contrary to the spirit and intention of the treaty. Transit is allowed to United States troops and munitions over the territory of Nicaragua.

McCulloch and Rollins had a fruitless consultation to-day.

The large expenditures of the War Department, Freedmen's Bureau, etc., will increase the public debt several millions.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 2.—Some twenty parties throughout the United States, connected with the blank department of the post office, were indicted in Michigan. Under this indictment, W. O. Reding, blank agent for the Southern States, G. A. Traver, of the Sixth Auditor's office, and Wm. Towers, chief clerk of the Superintendent of Public Printing, were arrested. The prisoners were discharged on the ground that they could not be tried on an indictment found in Michigan for an offense committed in Washington. Judge Wiley, who discharged the prisoners, did not investigate the guilt of the prisoners as charged in the indictment.

JAPAN.

On the afternoon of July 4th an attack was made by 30,000 Southerners on the Takugawas at Jeddo, who were only about 1,500 strong. The Southerners were repulsed. The attack was renewed the next day and the Takugawas were entirely routed. Half of the city of Jeddo, including two large temples, one of them the residence of Min, was burned down. At Tichnio, about eighteen miles south of Osaca, a terrible battle was fought between the forces at Aidzu and Satsuma, in which the latter was defeated with great loss. Satsuma and Chusu were deserted by several other Daimios, and subsequently Chaisu himself declared his intention of withdrawing from the contest, and ordered his generals to return home and remain neutral. Satsuma's party had issued a proclamation in the name of the Mikado, condemning all native Christians to death. Several executions had taken place at Nagasaki and Sendai, within sixteen miles of Jeddo. It is stated that the northern princes have made a proposition to refer all differences for settlement to the arbitration of England, France and the United States, and in case the latter powers accept the responsibility they (the princes) will bind themselves for the faithful execution of the arbitrament, both on their part and the part of the Mikado. Port Nettaka, on the west coast, has been partially opened. The North German and Italian ministers only are giving clearances there. The other ministers have not yet sanctioned foreign trade there, on the ground that it is not safe and that there is a liability of the same trouble experienced at Osaca. A report came from Nagasaki that one hundred and fifty Christian Japan natives had been taken out from Nagasaki in a steamer and drowned, notwithstanding the remonstrance of the consuls at that port.

TURKISH TEMPERANCE.—To the abstinence of this people from wine, the peculiar law of Mohammed, is perhaps to be attributed very much of their moral as well as physical health. The stream of intemperance, which would undermine the pure principles of conduct above adverted to, is thus totally arrested. The physical result of this law is strikingly manifest in the absence of cripples and the general exemption of the Turks from illness; toothache being almost the only ill to which they are often subject.—Sir Charles Fellowes' Travels.

IMPEACHED.

THE VILLAINIES AND ENORMITIES OF THE FORTIETH CONGRESS.

From an elaborate article from the National Intelligencer, detailing the wrongs and villainies of the Fortieth Congress, we extract the following:

They passed statutes for the purpose of reducing one third of the people to barbarism; to compel them to disown their inalienable rights; to be grateful for wrong; to prefer for their own government the sovereignty of their late slaves; to disclaim sympathy with Northern white men, who all abhor negro dominantion; to forego all personal dignity; to deny, contrary to their own consciousness, the superiority of the white race, and to welcome with thanks their own individual abasement; for the purpose of compelling this impossible change of human nature, unworthy to be attempted by beings of the upright posture, they ordained a dissolution of society in the Southern States, exposed the legislature, the bench, the jury box, the school room, the church, the home, the fireside, even the bed-chamber, to the plenary caprice, cupidity, lust, malice and murder of armed men; civilly responsible, and accountable for these acts only to others like themselves, higher in authority, but segregated from civil life.

They deprived qualified electors of those States of the right to vote.

They gave the right to vote to a class incapable of political volition.

They disabled all citizens for office who, by intelligence or character, were fitted for public trusts.

Patriotism, which, if it does not begin at home, is ever spurious, they ordained a crime and a badge of outlawry.

They punished with ex post facto laws treason, already punished and condemned by arms, surrender and parole of honor.

They punished it cruelly and unusually by forfeiting the right of self government, never granted by any authority, but inherent in man.

They passed bills of attainder, attaining millions of citizens, or bills of pains and penalties, kindred oppressions in this country of established justice.

They affected to discredit the notorious and indisputable truth that the late rebels were desirous to renew their allegiance to the Union.

They affected to believe that white men in the South were more unfriendly than those of the North to negroes, and that they were contemplating the revival of slavery again.

They affected to believe that all law, order, peace or security of person or property were unknown in the Southern communities, and that society was so utterly decomposed that no system but that of the camp and the barracks were practicable there, for men, women or children, white or black, for private safety or for public order.

They acted upon all these sheer affectations when, as we charge, they knew there was no truth at all in them; when they knew that the only disturbing influence not rapidly dissipating was their own unwarrantable interference.

They employed every instrumentality of wrong with the distinct object of making actual the pretended evils in those then orderly communities. The patience which disappointed these hellish incitements they treated as meanness, until a proud and honorable people, appalled by the monstrous cruelty of their oppressors, became so contemptible in their eyes that they were not ashamed even of the following:

They instituted an organization for the purpose of general slander, defamation and perjury against the Southern white people—their fellow-citizens, blood and kindred.

They sent vagabonds, without character, name or home, all over the South, accrediting them as gentlemen, and defraying their expenses, receiving, publishing and pretending to believe their inordinate and shameless fabrications, taking part in their vulgar resentments, and refusing credence to exposures and denials coming from the purest and most responsible sources, and insulting the authors of them.

They denominated what scruple or conscience bureau agents or military officers would show against falsehood so gratuitous and wholesale, by marking for aspersion, persecution and proscription any officer who hesitated in his co-operation with these hired wretches.

They made arrangements for perennial supplies of fresh slander, so that a falsehood that survived but a few days should serve the purpose of the imposture, which was a succession of those swift sensations that follow announcements, against the slow recollection which apprehends contradictions.

They have persisted in this iniquity until Southern citizens have despaired of a Northern hearing, and tend toward that baleful disregard of a good name which breeds indifference in the weak, contempt in the strong and disaffection in all.

This Congress, in the passage of the so-called reconstruction acts, deliberately enacted, in the form of statutes, against notorious truth, in the face of millions who knew it was untrue, the solemn and gigantic falsehood, Southern society was in a state of anarchy, demanding military government.

They have repeatedly expelled members of either House, not of their party, on the pretence that they had not been lawfully elected, well knowing that it was a false pretence, but defying public rebuke.

They have essayed a bill to arm their political party in the coming canvass, for the purpose of overawing the opposing party, thus controlling the elections by physical display.

They have passed a bill to becloud the title of the people to the inauguration of their sovereign choice of a citizen for President in the coming election; it being intended to further obscure and complicate the fearful doubts in the popular mind as to the right of the people of certain States to vote in that election—their candidate being a soldier by profession, the official head of the whole army, and a man notoriously obtuse in civil apprehension.

They have tolerated the membership of a person of common infamy, an exposed robber, a confessed liar, a reputed coward, a recorded murderer, and a known traitor before the war.

They have permitted him to hold a seat in the House of Representatives from a knowledge of the peculiar and extraordinary moral idiocy which affords him an insensibility to the distinction between right and wrong, believed never before to have been found in any reasonable being, and which qualified him for offices that the basest of their own number hesitate to undertake.

Such is the Fortieth Congress. We impeach it before the sovereign people, and every one of them, in his judgment, his conscience, and his sense of honor. It has betrayed them. It despises them. It intends to govern them at the pleasure of a revolutionary committee. It counts the cost. It knows its danger. It has gone too far to stop. It is driven forward by the desperate fatality of all political crime. It has not yet reached the worst. It foresees and tries to provide for it. In a word, we charge that the Fortieth Congress has spent their session in organizing a rebellion, in planning civil violence, in perfecting a plot for precipitating the country into universal tumult, distraction and war, to save themselves from impending retribution for their crimes.

Freemen! Dethrone this hideous usurpation!

THE HON. JEFFERSON DAVIS IN ENGLAND.

We copy from the London Standard, of the 8th instant, the following article on the arrival, in England, of the Hon. Jefferson Davis, ex-President of the Southern Confederacy. It pays a deservedly high compliment to Mr. Davis, and the gallant soldiers who fought so nobly to sustain a cause which was dear to them. It will well repay perusal:

"The arrival in England of the late President of the Confederate States has naturally excited much interest and attention. It could not be otherwise, considering the deep and anxious feeling with which men of all parties and of opposite sympathies watched for four years the progress of the American struggle. To the enthusiasts of that political sect which makes a species of religion of its devotion to the negro and its abhorrence of slavery, Mr. Davis was, during those four years, the representative incarnation of political and social evil—the leader of the last effort of the falling cause of tyranny in its conflict with the spirit of progress and humanity. To an opposite class of minds he was the representative of the cause of law and order against the anarchical and democratic tendencies of the age; the chosen champion of a people who, from the peculiar time and circumstances of their struggle, appeared to be maintaining the critical and decisive contest of the old order against the new, of aristocracy against democracy, of liberty against the despotism of majorities, of conservatism against political chaos and social revolution. In the opinion of not a few of those who dissent most strongly from the prevalent worship of 'the nineteenth century,' the interest of the South was the common interest of all monarchical and aristocratic societies—of all orders whose position rests upon settled law and ancient tradition, as against the leveling temper of American democracy.

'This by a narrow bounds was circumscribed,
It was the cause of chivalry at large.'

"And there can be no doubt that the fall of the South gave an impulse and encouragement to the progress of the democratic spirit throughout Christendom greater than any it has received since the French revolution. To a much larger class than either of these two extreme parties Mr. Davis is simply the chief and representative of a lost cause, in which millions of Englishmen felt a strong and earnest sympathy, which they believed to be the cause of constitutional right and substantial justice, as well as national independence and public liberty, and whose fall they still regret. He is the defeated leader of a gallant but unfortunate people, whose heroic struggle against overwhelming odds elicited the reluctant admiration of their enemies, and excited the warmest interest among multitudes of men indifferent to or ignorant of the original merits of the quarrel. He is the representative of the nation which, for four years, asserted its independence against armies fourfold greater than its own; which, with half a dozen cruisers, almost swept from the seas the commerce of a power whose naval force was second only to our own; which, without money, without foreign trade, blockaded by sea and land, held its own during that long period against a foe possessed of boundless resources, and lavishing them without stint; which fought to the last in a spirit of chivalrous courage and generosity, never provoked by its sufferings into savagery, or exasperated by the outrages into cruel retaliation; and which, after its surrender, commanded as much reverence by its patient fortitude and loyal acceptance of the inevitable, as during the struggle it had excited admiration by its gallantry and endurance. Mr. Davis comes to us as the representative of Virginia and her sisters in struggle and suffering; as the commander-in-chief of those armies which, under Lee and Jackson, Johnson and Beauregard, achieved so long a series of extraordinary though finally fruitless victories; as the chosen chief and finally the long-suffering martyr of the cause for which Lee and Johnson fought, for which Stuart, Stonewall Jackson, Morgan, Cleburne and Ashby fell. It is in this capacity that he chiefly calls forth the sympathies of Englishmen; it is not as an enemy of the North, not as the representative of secession, least of all as the champion of slavery that he is welcome to us. It is the chief of the Southern armies, the head of the Southern people, the statesman whose wisdom, skill and tenacious courage we learnt during that arduous struggle to appreciate and admire—the suffering prisoner of Fortress Monroe, the exile patriot, who was so heartily cheered on the quay at Liverpool, and will be cheered with equal heartiness wherever he appears before a crowd of Englishmen.

"It would be a most unfortunate as well as a most unjust interpretation of the reception given to Mr. Davis if it were understood or represented in the North as a demonstration of hostility to the present government or Constitution of the United States, or of ill-will to the conquerors in the war. The Americans should remember, in the first place, that we have nothing to do with their political feuds, now that the sword is no longer invoked to decide as between nation and nation. We have no concern with the existing relations between North and South, or with the antagonism between Democrats and Republicans; nor can we, in our treatment of a distinguished American citizen, be expected to take cognizance of the exclusion of his State, or of the order to which he belongs, from federal privileges or civic rights. To us the South is now a part of the Union; in Mr. Jefferson Davis we welcome a citizen of the United States. It would be most ungracious on our part to assume to take notice of the fact that this citizen is proscribed and disfranchised, or that the people with whom, in his person, we sympathized are not really represented in Congress or admitted to the Union. There can, therefore, be no affront to the United States, as a whole, in courtesies shown to the hero and martyr of the South. And our sympathies with the Confederates in the past, as with the weaker and defensive side, being notorious, it would be merely contemptible on our part, and certainly would be no compliment to the good sense of the American people, if for fear of offending them we were now to pretend to have changed our views and repented our feelings.

"We accept, as the South has done, the result of the war, without pretending any more than she pretends, to be ashamed of a cause which was gallantly sustained, because it was finally unfortunate. In receiving with a cordial welcome the chief representative of that cause, we are doing honor to the dead rather than to the living—are expressing our sympathy with the heroism and the misfortunes of the past, not with the resentments of the present or the possible aspirations of the future. And if it be the case that Mr. Davis is more warmly welcomed than a Northern statesman of equal eminence would be—if we should greet General Lee more heartily than his victor—Americans are sufficiently akin to us to understand how much more strongly greatness in misfortune appeals to our affections than greatness in triumph; to remember, moreover, that the conditions of the conflict gave to no Northern chief a chance of such distinction and honor as the Southern leaders have earned by their heroic struggle against adverse fortune—by skill displayed in creating resources out of nothing; by victories gained against unparalleled odds; by the courage that never quailed before the darkest prospects, and an endurance that never broke down under the heaviest load of labor, anxiety and calamity. These are the achievements and the qualities that we honor in Jefferson Davis; nor, in honoring him and them, can we be said to do wrong or discourtesy to those who were once his enemies, and are now his fellow-countrymen."

THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESSION.

The din and tumult of marching hosts, the glare of myriad lights, the music, the banners, the shouts of applauding thousands, which marked the procession last Saturday night, have vanished like the visions of a pleasure dream.

To-day all is peace and quiet, and no trace of excitement visible upon the countenances of those who helped to swell the grand army of the Democracy, or who cheered it to the echo as it passed.

It was a right royal demonstration throughout. It proved that there is life in the old land yet, and that our people deserved to be free; it was a certain index of the real sentiment of our true citizens, and should convince every one of the pre-eminent ascendency of the Democracy, in this locality at least.

A marked feature of the procession was the perfect order maintained.

Every man marched with a firm, determined tread, as if convinced of the justice of the cause for which he was contending, and through the length of the entire line one sentiment seemed to prevail—the desire for peace and order. The length of the procession, before the head reached Canal street—where members dropped out from sheer fatigue—was about fifty-three squares, a distance of nearly four miles, counting fifteen squares to the mile.

Nearly four miles of Democrats, the majority of whom were voters, and at least one hundred thousand Democratic spectators, thus early in the campaign, will do pretty well for New Orleans.—New Orleans Picayune.

LANGUAGE OF INSECTS. — A most singular discovery, the credit of which appertains, we believe, to Mr. Jessie, is that of the antennal language of insects. Bees and other insects are provided, as everybody knows, with feelers or antennae. These are, in fact, most delicate organs of touch, warning of dangers and serving the animals to hold a sort of conversation with each other, and to communicate their desires and wants. A strong hive of bees will contain thirty-six thousand workers. Each of these, in order to be assured of the presence of their queen, touches her every day with its antennae. Should the queen die or be removed the whole company disperse themselves, and are seen in the hive no more, perishing every one, and quitting all stores of now useless honey which they had labored so industriously to collect for the use of themselves and of the larvae. On the contrary, should the queen be put in a wire cage at the bottom of the hive, so that her subjects can touch and feed her, they are contented and the business of the hive proceeds as usual. Mr. Jessie has also shown that this antennal power of communication is not confined to bees. Wasps and ants, and probably other insects, exercise it. If a caterpillar is placed near an ant's nest, a most curious scene will arise. A solitary ant will perhaps discover it, and eagerly attempt to draw it away. Not being able to accomplish this, it will go to another ant, and, by means of the antennal language, bring it to the caterpillar. Still these two are unable to perform the task of moving it. They will separate and bring reinforcements of the company by the same means, till a sufficient number are collected to enable them to drag the caterpillar to their nest.—Once a Week.

IMPORTANT MILITARY ORDER.

The following highly important order bears its own explanation:

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA,
New Orleans, La., Sept. 1, 1868.

Circular No. 2.

In order that the official relations between the commanders of military posts and detachments, and the sheriffs of the various parishes and counties of the States comprising this department, may be fully understood by all concerned, the following instructions are communicated for the government of such commanders:

The sheriff, being a State officer, usually appointed for a particular county or parish, is restricted in the execution of his duties to the territorial limits of such county or parish. His right to require the assistance of the posse comitatus is supreme within such limits. He is, therefore, authorized, in cases of unlawful resistance to his authority clearly shown to exist, to require the assistance of any troops serving within his district. In such cases the military commander will be required to render the assistance called for; provided, that, in the exercise of a sound discretion, he is satisfied that the necessity for such service exists. But should he not be thoroughly satisfied of this, he will decline to act until he can make a report to, and receive special instructions from, these headquarters, in each case.

The official relations of military commanders and United States marshals are to be defined as follows: The marshal, being a United States officer, is acting under the same authority as that which governs the military commander himself; and his district being ordinarily restricted to the limits of the State, his authority to call for the assistance of troops in cases arising out of a resistance to the laws of the United States, is co-extensive with the limits of such State. He will, therefore, have a right to call upon any military commander, within his district, for such assistance as the nature of the case may require; but the military commander will, as before indicated, exercise a sound discretion in deciding upon the necessity for the use of his troops.

In no case is it deemed proper to consider a mere riotous demonstration as a case calling for the interposition of the military forces, which should not be displayed until it shall be absolutely necessary for them to act.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

THOS. H. NEILL,

Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

A SPELLING match at the French court resulted as follows: No one without faults; Prince Metternich six faults; Baron Corvisart eight; the Emperor nine; the Prince Imperial eleven; and (to the great merriment of the rest) the imperial librarian fourteen. The tests employed, it is said, were severe; and it is neither stated nor implied that there was any difference between the words given to the Prince and those given to the Emperor.

ON one of the hottest days ever known in England, the speaker of the House of Commons sat in his chair for thirteen hours—four before dinner and nine after. Such tedious and protracted labors, amid the tropical heat which has lately prevailed, might cause the strictest economist to hesitate before objecting to the usual pension of £4,000 a year which is granted to a retiring speaker. Mr. Denison has filled the chair since 1857, and is sixty-eight years of age.

COMING HOME.

O brothers and sisters, growing old,
Do you all remember yet
That house in the shade of the rustling trees,
Where once our household met?

Do you know how we used to come from school,
Through the summer's pleasant heat,
With the yellow fennel's golden dust
On our tired little feet?

And how, sometimes, in an idle mood,
We loitered by the way,
And stopped in the woods to gather flowers,
And in the fields to play?

Till, warned by the deepening shadow's fall,
That told of the coming night,
We climbed to the top of the last long hill,
And saw our home in sight?

And, brothers and sisters, older now
Than she whose life is o'er,
Do you think of the mother's loving face
That looked from the open door?

Alas for the changing things of time!
That home in the dust is low,
And the living smile was hid from us,
In the darkness long ago!

And we have come to life's last hill,
From which our weary eyes
Can almost look on that home that shines
Eternal in the skies.

So, brothers and sisters, as we go,
Still let us move as one,
Always together keeping step,
Till the march of life is done.

For that mother who waited for us here,
Wearing a smile so sweet,
Now waits on the hills of Paradise
For her children's coming feet.

LETTERS FROM CALIFORNIA.

NUMBER ONE.

Mr. Editor: To my brethren of the Montgomery Conference it will be interesting to know why I have made this sudden and distant transfer. I had never thought of removing to California until I read the letter from Bishop Kavanaugh, published in the Nashville Christian Advocate last January, upon reading which a strong desire to go seized upon me, and I began to consider the question, and consult my friends and advisers. I wrote to Bishop Kavanaugh and Dr. Fitzgerald, from both of whom I received letters very favorable to my transfer. My relations and friends, with singular unanimity, approved, and the ways and means, by what I regard as special providences, were afforded. I kept the matter an entire secret from my much-loved charge at Auburn, not wishing to disturb them with it until it was certain. When, at last, my way was clear, I called together my board of stewards and announced my intention. Two spontaneous and unanimous expressions burst from them—the first of surprise and regret, the second of approval and desire to go with me. It was sad, indeed, to know that there were a hundred in Auburn eager to go, yet I alone was prepared and could go. They could not because they had property; I could because I had none. Formerly it was the opposite of this.

Pardon what I am now about to write. It may seem to be vanity. But it is only the grateful acknowledgment of a Christian minister's heart. My farewell days at Auburn are the brightest of all my ministry. I had loved the church there as I had never loved one before. They had been to me a faithful, indulgent, forgiving people. My last Sabbath there was at the time of our third quarterly meeting, and our excellent presiding elder, Brother Andrews, was therefore with us. The sacramental occasion, when I communed for the last time with the people I had loved so well, but served so poorly, was such as only the circumstances as there surrounded us could make it. At night I preached my farewell sermon to a crowded congregation, and next morning at 10 o'clock the farewells had all been spoken, and the swift steam car was bearing me away. Of the many valuable presents and little tokens of remembrance received it is not proper to speak. Suffice it to say, I am writing with a fine gold pen and holder which came to me, with a $10 bill wrapped around it.

Having visited friends in and about Glenville, June 13th found us in Columbus, Georgia, started on the long trip. No incident worthy of note occurred until we were on the train between Augusta and Wilmington. There we witnessed our first proof that the Yankee people really meant to carry out practically their doctrine of social equality for the black race. A white man, whose speech and physiognomy plainly evidenced his "down East" origin, with his wife, little boy, and a young, handsome mulatto woman, sat in front of us. Had their complexions and hair been alike, I would never have supposed but that the single woman was a younger sister of the married one. Their perfect and practical familiarity utterly disgusted us. But before we reached San Francisco we saw so much of it as scarcely to notice it at all. In New York, and on both our ships, we saw men and women of all shades, from dark chestnut color to pure Caucasian, associating together, with prudence and familiarity on both sides. My impression, however, was that the dark complected enjoyed it rather more than the white, and we did not blame them. We saw a negro on the ship, and also at a respectable hotel, regularly sit at table with the whites, and was waited on by white men. And we did not blame him. If he can marry a very respectable white Yankee lady I will not blame him, but only think his judgment bad. But enough of this. I, for one, am thoroughly convinced that the Northern people do and will carry out practically their darling doctrine.

We went by the Richmond and Washington route. The steamboat ride up the Potomac is a most delightful respite from the dust and weariness of the railroads. As we pass in full view of Mount Vernon the large bell on the boat tolls, and the scene impresses us beyond description. Thoughts of the majestic character of Washington come welling up, and all my early patriotic sentiment is refreshed. I become a boy again, and feel anew the emotions that gave birth to speeches in my school and college days. The scene is beautiful, and well calculated to awaken the last spark of patriotism that may still slumber in an American bosom. But to me, now exiling myself from my native South, full of memories of the past seven years, and painfully reminded on every side of present ruin, passing peaceful Vernon, and approaching the great centre of distraction, revolution and tyranny, the scene is one I shall never forget. Its first impression was the most delightful, and its second the most painful I ever received. I do not wish to see Mount Vernon any more until the spirit of Washington again presides in the capital.

We passed, on the street cars, close by the capitol. The pictures do not half do it justice. It is much handsomer and grander than represented, and, of all on earth, probably the costliest building anywhere used as a prison and drinking saloon.

But I am extending my letter too much. In New York we stopped at Earle's hotel, and were well pleased. We took passage and sailed at noon on the 20th day of June, on the steamship Guiding Star, belonging to the opposition line. By selecting our time, when the two competing lines were near together, we got our passage at the very lowest rates. First cabin, letter A, cost me only $300, currency, for myself and wife, with four children, from six years old down to an infant. First cabin, letter B, is the same as A, except that the location of the state room is not so good, and has five berths instead of three. This would have cost us only $220. Second cabin will not do well for families, if they can possibly do better, but is good enough for single persons.

We had a pleasant, quiet voyage. I did not see a single wave, from New York to San Francisco, which was half as large as I expected. Crossing the Isthmus is a great relief from confinement, monotony, sea-sickness and sameness of diet. To see the towns, the mountains and streams, enjoy tropical fruits, and ride forty miles on a railroad, fills out a gala day in our long voyage. We found also the new ship Nebraska, on the Pacific side, much nicer and pleasanter than the other. We now partook of California bread, beef, butter and vegetables, and felt like we were approaching the end of our travel. The Pacific ocean is properly named. At some time each day it was as placid as glass. The mountain coast was in sight nearly all the time, and afforded much relief to the weary eyes and mind. At two o'clock, July 13th, having been twenty-three days and two hours on the voyage, we landed at San Francisco. It is due the ship to say that I was invited and preached twice on the trip, to large and attentive congregations.

CONFERENCE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. Editor: Please allow me to present, not a treatise on the merits of life insurance, but a plan by which everybody can be insured, and at the same time build up a large sinking fund for the use of the Conference.

During my connection with the itinerant policy of the Methodist Church South my heart has been made to ache, every year, with the sight of the wants of the destitute ones of our fallen brethren, and the Macedonian cry of the heathen. I have devoted much time and study to the subject, have acquainted myself with the leading features of almost every insurance company in the land, and from the whole have drawn up a plan, or by-laws, which will, I believe, meet the exigencies of the times. Many things have been thrown in my way, but nothing plausible has ever been said against the institution of life insurance, and all to whom I have shown my plan think that it is a capital one, and the only one which, in the present impoverished condition of the Southern church, is likely to work well. Indeed, I am indebted to several gentlemen—citizens of Georgia—of known financial ability, for several of the most important suggestions.

You will perceive that there are several advantages which this plan possesses over any other for the purposes for which it is designed, a few of which I will here enumerate.

1. It places life insurance in reach of the poorest, a privilege heretofore extended to that class which least needs it—the rich.

2. It leaves the funds of the company in the hands of the several members of the same till called for to pay off a policy.

3. It throws all of the interest accruing on the permanent fund into the treasury of the Conference in which it is established, and creates a fund sufficient for any purpose of the church.

4. It pays no large salaries to officers, the secretary and treasurer being the only paid officer.

5. It gives a double action to its funds, and while the party is encouraged to insure in it through every personal consideration, every claim which charity has upon him will require that he insure in this company.

6. If put into operation it cannot fail, because every person assured is encouraged, by his or her interest, to add new names to the list, and keep each class up to its maximum number.

But enough of this sort for the present. Herewith I forward the plan, hoping that you will give it a close investigation, and, "if found worthy," send it on its errand, for the false theory that life insurance is an act of distrust in Providence has exploded, and men have agreed that God is trusted in the use of means for our safety, and not by a passive submission to the casualties and contingencies of life. But here is the plan:

ARTICLE I.

Sec. 1. This association shall be known as the "Mutual Life and Aid Company of the ——— Conference of the M. E. C. S."

ARTICLE II.

Sec. 1. There shall be a president and two vice presidents elected annually, at the time and place of the regular meetings of the company, the same to be elected by the Board of Directors.

Sec. 2. The Board of Directors shall consist of one member from each pastoral charge in the Conference, and shall be elected by the Conference, and may be lay or clerical, at the discretion of the Conference. The directors shall be elected annually, at the seat of the Conference, at such time as the Conference may direct, and one-third of the members present shall constitute a quorum.

Sec. 3. There shall be a secretary and treasurer, who shall hold office at the pleasure of the Board of Directors, to be elected by them.

ARTICLE III.

Sec. 1. The annual meetings of the company shall be held as provided for in Article II, Section 2.

Sec. 2. The president may convene the board at such time and place as the circumstances may require.

Sec. 3. Each member shall be entitled to one vote, and may cast that by proxy.

ARTICLE IV.

Sec. 1. The president shall preside at all the meetings of the company and Board of Directors. In his absence one of the vice presidents shall preside, or the board may appoint a president pro tem.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the secretary and treasurer to keep a record of the proceedings of the company and Board of Directors; to receive all moneys from its members. He shall keep a record of the address of each member of the company, communicate all notices to the same, and attend to all correspondence provided for by these by-laws, under the direction of the president and board. He shall receive, invest and pay out the funds of the company by the order of the president, and shall give such bonds and receive such compensation for services rendered as the president and Board of Directors may direct.

Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the Board of Directors to see that these by-laws and regulations are duly complied with, to direct the investment of the permanent fund, and have a general supervision over the affairs of the company.

ARTICLE V.

Sec. 1. Any person, on producing a certificate from a regularly practicing physician, to the effect that he has carefully examined the said person, and finds the same to be in good health, sound, hale and capable of earning a livelihood in their usual profession, the same to be indorsed by one of the directors, and any minister, on the recommendation of one of the directors, shall, on the payment of ten dollars, be eligible to membership in this company.

Sec. 2. The president and secretary and treasurer shall, upon the receipt of ten dollars, in compliance with Section 1, Article V, issue to the party, thus complying a certificate of membership, which shall entitle the party holding the same to all the advantages of the said company, in accordance with Section 2, Article VI, of these by-laws.

ARTICLE VI.

Sec. 1. When any member of this company dies, the secretary and treasurer shall notify each surviving member of the same, whereupon each one of them shall, without delay, within ten days after such notice is given, pay to the company the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents.

Sec. 2. If, in any case, a member fails to comply with the provisions of Section 1, Article VI, he shall be notified, his name erased from the roll of members, and he shall forfeit all claims upon the company, as well as all moneys paid to the same. Nevertheless, upon the receipt of a satisfactory excuse for such failure, and the amount of money in arrears, the Board of Directors shall have power to reinstate such delinquent.

Sec. 3. A notice directed to the address of a member, as it appears on the books of the secretary and treasurer, shall be deemed a legal notice.

ARTICLE VII.

Sec. 1. Upon the death of any member of the company, the president shall draw his order upon the secretary and treasurer, within forty-five days after due notice of the same shall have been given, for the sum of one dollar for each member of the company, and the secretary and treasurer shall forthwith pay the sum so called for to the legal representative of the deceased member.

Sec. 2. Any sums accruing to parties shall be subject to the disposal of the party entitled to the same, by will or devise.

Sec. 3. If there be no will or legal representative, the funeral expenses of the deceased, by the recommendation of one of the directors, shall be paid in full, (not to exceed the sum to which the person is entitled,) and the balance on the policy shall pass into the permanent fund of the company.

Sec. 4. The secretary and treasurer shall take receipts for all moneys paid out.

ARTICLE VIII.

Sec. 1. Any member may withdraw from the company; but shall forfeit all moneys paid to and all claims upon the same.

ARTICLE IX.

Sec. 1. Any member, before leaving his place of residence, shall notify the secretary and treasurer, and shall appoint a duly authorized agent for the performance of his obligations to the company during his absence.

Sec. 2. Any member of this company may offer an amendment, in writing, at any regular meeting of the company, after a regular notice of twenty days in the regular organs of this Conference has been given to that effect, to change these by-laws, and upon the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present or represented, such amendment shall have all the force of law.

Sec. 3. Any member of this company may take any number of certificates, less than four, by paying as much for each subsequent as for the first certificate, and paying the contingent fee of one dollar and twenty-five cents on each certificate, on the death of a member, as in Section 1, Article VI.

The above plan is the whole of a plan, the substance of which I have forwarded to another paper, that it may come prominently before the people.

If any brother, anywhere, can contrive a better plan, I hope he will give it to the public at once. I want to see it.

The maximum should be fixed at five thousand dollars, and there might be any number of classes—one, two, three, etc.

In the bounds of the Montgomery Conference there are twenty-four thousand four hundred white members and ministers. Half of that number would insure, say at least ten thousand, and doubtless the same number of persons out of the church—in all twenty thousand. This gives us a permanent fund of two hundred thousand dollars. The annual interest on this, at eight per cent., is sixteen thousand dollars. Add to this, for widows and orphans, the amount saved by providing so much better for them than they are at present provided for, and you will have a Conference fund of at least twenty thousand dollars per annum. This will be clear of all expenses, as the twenty-five cents on each member would give five thousand dollars for expenses, which would be ample for the entire expenses of the company.

Men are starting up companies on this principle all over the country for gain, and not for charity. Why not run it, then, for charity? More when needed.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

SOME FACTS IN REFERENCE TO THE TIME FOR ITS NEXT MEETING.

Liberty, Miss., Aug. 19, 1868.

Mr. Editor: While as an individual I am opposed to unnecessary changes, I am anxious that our Annual Conference should be on the 30th of December, as indicated by Bishop Kavanaugh, instead of the 18th of November, and for the reasons found in the following facts:

1. It was the tacit understanding with Bishop Paine and the Conference, at our last session, that the next meeting should be late in December. Bishop Paine was not at the last convocation of the bishops, and hence, no doubt, the agreement was not carried out. It follows then, I think, that any member of the Conference can, without danger of "treating bishops with disrespect," suggest, ask, or even urge a change from the time published, and Bishop Kavanaugh certainly "has the right" to make such change.

2. And in argument: The commercial year closes in New Orleans on the 4th of March, and it is evident, to any one interested, that the time of our Annual Conference should approximate that period. Our Conference year should close not later than January or February, and I have no hesitancy in saying it would make a difference of thousands of dollars annually to the itinerant members of this Conference. This year of trial a difference of from one to two hundred dollars to each preacher, and, moreover, six or eight weeks longer time, this fall, will double the amounts to to be collected for the bishop's and Conference funds, and for missionary purposes. Up to this time but little has been done for any of these interests, and but little more can be done until funds from the present crop are realized, and but a small amount will be returned to planters by the 18th of November, for the first shipments, in almost all cases, will be sacred to the supply merchants. Assessments to pastors in this district were made at the lowest support figures, and in every instance in the hope that they would be paid out of the present crop. And the time set for the close of the Conference year will cut us down in our pay at least one-half on the best appointments, and in some instances three-fourths I know whereof I affirm, so far as this district is concerned, and suppose my statements true and applicable to the Conference generally, and I hold that there is nothing "puerile" in the foregoing facts and reasons. From seven to ten thousand dollars will be a "right heavy" sum for the members of this Conference to lose in efforts to abide the eight articles, signed by five brethren, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate recently.

3. The change can be made without causing the least "confusion," and can surely result in the "throwing out" of none of our "best and most influential men," and especially none who have their farms and schools or colleges, and hence hold legal claims which may be available after, as before, the closing of the Conference year. I honor such brethren for their ability and piety, and would draw no invidious distinctions, but I urge the proposed postponement for the sake of those who are dependent upon their assessed salaries for the support of themselves, their wives and children, and that we may do something this fall for the benevolent institutions of the church; and I do hereby, on behalf of my brethren and "our stewards," who desire to pay the assessments they have made, and which they are morally bound to see paid, if possible, solemnly ask Bishop Kavanaugh to fix the "time" for December 30, and that all cordially concur therein.

Very respectfully,

Jas. A. Godfrey,
Natchez District.

SCARCELY FIFTEEN.

Scarcely fifteen!
And her dear form lies hid
Under the weight
Of the coffin lid.

Scarcely fifteen!
And her grave clothes to wear;
Crossed are the white hands,
Smoothed the dark hair;
Cold is the forehead,
And wondrously fair.

Scarcely fifteen!
How youthful to die!
Hope in her bosom
Was upgushing high;
The bud gave promise
Of a beautiful flower,
But we saw it wither
And fade in an hour.

Scarcely fifteen!
Yet passed from the strife,
The turmoil, the endless
Commotion of life.

Scarcely fifteen!
Yet in bliss untold,
In the beautiful city
Whose streets are gold;
Through whose pearly gates
Confusion and sin,
And sorrow and pain,
May ne'er enter in.

Scarcely fifteen!
Yet entered the joy
Of the glorified saints
In Jesus' employ,
Singing the song
The redeemed only sing,
Casting her crown
At the feet of her King,
Washed in his blood
And safe in his rest.
Scarcely fifteen,
And yet so blest!

Many a child
Long years must wait
Ere the Father opens
The city gate;
Most wait till the form
Is bent and old
Ere they walk, with the angels,
The streets of gold;
Most wait till on
So weary of sin,
Of sorrow and pain,
Ere they enter in.
But she hath gone home
In her youthful prime;
One moment was spent
On the borders of time,
And now she is over
In that blessed clime:

Would we have her come back
To this world of woe—
Come back from the home
Where the glorified go?
She, past the dark river,
Safe on the bright shore,
Come back from the land
Where they die nevermore?

We praise, oh! we praise thee,
Our glorified Lord,
For the promise we find
In thy comforting word!
That all who are clothed
In thy mantle of love
Shall meet her one day
In thy presence above:
And then, oh! how clearly,
By each shall be seen,
Why then, Lord, didst take her
When scarcely fifteen!

A SPARTANIC MOVE.

Mr. Editor: At the late annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the East Alabama Male College a new plan of boarding students was resolved upon. Hear it, as set forth in the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas, In the overthrow of the fortunes of the Southern people, there are many young men who desire a collegiate education, who are unable to meet the usual expenses necessary to obtain its inestimable advantages; therefore,

"Resolved, That to put education in the reach of the largest possible number, we invite young men of limited means to enter the Auburn College, and promise to provide them homes at small cost, and to furnish such facilities for cheap boarding that those who are willing to endure hardships as good soldiers, and to live, while struggling for possession of knowledge, upon soldiers' rations, in the style familiar to thousands of our brave youths, may subsist at a cost of about six dollars a month.

"Resolved, further, That the faculty be instructed to receive for the tuition of such worthy young men of small means half of the usual rates of tuition in cash, and take their notes for the remainder, payable when they shall have earned it after graduation."

There is the genuine ring of Spartan wisdom in this movement. The conception is worthy of a Lycurgus. If we owned a fortune, we had far rather contribute liberally thereof to the endowment of this college, and enter our son under its new style of college life, than to enter him under the ordinary style. For, besides its admirable adaptation to the times in the matter of economy, this plan involves a noble self-discipline, and will lead to a sterling self-reliance, of incalculable value in mature life. Under this plan young men will form habits of economy and temperance and regularity such as are unknown to the ordinary college life. They will likewise learn to "endure hardness," to eschew effeminateness, and to "keep the body under." We venture the prediction that of the young men who enter East Alabama College under this new plan, a far larger proportion will attain success and eminence in after-life than has ever obtained under the old plan. Would that every college and university in the South would adopt a similar plan. Our own Centenary would flourish under it—her classic halls would soon ring with heavier, firmer footsteps than those of a nursery, and her adjoining groves would be scenes of intellectual musings, and not of boyish sports. Almost any station or circuit in either of the patronizing conferences could then afford to send thither some worthy youth to be educated for the ministry; and so Centenary would regularly fill up our constantly thinning ranks with efficient, ready-made itinerants.—Digest the suggestion, ye who bear rule in these "high places."

THE "LOST DAUPHIN" AGAIN.

HAVE WE A BOURBON AMONG US?—WHAT REV. DR. VINTON SAYS.

The September number of Putnam's Magazine revives the old question of the "Lost Prince." Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down. It is to Putnam's Magazine what the "Wickedest Man" is to Packard's. The Rev. Dr. Vinton, of Trinity Church, furnishes this article on the identity of the Rev. Eleazer Williams. It contains some startling evidence of a very interesting character, hitherto withheld from the public under a pledge given by Dr. Vinton in 1853.

The learned doctor professes himself to be entirely convinced by this evidence that Eleazer Williams and Louis XVII. were the same person. The proofs are strong enough, at any rate, to give an entirely new interest to this famous problem.

Dr. Vinton calls his article: "Louis XVII. and Eleazer Williams: Were They Really the Same Person?" He prepared it at the request of the Long Island Historical Society, and he gives the following interesting facts: He says that in the month of August, 1844, he was at the house of Mrs. Com O. H. Perry, in company with Rev. Eleazer Williams. Nothing had been said of the conjecture of the identity of Williams with the Dauphin, neither did Dr. Vinton, at that time, entertain the slightest idea of any relationship between them. Among the books on the center-table in the parlor were some volumes of French Revolutionary History, containing pictures of notable persons, etc. Dr. Vinton and Mr. Williams were looking at these books to "kill time." We read:

"Thus we were engaged for a half hour or so. I was reading some author, while Williams was turning over the leaves of the volumes of the French Revolutionary Annals. All at once I was startled by a sudden movement, and on looking up I saw Williams sitting upright and stiff in his chair, his eyes fixed and wide open, his hands clenched on the table, his whole frame shaken and trembling, as if a paralysis had seized him. I thought it had. I exclaimed, 'What is the matter?' and I rose quickly to rouse him, for no answer came. It was a minute or more before he could speak. But with great effort he raised his head, and, pointing to one of the wood-cut portraits, at the bottom of the page, said, in a hollow voice and with great difficulty of utterance:

"'That image has haunted me, day and night, as long as I can remember. 'Tis the horrid vision of my dreams. What is it? Who is it?'

"I looked. There was no name on the page. On turning the leaf I read that this number was the 'Portrait of Simon,' to whose care the Dauphin of France, son of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, was committed in the prison of the temple.

"I shut the book; for while it was open Williams gazed at the picture as if fascinated, while overwhelmed with unutterable horror.

"Some time elapsed before he recovered his equanimity. And then, for the first time, I talked with him on the rumor of his birth and parentage. He told me that the Prince de Joinville had visited him at Green Bay, (as Mr. Hanson afterward related,) and also that the surgeon (to whom, at his request, he had shown certain scars of strofula upon the leg) said to him:

"'Mon Dieu! you have rights which you know not of,' and then suddenly checked himself."

Dr. Vinton came to the following conclusion in relation to this matter:

"But the conclusion to which my thoughts have arrived, after due consideration, is simply this, that it was the Soul, through Memory, bearing witness to Itself, affirming the identity of Williams and the Dauphin.

The next interesting statement which Dr. Vinton makes is as follows: "On the first Sunday in February, 1853, Rev. Mr. Williams assisted Dr. Vinton in the Holy Communion in Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights. As there was some desire to see Mr. Williams, Dr. Vinton 'scrupulously withheld, even from every member of his family, any hint of the expectation of his coming.' Dr. Vinton says:

"On the following Monday morning an esteemed parishioner, a German gentleman of high standing, called on me in my study to ask 'who he was that officiated with me on yesterday morning.'

"I replied that he was the Rev. Eleazer Williams.

"He then said that there happened to be in his view as his guest, his royal highness Prince Paul William, Duke of Wurtemberg, cousin to the present King of Wurtemberg and to the Czar Nicholas, traveling in this country under the title of General Count Heidenheim; who, when Mr. Williams walked across the chancel, asked my parishioner, Mr. R——, 'Who is that? Who is that man? It is so! If there is anything in family likeness, he is a Bourbon!'

"Mr. R—— replied that he did not know who it was. But the duke could not be quiet, but said, 'It is so! He is a Bourbon! He is a Bourbon, no doubt. He is the image of Charles X.'

"Mr. R—— went on to relate the excitement of the duke during the whole of the divine service; and how, at dinner that day, he resumed the theme, with many particulars in the story of the Dauphin.

"Among these I recollect a few striking points, viz: That Charles X. was very like Louis XVI; that Prince Talleyrand knew all about the abduction of the Dauphin, which was connived at by the authorities of France; and when his Memoirs should be published (if there were no suppression of facts) the world would know of it too; that the Jesuits knew all about it; and if Williams had been a Roman Catholic (supposing him to be the Dauphin) he would have been in France long ago; that Robespierre and Count de Provence (afterward Louis XVIII.) were mutually interested in procuring the abduction of the Dauphin (inasmuch as he would not die a natural death under extreme cruelty;) Robespierre, because he wished that the Revolution should maintain the reputation of a political revolution, and not be damaged by the imputation of being a war against children; the Count de Provence, because the Dauphin, as Louis XVII. would stand in the way of his succession to the crown; that Chateaubriand would not take the oath of allegiance to Louis XVIII., on the ground that Louis XVII. was yet alive and in America; and that Chateaubriand's journeys to America had for its object, among others, to discover the lost Dauphin; that Count D'Artois — afterward Charles X.—would not swear allegiance to his brother until very late, (when his own succession was in prospect,) because of his scruples as a Legitimist, and his allegiance to his nephew.

"These circumstances, and others quite as remarkable, were the disclosures of my friend, Mr. R——, as having been the staple of the conversation of the duke on that Sunday afternoon, after he had a vision of Eleazer Williams."

Dr. Vinton backs up these statements with documentary evidence, which the editor of Putnam's Magazine takes the pains to say he has "carefully verified with the original," etc. This is the evidence which has been withheld from the public until the present time, at the earnest request of his royal highness Prince Paul William, Duke of Wurtemberg, etc. Dr. Vinton says:

"I have preserved this documentary evidence for fifteen years, as a 'curiosity of history.' But the time is come to publish it. In that short space of time Mr. Williams has died, the Duke of Wurtemberg has died, the kingdom of Wurtemberg is abolished, and public faith in legitimate kings is dead and buried."

The next point which Dr. Vinton makes in this interesting story is as follows:

"In the summer of 1853 Mr. Hanson called on me in Brooklyn, where I was then settled, to acquaint me with what promised to be a singular confirmation of his theory, as published in the March and April numbers of the Magazine through the testimony, he said, of Skenondough, a very old Indian chief of the Oneida tribe, who had known Williams when he was a boy of ten or twelve years of age, having been present when two Frenchmen gave him into the custody of the elder Williams, in 1795, at Ticonderoga; and who would testify that Eleazer Williams was of French birth, for the reason that he had talked with him in the French language at that time. Moreover, the old Indian affirmed that 'Williams was recorded in the census of the Six Nations as a Frenchman adopted by the St. Regis tribe, and transferred to the Oneidas,' with many other particulars of great interest.

A long account of Dr. Vinton's interview with Skenondough is given with the documentary evidence, which fully supports all the above statements. The old Indian was found to be entirely truthful.

The fourth point in this remarkable transaction is as follows: "Mr. Williams was in this city, revising his Book of Common Prayer, translated by him into the Mohawk and Iroquois languages." Dr. Vinton says:

"It was during this period when Mr. Hanson called on me, to say that he had received a letter from Mrs. Com. Read, of New Orleans, acquainting him with a fact which he deemed decisive on the question of the identity of Eleazer Williams and the Dauphin Louis Charles. The letter stated that further information had been derived from the old person, (Mrs. Margaret Deboit, whose affidavit, on another point, is published in The Lost Prince, p. 430, Append. 575,) who was some time in the household of Count de Provence and the Duchess d'Angouleme. This information, he said, accorded with a letter from Madame Rambaud to the Duchesse d'Angouleme, lately brought to his notice. The substance of this fresh evidence was this: that when Naundorf's claim to the Dauphin was rejected by the Duchesse d'Angouleme, she had said that 'when her brother should be discovered, if he was yet alive, there would be found on the back of his shoulder, the mark of the lancet in the shape of a crescent, which was made there by the surgeon, at the time of the inoculation of the Dauphin for the purpose of identification.' And the letter begged Mr. Hanson to see if such a mark was on the shoulder of Eleazer Williams."

Dr. Vinton, in company with Mr. Hanson, examined Mr. Williams' back. It took place in a church. We read:

"Accordingly, Williams threw off his coat and vest, and allowed me to scrutinize the mysterious mark. The light of the robing-room was very dim. I could see the deep pit of the inoculation on the arm. I could not discern on the back of the shoulder anything peculiar. Nor could Mr. Hanson. Williams preserved the same calm composure while we were discussing the matter.

"'Will you step into the church a moment? there is no one there,' I suggested.

"'If you wish it,' said Mr. Williams.

"I opened the door, and he followed me outside; when, turning his shoulder to the light, there was the cicatrix, in the shape of a crescent, three-fourths of an inch across, nearly obliterated, yet palpable and unmistakable. Hanson saw it again, and tears silently stole down his cheeks. It was proof positive to him, now that he had found the Lost Prince. He grasped my hand. We said nothing, except my ejaculations, 'The mark is there! I see it with my own eyes! What does it mean? He must, indeed, be the Dauphin!'

"'Were Louis XVII. and Eleazer Williams the same person?'"

An Enterprising School Boy in Georgia.—There is a seventeen-year old boy living in a county below us who has twenty-one acres planted in cotton. He hired one man early in the spring, prepared the land and bought about one hundred dollars' worth of guano and put upon it. After getting it planted he started to school, which he has regularly attended during the summer, with the exception of about two weeks, which his crop required. He works an hour or two every morning, in the afternoon and every Saturday. His cotton is looking very fine, and he expects to get at least fifteen bales off the twenty-one acres. Estimating each bale at five hundred pounds, and that he will get twenty-five cents per pound, the gross receipt will be one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars, dollars. His entire expense, including the guano, will not be over five hundred dollars—which will leave one thousand three hundred and seventy-five dollars as the net earnings of this school boy. Give him the benefit of every doubt, and he will surely make one thousand dollars clear. We commend this to young men moaning over their fate, complaining that they can get nothing to do, and can make no money.—Macon (Ga.) Journal, Aug. 7.

CONCENTRATED PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

Few phenomena are more remarkable, yet few have been less remarked, than the degree in which material civilization—the progress of mankind in all those contrivances which oil the wheels and promote the comfort of daily life—has been concentrated into the last half century. It is not too much to say that in these respects more has been done, richer and more prolific discoveries have been made, grander achievements have been realized, in the course of the fifty years of our own lifetime than in all the previous lifetime of the race, since states, nations, polities, such as history makes us acquainted with, have had their being. In some points, no doubt, the opposite of this is true. In speculative philosophy, in poetry, in the arts of sculpture and painting, in the perfection and niceties of language, we can scarcely be said to have made any advance for upwards of two thousand years. Probably no instrument of thought and expression has been, or ever will be, more perfect than Greek or Sanscrit; no poet will surpass Homer or Sophocles; no thinker dive deeper than Plato or Pythagoras; no sculptor produce more glorious marble conceptions than Phidias or Praxiteles. It may well be that David and Confucius and Pericles were clothed as richly and comfortably as George III. or Louis XVIII., and far more becomingly. There is every reason to believe that the dwellings of the rich and great among the Romans, Greeks and Babylonians were as luxurious and well appointed as our own, as well as incomparably more gorgeous and enduring. It is certain that the palaces belonging to the nobles and monarchs of the Middle Ages—to say nothing of abbeys, minsters and temples—were in nearly all respects equal to those erected in the present day, and in some important points far superior. But in how many other equally significant and valuable particulars has the progress of the world been not only concentrated into these latter days, but singularly spasmodic in its previous march?

Take two of the most remarkable inventions of all time, both of comparatively modern date—gunpowder and printing. One is four, the other five, centuries old. How infinitesimal the difference between the firearms of the year 1400 and the year 1800! The "Brown Bess," the field guns and the carronades with which Nelson and Wellington and Napoleon won their victories when we were young, were superior in little except readiness to the matchlocks and the cannon with which the Barons of the Middle Ages fought out their contests, as soon as they had discarded the bows and arrows which had sufficed for mankind from the days of Thermopylæ, and earlier, to the days of Agincourt, and later. But now contrast the progress since 1840 with the progress of the previous five hundred years. Compare the needle-gun of Sadowa, or the Chassepot rifle of Mentana, or the Enfield of our own troops, or even the Minie of Inkerman, with the common musket which the veteran pedants of the Duke of Wellington's army could scarcely be persuaded to discard. Compare the Armstrong, the Blakesley or the Whitworth ordnance of to-day—with their almost boundless calibre, their terrible projectiles, their marvelous precision, and their three-mile range—with the round shot or shell fired from the field-pieces which battered Badajoz and St. Sebastian. It is probable that within fifty years from the first application of gunpowder to war, the destructive power of the fire-arms then invented was nearly as great as that of those used in the reign of Napoleon. It is probable that we are now within far less than fifty years of the furthest point to which the conditions of matter will permit that destructive power to be carried.

Then as to printing. The books printed within five and-twenty years after the first use of movable types were as clear, as perfect, as beautiful specimens of typography as any that were produced five-and-twenty years ago. A little more rapidity and a great deal more cheapness make up, perhaps, the sum total of the improvements in the typographic art between the time of Caxton and the time of Spottiswoode. But within the memory of those still young the wonderful art of rapid stereotyping has been introduced; and to this alone it is owing that newspapers are able to supply the demands of their hundred thousand readers. It would be of course impossible to compose more than one set of types within the very few hours allowed for the supply of each day's demand. It would be equally impossible to print off from that one set more than an eighth or a tenth part of the number of copies which the leading papers are required to furnish within three or four hours. But by casting from the first composed types as soon as completed, any number of facsimile blocks can be produced, and from these, by the help of circular machines, an indefinite number impressions can be struck off in a almost incredibly short space of time. Twelve thousand copies an hour, and even more, can, we believe, be easily produced by each machine. The multiplication thus rendered feasible is practically almost unlimited.

But it is in the three momentous matters of light, locomotion and communication that the progress effected in this generation contrasts most surprisingly with the aggregate of the progress effected in all previous generations put together since the earliest dawn of authentic history. The lamps and torches which illuminated Belshazzar's feast were probably just as brilliant, and framed out of nearly the same materials, as those which shone upon the splendid fetes of Versailles when Marie Antoinette presided over them, or those of the Tuileries during the imperial magnificence of the first Napoleon. Pine wood, oil, and perhaps wax, lighted the banquet halls of the wealthiest nobles alike in the eighteenth century before Christ and in the eighteenth century after Christ. There was little difference, except in finish of workmanship and elegance of design—little, if any, advance, we mean, in the illuminating power, or in the source whence that power was drawn—between the lamps used in the days of the Pyramids, the days of the Coliseum, and the days of Kensington Palace. Fifty years ago, that is, we burnt the same articles, and got about the same amount of light from them, as we did five thousand years ago. Now we use gas, of which each burner is equal to fifteen or twenty candles; and, when we wish for more, can have recourse to the electric light or analogous inventions, which are fifty-fold more brilliant and far-reaching than even the best gas. The streets of cities, which from the days of Pharaoh to those of Voltaire were dim and gloomy, even where not wholly unlighted, now blaze everywhere (except in London) with something of the brilliancy of moonlight. In a word, all the advance that has been made in these respects has been made since many of us were children. We remember light as it was in the days of Solomon; we see it as Drummond and Faraday have made it.

The same thing may be said of locomotion. Nimrod and Noah traveled just in the same way, and just at the same rate, as Thomas Assheton Smith and Mr. Coke of Norfolk. The chariots of the Olympic Games went just as fast as the chariots that conveyed our nobles to the Derby, "in our hot youth, when George the Third was king." When Abraham wanted to send a message to Lot, he dispatched a man on horseback, who galloped twelve miles an hour. When our fathers wanted to send a message to their nephews, they could do no better, and go no quicker. When we were young, if we wished to travel from London to Edinburg, we thought ourselves lucky if we could average eight miles an hour—just as Robert Bruce might have done. Now, in our old age, we feel ourselves aggrieved if we do not average forty miles. Everything that has been done in this line since the world began—everything, perhaps, that the capacities of matter and the conditions of the human frame will ever allow to be done—has been done since we were boys. The same at sea. Probably, when the wind was favorable, Ulysses, who was a bold and skillful navigator, sailed as fast as a Dutch merchantman of the year 1800, nearly as fast at times as an American yacht or clipper of our fathers' day. Now we steam twelve and fifteen miles an hour with wonderful regularity, whether wind and tide be favorable or not—nor is it likely that we shall ever be able to go much faster. But the progress in the means of communication is the most remarkable of all. In this respect Mr. Pitt was no better off than Pericles or Agamemnon. If Ruth had wished to write to Naomi, or David to send a word of love to Jonathan when he was a hundred miles away, they could not possibly have done it under twelve hours. Nor could we to our own friends thirty years ago. In 1867 the humblest citizen of Great Britain can send such a message, not a hundred miles, but a thousand, in twelve minutes.—The Spectator.

The entire restoration of the cathedral of Notre Dame, commenced twenty years ago, is at this moment being terminated by fixing a railing all round it to protect the structure throughout its extent. This is the last operation of the whole works undertaken to give this magnificent building the physiognomy which it possessed when first erected in 1447.

The Bishop of Natal having found his translation into the Zulu language of the first part of the "Pilgrim's Progress" a great success, it being received and read by the natives with avidity, his lordship is going to complete the entire work.

THE HOME MONTHLY.—We call special attention to the advertisement of R. J. Harp, publisher of this valuable magazine, at 112 Camp street, in another column.

DEATH OF MRS. RICHARD JONES.

We regret to learn that this elect lady has passed away from earth. She had been suffering with pulmonary consumption for nearly a year. In July she left with her husband for Minnesota, hoping that the change of climate might afford at least temporary relief. Many friends shared in this hope, but the result has been otherwise. If love, prayer and sympathy could have availed to prolong this valuable life, she had not died. Sister Jones fell asleep in Jesus on the 22d of August. Her last days were eminently peaceful. She seemed to have entirely disrobed herself of earth, and after conversing freely and fully with her husband, and sending messages to her relatives and friends, she awaited and met death with the most perfect serenity and composure. She was a member of the Felicity street church of this city, a cheerful and exemplary Christian, and a pattern of all excellence in the relations and duties of domestic life. May God's blessing rest upon the bereaved husband and children.

HOMER COLLEGE.

We should have long since congratulated the Methodists of Louisiana and the Southwest upon the extrication of this institution from its immediate embarrassment. We are indebted to the friends who live in and about Homer for the restoration of this important educational interest to the control and ownership of Southern Methodism.

The country directly about Homer is the very region for small planters, and many citizens from Georgia and Alabama have made fortunes there. It comes out of the war as well off as any part of the State. It is as thickly populated as any part of north Louisiana. We do not know a better opening, as the times go, for the establishment of a first class institute.

"MANY MANSIONS."

Here is space, indeed, for the utmost penetrating power of faith. Where are these "mansions?"—What are they? In an attempt to answer, the soul does not return upon itself until it has visited the descending City of transparent gold. But these mansions are "many," and are not in the far future, as was that jasper creation first revealed to the inspired astronomer of Patmos. They are already built and occupied. They are the homes of those orders of intelligences that are honored to dwell in the courts which are about the Throne. One single look, on a cloudless night, through the telescope of Lord Rosse lets us into some of the possible proportions of these mansions, now inhabited by the angels—structures in which, mayhap, single suns, like those of the farthest nebulae, are used as great stones were in Solomon's temple. For the mind instinctively goes out by the way of the stars whenever it tries to conceive of the approaches to the dwelling place of the Most High. There seems to be the greatest expression of creative power and presence—out there, where the spheres outweigh our sun ten thousand times, and are, in number and glory, as the drops of the rainbow. If these distant orbs of solid light are not for the angels, then, it may be, they are the quarry out of which the Saviour is building our home.

Every distinct rank and principality of heaven has a separate and appropriate mansion. The tiniest of insects has this much; and some of them live in houses as perfect in beauty as any intelligent creature might desire. And whether one contemplates a rose-leaf or a sunset, a round drop of dew or a planet of crystal, the smallest particle of moving life, or a burning seraph, the goodness of God is seen everywhere, disposed to satisfy every living thing. Rising in gradnated altitudes, these immortal seats distinguish the kind as well as the degree of bliss that constitute an angel; so that we may imagine their variety as well as their number to be exceeding great. The bare thought of limitation, as connected with that divine region, would be insupportable to us. If there were no abiding places in that invisible world, no thronging life of home-loving intelligences, no separate clusters of celestial hierarchies or distinct galaxies of waiting hosts, the Saviour would have told us. "It is," said he, "because there is room in my Father's house that I go forward. I go to build for the redeemed another space, to be the inheritance of the saints in light."

We naturally wonder whether time is required to prepare our quarter of heaven; whether one who could say, Let there be light, cannot in a single instant make a home radiant enough for mortals.

"'Twas great to speak a world from nought."

Yet the mighty Son did not so quickly accomplish the "greater" work of redemption. Then that "purchased possession" is to tell its own story of redeeming love; its foundations, its gates and its walls will be covered with illustrious names; its glory is to be the light of the Lamb, and in its holy symbols will reappear the wondrous history of those martyrs, prophets and apostles for whom he suffered death. Just such a work, as we may suppose, the Saviour delights to accomplish out of the riches of the universe—an Eden for the new race, the offspring spiritual of the unfallen Adam. It may require the events of time, which are yet to transpire, before the mighty Son can finish his sublime labor, and record on its bulwarks of salvation the eternal triumph. As it is, when completed, to express as well the honor and love of the Father for the Son, it is reasonable to suppose that all resources are unlocked and placed at his control, and that our part of heaven will be fully equal in the grandeur and harmony of its style to any mansion in it, whether of angels or archangels. For if our bodies are to be changed and made in the likeness of his glorious body, we shall not seem out of place even in the Holy Mount; nor will the Son be ashamed of our company, for he himself proposes that where he is there shall we be also.

In all this dazzling prospect the mind is divided and knows not which most to desire: the place prepared for us, the mansions of the angels, the THRONE ineffable, the glorified Son of Man, the new bodies born of heaven, in which we ourselves shall move, or the sight of the dear ones—bone of our bone—shining in fadeless youth. The hope of these things is surely enough to banish from the heart every trouble. They constitute the glory which was set before Christ, and which supported him in his crucifixion, and they were held up by him to his disciples in the dark hour of his arrest as a full compensation for all the evils of this present life.

SHARON COLLEGE.

It will be seen, by a communication from Dr. Abbey, that the buildings of this long-established institution were consumed on last Monday night a week. We are glad to learn, however, that this misfortune will not prevent or interfere with the regular progress of the college. Its friends should rally to its support more promptly and vigorously than ever.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE, at Brookhaven, under the direction of Rev. H. F. Johnson, is one of the best and most thriving institutions in the Southwest. And we know of no community that more fully deserves success than the generous one where this school is located. It will be seen that the expense for the year is put at the low figure of two hundred and fifty dollars for board and tuition.

In this connection we call attention to the COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE, with Professor W. H. N. Magruder at its head—the most experienced teacher that we know of in Louisiana, who has made teaching his sole business, and has taught hundreds of young men from this and adjoining States. Parents who wish to give their sons a good classical education, and place them where their morals and manners will be tenderly and properly cared for, would do well to patronize this institute. The whole expense for board and tuition does not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per annum.

Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga.

This is one of the best known and most successful of our Southern Methodist institutions. Its graduates are to be found in all parts of the South, an ornament to the circles in which they move, and what is equally worthy of mention, among the firmest and most active supporters of the Methodist Church. The Rev. Dr. J. M. Bonnell is one of the very best educators of Georgia. We refer our readers to the advertisement of this admirable school in this week's ADVOCATE.

Handsboro Methodist Church.

We have a good deal of satisfaction in stating to all the generous friends, in New Orleans and elsewhere, who contributed for the repair of this church, that their money was well and judiciously expended. The house speaks for itself, and for the untiring work of the preacher in charge, who made the necessary collections. All this we say unsolicited, by him or any of his friends. This raising money for church building and church debts, and other charities, is a thankless office. Ten chances to one the man that does it will be watched, blessed and remembered to the end of time, by somebody. Many men give, but oh, how it hurts them! In fact, they never do get over it. They don't recollect texts, faces or names as a general thing; but the name, the face and the text of the man who persuades them, in an enthusiastic moment, to subscribe to a church movement, they will carry with them to their graves, and every time they pass a school house, or anything that looks like a church, they see that face!

ANOTHER Garibaldian invasion of the Roman territory is expected.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY, edited by William Smith, L. L. D., classical examiner in the University of London. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868. 12mo., pp. 778. This book is intended to take place by the side of the histories of Greece, Rome, England and France, by the same author, and to supply a manual of New Testament history. The first part of this work gives the connection between the Old and New Testament history, and includes the relations of the Holy Land to Persia, Egypt and Syria. This part is brought down to the destruction of Jerusalem, and gives a view of the national and religious life of each part of the Dispersion, such information as is necessary to understand the condition of the people at the advent of our Saviour.

The second part is a life of Christ; the third the apostolic history after the method of Paley, supplying the incidents omitted in the Acts from the Epistles. The whole work is one of permanent value. The history from Nehemiah to Christ, from B. C. 400 to B. C. 4—including the Asmonean kingdoms—is specially valuable. One rises from its perusal more than ever convinced that the Gospels are genuine, that no Jew of that period could even have invented or conceived of such a model of all moral excellence as is the Christ of the New Testament. And there is no reading more intensely interesting than the history of the times which immediately and all unconsciously preceded the coming of the Son of God to this earth; to notice what men were about, and what sort of men they were in the region where he first appeared; that he should have been revealed in the neighborhood and under the government of such a human monster as Herod was!

NIL MORTUUS, ETC.

Among the eulogies upon Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, which Northern papers are pronouncing, that of the Independent (Congregationalist) is somewhat remarkable. The editor apologizes for the colored family of Mr. S. in the following style: "But we have noticed, as an accidental phenomenon in morals, that public spirit sometimes becomes all the more a passion with men who have lost something of private virtue—as if human nature, having stained itself on one side, sought all the more bravely to keep itself bright on another."

This is certainly ingenious, and the next turn which we quote scarcely less so:

"But the few men whose private errors may thus become public benefits, and who can say with Luther, 'I thank God for my sins,' are none the less to be condemned for those very failings which thus 'lean to virtue's side.' Nevertheless, there is one beautiful spiritual compensation to such men—for, hidden within their breasts are solemn sorrows, or what Wordsworth calls 'majestic pains,' by which their characters become purified as by refining fires. Such inward processes as these long ago made Thaddeus Stevens a better Christian than many a Copperhead clergyman who will take occasion of his death to sneer at his life."

We can make some allowance for the editor, for it must be admitted that he had a hard text.

A CORRECTION.

AUBURN, Ala., Aug. 26, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: The Board of Trustees of East Alabama College thank you for your kind publication of the communication of the General Agent. I am happy to inform you that a lofty and wide-spread enthusiasm for the success of the college is awakened. There was a mistake of units for hundreds in the sums apportioned to the several districts, as published. It should be as follows: Montgomery district, $3,000; Eufaula district, $2,000; Union Springs district, $1,500; Jacksonville district, $1,000; Camden district, $800; Marianna district, $500; Lafayette district, $500; Gadsden district, $500.

Your's truly,
E. J. HAMILL.

THE STAPLE.

The factors and merchants were greatly refreshed at an arrival of 900 bales of cotton by the Governor Allen on last Monday night. Nearly all of it was new cotton. This throws a little fresh blood into circulation. We hope that it is the beginning of new financial life throughout the country. Judging from the report of preachers and stewards, circuits and stations, relief cannot come a day too soon.

SHARON COLLEGE.

CANTON, August 27, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: On last Monday night, between twelve and one o'clock, the endwise and dormitory buildings of Sharon Female College were entirely destroyed by fire, with all the contents. The house was occupied by Dr. A. F. Magruder, President Hunnicutt and myself being boarders in the house. The fire was so sudden that it was almost miraculous we all escaped with life. We save nothing but our night clothes. I lost all my papers, MSS., etc., and nearly three hundred volumes of my library, the rest being in Canton. My loss was two thousand five hundred or three thousand dollars. Dr. Magruder's over two thousand dollars, and Brother Hunnicutt's about eight hundred dollars.

But what I wish most particularly to state is, that the fire will not interfere in the least with the regular progress of the college. The college buildings and recitation rooms are unharmed, and another very suitable and convenient house has been secured to supply the place of the burnt one. The school will go right on, opening on the 28th of September, and we hope with increased patronage. Your's, etc.,

R. ABBEY.

Annual Commercial Statement for the Year Ending August 31, 1868.

We copy as follows from the Crescent of the 31st ultimo:

The commercial year ending this evening opened upon us with all but the gloomiest prospects for commercial, agricultural and general business interests, the public health and the public weal. There was scarce an interest that was not depressed or discouraged; and only the most sanguine looking with hope to the approaching business and planting seasons.

The causes that wrought this condition of affairs and filled the public mind with grave apprehension are too recent to be dwelt upon. We were in the midst of a severe epidemic that continued with marked exacerbation for nearly two months longer—other Gulf cities were similarly visited; the cotton crop fell short of all calculation; the food crop did not come up to expectations; our labor system was nigh utterly unreliable, owing in a great measure to the demoralizing "protection" of the Freedmen's Bureau, which was virtually setting a premium on idleness. Never was the planter more in need, seldom was the factor less able to help him; cotton had fallen to a figure anticipated by but few, if any, bringing disaster upon thousands; planters' experience during the past season was so generally discouraging that nothing could be predicted as to the breadth of land that would be cultivated the approaching season, or how much would be devoted to the great staple; a number of influential journals were urging unwisely, as we thought, that cotton be wholly or in part abandoned—and finally the political situation inspired widespread and deep distrust, a partisan Congress so legislating as to deprive the property and intelligence of ten Southern States of any voice or influence in the management of public affairs therein.

Happily as the year advanced the clouds began to lift. Early in November the yellow fever ceased to be epidemic, our business marts began to show signs of life, and absentees began to return. Early in April cotton advanced at a wholly unlooked-for rate, causing unwonted activity in the market, pulsating through every branch of business, and modifying somewhat the views of many regarding the dethronement of the "king." To what extent this advance in the leading staple affected the planters' views we will not undertake to determine. But be the proportion of the breadth of land planted this year what it may as compared with the three years preceding, it is certain the yield per acre promises to be considerable in excess. Indeed, to use the language of the country press, seldom or never were the prospects better for an abundant yield, in proportion to the extent of land cultivated, and that notwithstanding the appearance of the worm, here and there, in a number of States. The food crops, too, have yielded most bountifully; and in connection with our agricultural prospects we should not fail to make mention of the unexpected, and, on the whole, very commendable way in which the freedmen have worked.

The retrospect rightly read is instructive, the prospect most cheering, such as has not dawned upon us in the past eight years. From the chaos and wreck of civil war and the gloom engendered by our hitherto fruitless efforts to reconstruct our planting interests, we are emerging slowly yet surely into a state whose comparative success is full of ample encouragement. There needs now only such reaction in political sentiment as shall insist that legislation, State and Federal, instead of being given over to unscrupulous partisan politics, shall be devoted to subserving public interests at large.

COTTON.

We deem it unnecessary to do more here than briefly refer to the more striking features of the movement during the year. At the opening middling cotton ruled inactive in this market a 28½c. Thenceforward, to the last week of December, it steadily declined; at the latter period being quoted at 14½ to 14¾c. per lb., showing a net reduction, in four months, of 14c. per lb. or about 100 per cent. Early in January it rallied, however, and with a gradually reactive feeling reached 24c. by the last of February. It remained rather steady during March, but early in April suddenly rose fully 4 to 8c. per lb, and ranged throughout April, May and June at 27 to 32½c. per lb. Subsequently prices were, for the most part, irregular and unsettled up to the close of the year, when the market exhibited a trifling recovery from the lowest point reached, but still continued for the most part inactive, owing to the light supply in factors' hands, and the uncertitude regarding the immediate future of the cotton interest generally.

THE LATE W. H. C. KING.

At the request of our cotemporary of the Times we publish the following testimonial to the late W. H. C. King:

TIMES OFFICE, Aug. 28, 1868.

At a meeting of the employees of the Times office, held this day, on motion of Mr. Pasley, Mr. M. F. Bigney was called to the chair, and on motion of Mr. Dill, Mr. T. F. Hedges was appointed secretary.

On motion of Mr. Pasley, a committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Hancock, Armstrong and Hedges, was appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the feelings of the meeting.

The committee, after retiring, reported the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Divine Providence to remove from our midst and the scenes of his usefulness one with whom we have been long associated in the closest companionship; and

WHEREAS, We deem an expression of our feelings on this solemn occasion as due to his memory in token of the great esteem and regard in which he has so long and so sincerely been held; therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the death of Wm. H. C. King, chief editor of the New Orleans Times, the world of journalism has lost one of its brightest ornaments; his fellow-citizens an honest, upright and fearless champion; his family a stay and protector they might truly reverence; and we, his friends and employees, one whom it was our delight to honor. Borne down in the battle of life, he met death even as he had lived, bravely, and resigned his breath with that calm and conscious hope in the future vouchsafed to all on earth who do God's will. We leave his virtues to the abler pen of his biographer, and content ourselves with the tender of that sympathy to his stricken family which, while it cannot either relieve or palliate their grief, will at least assure them that other tears flow and other bleeding hearts bow down before the great affliction.

On motion of Mr. Drury, the contemporary newspapers of this city were requested to publish the preamble and resolution, and a copy of the same was directed to be sent to the family of the deceased.

On motion of Mr. Armstrong, the meeting then adjourned.

M. F. RUGNEY, President.
T. F. HEDGES, Secretary.

It may be stated as a general rule that persons whose acquaintance it is most difficult to make are best worth knowing.

MARRIED.

On the 27th of August, 1868, by Rev. George T. Vickers, Mr. THOMAS G. MEEKINS, of Baltimore, Maryland, to Miss LILLIE, youngest daughter of Ethan and Malinda Colton, of Covington, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. JULIA A. PENKINS died July 28, 1868, aged sixty-four years, one month and one day.

Sister P. was a native of Northampton county, North Carolina, where in 1822 she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. She was a resident of Lafourche parish, Louisiana, and one of the few identified with the church in that section, say as far back as twenty-eight or thirty years ago, who entertained our ministers that were sent to labor there.—Fathers Winans and Drake, of sainted memory, were of this number, and with them others, a half score or more, could be named if need be, who from time to time, through subsequent years, enjoyed the hospitalities of her quiet home. And those who have labored in that region, and who still survive, will doubtless ever hold her in grateful remembrance. She believed "it better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting;" and consequently, in the sick room, where she was often found, she was at once a friend, a sister and a mother to the afflicted.

Her Bible, by the many passages and texts marked in it, shows that she was a very constant reader of the Scriptures. For about two years before her death she was in feeble health. Her disease was consumption. During most of this time, and to the very last, she professed an unwavering confidence in the merits of a crucified Saviour. Death seemed to be no unwelcome messenger to her. She often expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ. She delighted in the songs of Zion, and according to her special request, previously made, several of these were sung by Christian friends who stood around her dying bed.

To one passing away to the spirit world, who is a lover of holy song, as was the deceased, how appropriate is the language of the Christian poet:

"Let music charm me last on earth,
And greet me first in heaven."

"How blest the righteous when he dies!
When sinks a weary soul to rest,
How mildly beam the closing eyes!
How gently heaves the expiring breast!

"So fades a summer cloud away;
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore."

P. M. GOODWYN.

JIMMIE F. GIBSON, daughter of Mrs. Jane N. Gibson, was born October 19, 1860, and died at Edgefield, Hinds county, Mississippi, August 7, 1865.

This makes the seventh time that death has entered this family in the last fifteen years.

A husband and father had been removed by death only a few weeks; and little Jimmie was added to the family circle. Owing to this mournful event she was doubly endeared to the mother—a solace in her grief.

Death has now destroyed all worldly comfort—the dearest tie that binds on earth has been severed. O grave, where is thy victory? Yes, our dear Saviour kindly cared for our children. The Son of Righteousness has dissipated every cloud. From his precious lips there fall words of consolation. To the Christian the prospect is transcendently glorious; faith expands their vision; and the hope of a resurrection beautifies the surroundings of the grave; and love stands at the very gates of the Celestial City, ready to usher the ransomed child into its mansions of blessedness.

W. WADSWORTH.

Died, August 21, on Bayou Boeuf, in this parish, MARY LOU., child of J. W. and M. E. Daniel, aged two years and six months. Much will I miss little Lou. when at the house of her father, for she was often clambering to my knee, and bringing me sweet flowers. She was a little bud on earth, but will become the full-blown angel flower beneath the smiles of Jesus, and fanned by the air of heaven.

"I take these little lambs, said he,
And lay them in my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me he ever blest."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT MEETING.

The Natchez District Meeting will be held at Midway, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and will convene on Thursday, the 1st, and continue until the 4th of October next. Brethren attending the meeting will please call at Mr. Chapman's, in Centreville, who will direct them to their homes during the session.

Brethren from a distance would do well to reach Centreville on Wednesday evening, as the meeting will organize at eleven o'clock on Thursday.

Pastors will please prepare full written reports of all matters pertaining to the church in their several charges.

JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting for Lake Providence District, Louisiana Conference, will be held at Delhi, Carroll parish, commencing on Friday, the 18th of September. The introductory sermon will be preached by Rev. Joel E. Daves, of Bastrop, Louisiana. W. G. MCGAUGHEY, P. E.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The District Meeting for the Onachita District, Louisiana Conference, will be held at Mount Lebanon, Bienville parish, Louisiana, commencing on Sunday, the 6th day of September next.

The Conference sermon will be preached by Rev. N. A. Cravens, of Homer, at eleven o'clock A. M. The business session of the Conference will open at eight o'clock A. M. on Monday. Brethren, on arrival, will report to Rev. T. J. Upton or Rev. W. P. Kimball.

S. ARMSTRONG, P. E.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made at Conference. My age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the official members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day-time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

The preachers of the district will use their utmost endeavors to procure a full and complete report as to statistics, finance and the number within their respective charges. The pastors will also please see that the president of each board of trustees call a meeting, so they may be able to furnish the Quarterly Conference with a proper official report of the condition of church property. Brethren intending to apply for recommendation for deacon's and elder's orders at the next Annual Conference will please prepare themselves, as the Discipline requires.

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

DEAR BRETHREN—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

W. F. GLENN
J. G. JONES.

THE HOME MONTHLY HAS been enlarged to seventy-two pages. The old cover has been replaced with a new one, much more agreeable to the taste of our friends. The new style of page, modeled after the more recent and best printed English magazines, gives great satisfaction. The fifth volume, upon which it has now entered, promises to be more popular than any of its predecessors.

Subscription price, $3 per annum in advance. Address R. J. HARP, Publisher, sept5 3t 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

J. M. BONNELL, sep5 tf President.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLlege, Brookhaven, Mississippi, one hundred and twenty eight miles from New Orleans, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad.

This institution will reopen on the 23D OF SEPTEMBER, 1868.

The good discipline, the thoroughness of instruction, the healthiness of the location, the parental care over the pupils, the very low terms, all recommend the institution.

In the English Department $125 will pay all the expenses for five months, including tuition, board, fuel, lights, washing and books.

H. F. JOHNSON, sep5 2m President.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev. William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South—young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

RECOLLECTIONS OF REV. JOHN JOHNSON AND HIS HOME.

An Autobiography, by Mrs. SUSANNAH JOHNSON. Edited by Rev. ADAM C. JOHNSON, M. D.

The above book will be published at Nashville, September 15th, in one 12mo. volume of 310 pages. It records the varied experiences of a pioneer Methodist preacher of no small celebrity, as well as the toils and privations of his family, and forms a most entertaining and affecting biography. It contains no chapter that can be read without emotion. In short, it is a faithful picture of the men and manners of early times, and as such will have an interest far beyond the sphere of Mr. Johnson's labors, extensive as they were.

It may be ordered from

A. H REDFORD, Agent, Nashville,
Or from P. M. PINCKARD, St. Louis.

Price, $1 50, with usual discount.

I offer the following

PREMIUMS TO AGENTS.

1. To any one buying 50 copies, from me or my booksellers, at once or in lots, Cruden's Concordance, worth..... $5 00
2. To any one buying 100 copies, as above, Webster's Pictorial Unabridged Dictionary..... 12 00
3. To any one buying 200 copies, as above, Clarke's Commentary..... 24 00
4. To any one buying 300 copies, as above, a fine Silver Watch and Chain..... 50 00
5. To the one buying the highest number up to October 1, 1869, a Cabinet Organ, Mason & Hamlin's, worth..... 250 00

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIfuge, the

SAFEST AND MOST EFFECTIVE

REMEDY FOR WORMS

THAT HAS EVER BEEN DISCOVERED.

This celebrated specific for Worms is now with the utmost freedom and confidence by gentlemen who have obtained eminence in the medical profession, and many of these, throwing aside their prejudices, have cheerfully given certificates testifying to its superiority. It is used extensively, for the simple reason that Nothing has yet been Discovered which can be Substituted in its Place.

And it is given without apprehension, because every one knows its perfect safety. It has now been before the public for over Forty Years, and has attested its superiority in thousands of cases, throughout all parts of the world.

It is the imperative duty of every parent to watch the health of his child, and to provide himself with this potent specific.

Be careful to observe the initials of the name, and see that you get

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

WAITING.

BY M. E. N. HATHEWAY.

O dear! how can I be quiet,
When my heart is one throb of delight,
And keeps saying over and over,
My mother is coming to-night?

My hair is tied up with blue ribbons,
My stockings and apron are white,
I'm keeping myself nice to meet her,
My mother is coming to-night!

Dark cloud, hurry off in the distance,
Nor gather my hopes to affright—
Let the rain storms wait till to-morrow,
My mother is coming to-night!

Now, what are you slaying for, pussy?
You've eaten your supper all right—
Go home, and say to the kitten,
My mother is coming to-night!

Little star, I'm watching you shining
Away in the west, silver bright;
Can you see me, and hear what I'm saying?
My mother is coming to-night!

Dick, trot along, faster and faster,
And bring the dear carriage in sight;
I'm listening to hear the wheels rattle—
My mother is coming to-night!

Little Corporal.

A STORY FROM PARIS.

A Paris letter tells the following story of a Twelve Night Fete in that city:

A wealthy family in the aristocratic boulevard Malesherbes were amusing themselves, in seeking the king's portion or ring in the festival cake, when a lady of the company said to the hostess, "I wish my portion to be given to the poorest little boy we can find in the street." The servant was dispatched on this freezing night, and not far from the house he found a ragged urchin, trembling with cold and hunger. He brought him up, and ordered him into the gay saloon, where a thousand lights glittered, and a sparkling fire gladdened the eyes of the poor little fellow. Dumbfounded and surprised, he drew the portion which the benevolent lady had promised, and, as luck would have it, the little fellow found the "ring," (beans they use in Paris instead,) and of course he was "king." They all shouted out that being a king he must choose a queen. He was asked so to do, and looking around the company, he chose the very lady who had proposed to cede her portion of the cake. He was asked why he chose her. He said, "I don't know! she looks the most like mother!"

"Mother! whose mother?"

"My mother! I never knew her, but was stolen away from her, and here is her portrait." With this he drew from out his ragged coat a likeness, which proved to be that of the very lady herself, who, in Italy, had her children stolen from her, and he turns up a poor little ragged Savoyard, dragging along a miserable existence in Paris, while the mother, by an intuition, perhaps, felt that in the air near to where she was, was one so dear to her.

"English tourists," writes a correspondent at Rome, "had better be careful how they visit the church of St. Agostino. The other day the devotees there were seized with the impression that two strangers who were on their knees before the image of the Madonna were thieves, and were seeking, under cover of their prayers, to despoil the shrine. Instantly there was a rush on the interlopers, and they were so roughly handled that they gladly gave themselves up to the gendarmes, whom the disturbance brought to the spot. But the gendarmes proved more unmerciful than the fanatics; for the two captives were no sooner brought to prison than they were, without examination, subjected to such a cruel flogging that they became insensible. The warder of the prison now threw several buckets of water over their heads as a restorative, but with very bad effect, and it became necessary to report their condition to the authorities. Monsignor Randi inquired into the case, and it was then discovered that the supposed culprits were Italian gentlemen, and traveling for pleasure. There is, however, no lack of thieves in the Pontifical States, and about a week ago the gendarmes had a combat with the band of Fontana in the province of Frosinone, and killed one of the brigands."

One "J. H. Crossman" publishes in an English journal a piece of information worth knowing. He says that the musquitoes at Mentons, where he past last October, were remarkably vigilant and bloodthirsty, and that neither curtain nor lotion had any perceptible effects in damping their appetites. But one day, by accident, Mrs. Crossman gathered in the course of her morning's walk a branch of wild rosemary, and placed it in her bedroom. From that time forward no single musquito ventured into the room; and during the remainder of their stay at Mentone, Mr. and Mrs. Crossman slumbered unbitten and undisturbed under the protecting shade of the wild rosemary branch.

FARM AND GARDEN.

CULTURE OF BLACKBERRIES.

The cultivation of this fruit for market was greatly stimulated by the introduction of the New Rochelle berry about a third of a century since, and perhaps no person has contributed more than William Lawton, whose name it mostly bears, toward calling public attention to the importance of the extensive culture of this fruit. Its large size, great productiveness, and other good qualities, surpassing any other variety then known, made it very popular among fruit growers, and its culture extended widely, so that many farmers raised more bushels of blackberries than of corn and wheat. The blackberry occupies an important position in the list of small fruits, commencing to ripen close upon the season of the raspberry, and before peaches and grapes. Its easy culture, hardiness, and the high prices at which the fruit sells, make it one of the most profitable crops to grow. It is not particular as to soil and location, but yields just as well where other crops will grow. There is no advantage in selecting the best land for a plantation, as the canes would there grow so large and tall as to require much time and expense to prune, trim and keep them within bounds. They need but one planting, as the bushes renew themselves annually thereafter by sending up spontaneous growths of young suckers to bear fruit the following year; and with an occasional dressing of manure, they will continue to give large returns for many years. I have ten acres of them, on this sandy land, that have been planted about thirteen years, and still produce fine crops, yielding several times 650, 700, and once 800 bushels of fruit, while land adjoining, equally good, planted with corn, did not produce more than half the number of bushels per acre. When the corn was removed, all was gone. To get another crop we had to manure and plant again. But not so with the blackberries; for we only pick the ripe fruit, and leave the foliage to fall on the ground and add to its fertility. The plants being permanently established, the annual crop of fruit taken off may be compared to the coupons taken from Government bonds, the principal remaining to produce more.

YIELD OF BERRIES PER ACRE.

At the average price at which blackberries have sold in market for ten years past, a field, with ordinary treatment, will yield from $300 to $400 per acre, and in some cases $500 per acre have been realized. And, as it is from the net annual dividend received that the real worth of any investment is to be ascertained, we can readily arrive at the true value of a plantation of the best selected blackberries. Having experimented on several kinds of land, from a firm clay to a light blowing sand, I prefer, as the most favorable location for blackberries, a light, moist, sandy loam, well under-drained, if water would otherwise stand near the surface. Formerly we thought that low, rich land would be best, judging from the large growth of briars along ditches and swampy places. Accordingly one of my neighbors planted ten acres of low, dark, rich land, that had produced heavy crops of corn and timothy, expecting to get a corresponding one of the blackberry; but in this he was disappointed, except in the growth of canes, which was very large and strong, but not well ripened before winter set in, and consequently were greatly injured and sometimes entirely killed before spring, yielding but little or no fruit; while blackberries planted on the higher land, not worth near so much for agricultural purposes, producing small canes, with buds well developed and wood matured before the approach of winter, would yield heavy crops of fine fruit. In walking through my patch, when loaded with berries, he remarked that he could not understand why those small bushes had so much more fruit on them than his large ones. I attributed it to the fact that the canes and fruit buds were better ripened the fall previous, and had stood the cold of winter with less injury.

MODEL BLACKBERRY BUSHES.

Another farmer near by, having about forty acres devoted to the culture of blackberries, purchased a tract of light, sandy land, at $13 per acre, and planted it with them. But, desiring to have a model patch, he purchased a few acres of the richest and best land for ordinary agricultural purposes in the vicinity, at $300 per acre, and planted it with the same kind of blackberries, giving the best treatment and special attention, which produced an enormous growth of canes, but which never yielded as much fruit per acre as the $13 land. He remarked to me, while looking at them, that: 'We have learned something since commencing this business. To begin now, with the knowledge we have, the error of planting our best land with blackberries might be avoided.'

PREPARATION OF THE GROUND.

The land should be plowed and harrowed smooth, then open furrows in the fall eight feet apart; and, if muck can be had conveniently, it is valuable to spread along them during the winter, leaving it exposed to the action of the frost. Early in spring set the plants about four feet apart on the muck, which will require 1,360 plants to the acre. The intervening space, while the plants are small, need not be lost; but corn, potatoes or other vegetables may be grown midway between the rows for the first year or two. The roots will mostly follow along the row to feed on the muck, and grow more vigorously than lateral or side roots. Hence the strongest and best plants will come up nearly where they are wanted to produce fruit the following year. But they should not be left to stand along the rows closer together than an average of one plant to a foot in length in the rows. The plantation should be gone over several times during the summer, and the tops of the young canes, as they appear above the bearing bushes, should be shortened in, so as to keep them at a uniform height of about three to five feet, according to the strength of the soil. This will induce the side branches to grow vigorously, and develop fruit buds near the ground; and, interlocking with each other, the bushes will support themselves, and thus avoid the necessity of stakes and wires to prevent high winds from injuring the tender canes. The side branches should be shortened in the following winter or spring to a pyramidal form, somewhat resembling a dwarf pear tree when properly trimmed. Plants thus properly treated will yield more fruit and of better quality than if left to grow tall and slender, as by nature they are inclined to do.

PRICE OF BERRIES.

Blackberries have sold readily for several years past at from three and a half to five dollars a bushel; and this year, owing to the scarcity of fruits, they bring double that price. They will be likely to sell well for many years to come, as they can be used in so many ways; the demand will be greater than the supply. Some patches will be planted on unsuitable soil, and will not pay cost; others, in the most favorable locations, will be suffered to grow at random, becoming large and rank, and producing but little fruit.

HOW TO RAISE BOUNTIFUL CROPS.

To insure good crops requires close attention. The canes should be kept thin and well headed back; and, on poor land, an occasional dressing of manure, muck or fertilizers of some kind, adds to the quantity and quality of the fruit. There is no likelihood of the market being overstocked with the fruit, as it pays well to make it into wine. Three quarts of blackberries and three pounds of sugar, with the addition of a little water, will make a gallon of wine, highly recommended for its medicinal properties; worth $2 per gallon while new, and its value increases with age. All the poorer berries, those that are too ripe to ship to market, may be properly converted into wine at home; and only the finest and most perfect fruit sent to market, which will always command a fair price.

LIST OF VARIETIES.

Being extensively engaged in the cultivation of blackberries myself—having grown thousands of bushels of them within the last few years, and tested many varieties, such as the New Rochelle, Dorchester, Cut-leaf, Newman's Thornless, Cape May, Cumberland, Sinclair Mason's Mountain, Missouri Mammoth, Idaho Climbing, Parker's Early, Felton Braudenburg, Holcomb, Needham's White, Col. Wilder, and Dr. Warder, also the dewberries sent out by Dr. Miner, of Honeyeo Falls, New York, and have growing now ten acres of the Kittatinny and thirty of the Wilson Early Blackberry—I consider the latter the most profitable for market, and therefore have planted more largely of it than of any other variety. The fruit is large, luscious and sweet as soon as black, holds its bright color, and bears carriage well. The plants are hardy and productive. The Wilson will become a general favorite when its merits become more widely known. The berries sold readily in New York and Philadelphia markets last year, and this also, at fifty cents a quart, wholesale, when no other variety, that I am aware of, brought as much.

ORIGIN OF THE MOST VALUABLE VARIETIES.

It is somewhat remarkable that all the valuable varieties in cultivation have been found growing wild, and were selected and saved on account of their supposed merit over others; and from the thousands of seedlings raised, none have yet proved superior to their parents. May it not be attributed to the fact that sufficient care has not been taken to mix the pollen of different varieties? Having grown seedlings for many years without favorable results, I have now adopted the plan of planting some of the best varieties near each other, so as to insure the admixture of the pollen of many flowers, thereby combining qualities in their seedlings which could in no other way be found in the same fruit. If as much care and attention were bestowed in selecting and propagating new seedling blackberries as have been with the strawberry and grape, we might yet obtain varieties even superior to those that are now cultivated.

SCIENTIFIC.

Another Invention in Steam Engines.

A new invention has been introduced into the mechanical world, which promises to work an entire revolution in the application of steam to the various purposes of life. People had supposed that about the last improvement that could be made in steam engines had been made, but this new invention proves that people in supposing this were mistaken. A machine has been introduced which does away with the cylinder principle altogether, as well as with the piston, crank, steam chest, oil cans, etc. The engine which makes all these changes is the Centrifugal Steam Engine, and is the invention of Benjamin Franklin, of Westmoreland county. Already it has taken high rank among the recent inventions of the day, and it is morally certain to overcome all obstacles and win its way to a foremost position. The most competent practical engineers have examined it, and pronounce its success certain. They confidently predict that it will supersede all other kinds.

The facts which recommend it are many. As we have said, it does away entirely with the cylinder principle, depending on centrifugal force. Thus the mechanism is greatly simplified, and the engine is much more easily understood and much more economically worked than the old kind. In the new engine friction is almost entirely overcome. It will produce fifteen hundred revolutions to the minute, with one-fourth of the steam required to produce the same number of revolutions in the old style, and with the same amount of horse power. The Centrifugal Steam Engine condenses almost all its steam, which, it is needless to say, is itself a great saving. Another prime recommendation of the new engine is the fact that its great simplicity of construction makes it much more economical than any other. It can be constructed for not more than one-fourth of the expense required for the old style, and when made it is almost impossible for it to get out of order. So simple is it that a child can run it. The engine is now on exhibition at the Atlas Works in the Ninth Ward, and all should see it.—Pittsburg Post.

SPIRITUALISTIC PHENOMENA.

It is greatly to be regretted that scientific men have had so little opportunity for a fair and full investigation of these phenomena; and of many of them it may be added, so little disposition to make it. We think that outside the body of spiritualists the impression widely prevails that they are due to some natural cause analogous to electricity and magnetism, the laws of whose operation are not yet understood. Mr. H. A. Willis tells a story in The Atlantic for August which is as remarkable as almost any contained in the literature of spiritualism, and goes a great way to confirm this impression. Its incidents have recently occurred and are susceptible of verification. The subject of it is an Irish girl, Mary Carrick by name, eighteen years of age, who came to this country some fifteen months ago and found a home with a respectable family in Massachusetts. First of all, about six weeks after her arrival the bells hanging in the kitchen began to ring, and rang at intervals during the day. The theory of rats on the wires would not hold, for the wires were detached, and still the bells rang, but with no mechanism discoverable by the closest search. Next, loud, smart raps were heard on the walls, doors and windows of the room where the girl might be at work, and following her from room to room, and even occurring in her chamber when she was asleep. After some three weeks still more extraordinary occurrences took place. Chairs were overturned, crockery thrown down, tables moved, and kitchen utensils thrown about the room. Tubs filled with water were suddenly moved several inches. The ironing table would lift itself, even when persons tried to hold it down. A soapstone slab an inch and a half thick, and weighing forty-eight pounds, repeatedly lifted itself, and finally fell with such force as to break. Clamps put upon it were torn away. The movements increased in number and power as time advanced. A common cherry table moved out from the wall and turned upside down; a washtub filled with soaking clothes was emptied; a kettle was lifted from the sink to the floor. These are a few of the things heard and seen again and again by all of the members of the family and many other persons whom curiosity induced to visit the house. The presence of the girl in the room or near it seemed to be the only condition. After some ten weeks of these demonstrations her nervous system gave way and was followed by violent hysteria, and afterward by somnambulism and clairvoyance.

In the course of these phenomena various observations were made of some interest. The insulation of the bed by placing its posts upon glass prevented all sounds while she was in it. A like treatment of her table and chair enabled her to eat her meals without raps or agitation of the table. It was found also that rooms with bare floors or oil carpets were more favorable to the raps than those with woolen carpets. These things look in the direction of electricity for the moving cause, though the records which were kept show great deviations from its known laws. And lest any should wonder why the spirits were not invoked, we may add that to all appeals of the kind those gentry were stubbornly silent or stupidly idintic.

We have no doubt that the day will come when scientific men will be able fully to explain these phenomena. We commend them to their inquiries in the full belief that such an explanation is indispensable to the overthrow of a delusion whose moral and religious results are so full of ruin to the bodies and souls of those who have fallen into the snare. Whoever shall present a satisfactory solution will do a great service to his race. And we perhaps ought not to refrain from giving a caution respecting the perils to the nervous system from a too free use of "Planchette," a toy that may yet aid in the solution of these mysteries.—New York Christian Advocate.

A HIGHLY SENSATIONAL FRAUD.

Some young gentlemen occupying rooms in the fourth story of a building on East Water near Wisconsin street were guilty of a singular practical joke last evening. At great pains and labor they rigged up a dummy man, dressed it well, and let it sit for a few moments in the window, at which the youngsters stood talking and laughing so loud as to attract the attention of passers on the street. Those persons not aware of what was going on above were suddenly startled at seeing the young men engage in an altercation, which was apparently followed by blows, and the next instant one of the number, as was supposed, was pushed headlong out of the window, while the rest drew back in horror. The man fell down the dizzy height, striking the sidewalk head first, and with a heavy thud. He was evidently killed instantly by the fall, for he never moved a muscle, and his brains were dashed out and scattered upon the walk, where his blood lay in a great pool.

To say that those who saw the affair were horror-stricken is to but faintly express the sensation. One man who had passed through "scenes" in his life fainted dead away; others covered their eyes to shut out the frightful scene. For some seconds nobody dared to approach the mangled, bleeding, lifeless mass, but soon this feeling passed away, and a number gathered near to find that instead of humanity the mass was the dummy spoken of, the brains being composed of white lead, and the blood red liquid. Some of the lookers-on took the sell as a good joke, while the others were in disgust. The man who fainted away tried hard to get another who came very near it to go up and give the scamps a thrashing, as they richly deserved, but failing to get help he abandoned the job, and finally the affair settled down into a laugh all round, in which those below were joined by those above, notwithstanding the fact they had lost their clothes—a poor, but honest and deserving man shouldering the dummy and toting it away.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

The Pope against the People.—The Prince-Archbishop of Olmutz, for instance, orders that Catholics who enter into so-called civil marriages, and obstinately persist in their sin, shall be denied the sacraments and Christian burial. The priests are ordered to lock the church yards against the corpse of any such excommunicated person; and, if it is interred there by force, no priest shall enter the church yard till it is purged and reconsecrated. This has roused the spirit of the laity. The common council of Vienna have passed an almost unanimous resolution solemnly protesting against the papal allocution, and expressing perfect confidence in the Emperor's constitutional advisers.

MAN-MILLINERY.

We breathe more freely. The religious prospects of America brighten. We have received the 'Catalogue of Clerical Vestments and Improved Church Ornaments, manufactured by Simon Jeune, 34 Rue de Clery, Paris.'

Why are we not a nation of saints? Plainly, because the church apparatus has hitherto been so very deficient. Religion has been, so to speak, naked. The dry goods stores, supplying only the laity, have left the clergy unclothed. Where, we ask, in all New York is there a really good spiritual slop-shop? In what ready-made clothing store can you find anything like a proper Alb? Ask your tailor, if you dare, for a Chasuble? At Stewart's, New Yorkers boast that you can buy anything. Fancy a respectable citizen entering those marble portals and demanding a Cope or a Dalmatic! As for an Ombrellino, or an Antependium, you might as well attempt to go buffalo hunting in Broadway. In that case you would at least find the dried skin of the animal; but we doubt if there is to be found on sale anything nearer an Ombrellino than a lady's parasol. They order this thing otherwise in France.

Mr. Simon Jeune provides every one of these simple luxuries to order. Not a device by which a rich man may enter the kingdom of heaven, but he has it at his finger's ends. None of your cheap salvations mar the dignity of 34 Rue de Clery. 'We do not manufacture these articles at a low price,' he calmly announces. There is no limit in the other direction. You can lead souls to heaven in a robe worth twenty-five guineas; but if you insist on parsimony in your piety, you must patronize some other establishment.

But who that reads this catalogue, and revels for a half hour amid its gold and jewels, would care to be parsimonious? What is money worth, except as a means of putting one's pet minister into a Chasuble 'in gold cloth with glazed frizground, double superior quality?' Since the Christian must at any rate bear his cross, is it not a satisfaction to have it 'on a gold ground, richly worked in gold and silver?' If there is no Christianity without a Cope, is it not well that its 'Hood and Orfraies' should be 'surrounded with glazed gold-columned galloon?' And, as death must come at any rate, is it not something that your pall may bear 'a handsome design of silver tears in emboss in the center of the cross'—price only six guineas?

Time would fail to tell of the Banners and Dais, the Altar Cloths and Frontals, the Pastoral Stoles and Benediction Scarfs, the Pyxes and Chalices, and in short all dear delights of consecrated souls. This saintly upholsterer makes as many 'fresh sacrifices,' it would appear, as any other retailer; but, as this does not prevent him from pricing a Dais as high as four hundred pounds sterling, there is no danger of the purchasers finding anything cheap enough to be really discreditable. And the goods are all warranted to be as indestructible as the lowly virtues they symbolize.

We recommend this pamphlet for general circulation. It is as good as a seat at St. Alban's, and leaves very much the same impression. It is especially useful for summer time, when one may wander in the country, to the peril of one's soul, and may consider the lilies a great deal too much, and may come to thinking religion a cheap thing, after all. This would not do for M. Lejeune's business; let us return to the realities of life, and consider rather this 'embroidered glory of spangles and prul,' whatever prul may be.

M. Lejeune positively announces that he 'supplies every article connected with the Roman Catholic Church.' Perhaps he reserves the faith, hope and charity for the next catalogue, as they do not appear largely in this. Otherwise, we protest, in behalf of a respectable body of Christians, against so damaging a satire. It is worse than Sidney Smith's definition of Romanism—which ran thus: 'Posture and imposture, flexion and genuflexion, bowing to the right, courtesying to the left, and an immense amount of man-millinery.'—New York Independent.

It is stated that petroleum oil possesses the highest efficacy as a destroyer of all kinds of insects injurious to plants or animals; and the less purified, and consequently the cheaper, it is the better. Thirty parts should be mixed with 1,000 of water, and applied where required. The Medical Times states that vermin of houses may be destroyed by introducing into the holes or cracks a few drops of petroleum.

The controversy over the recently discovered poem supposed to be (and supposed not to be) by Milton, still rages in the English newspapers. Mr. Morley has certainly unearthed a delicate bit of verse, whoever wrote it.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $21 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, fleur, and even whiskey, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00
Three	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00
Four	12 50	25 00	35 00	00 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents,

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally knows as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is to all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE

On the corner of Camp and Common sts.

(In the Spacious and Elegant Story Building,)

Is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and is chartered by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000, $2000, or $3,000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a passport in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students the present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers. Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Colemen and A. Hennen.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1830.)

Warerooms, Nos. 611 and 616 Broadway,

NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This Invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The commercial year commences with very little movement in any branch of trade, but liberal arrivals of new cotton, which inspire the hope of an early revival of business. The receipts to date now sum up 1,939 bales, against 20 last year and 184 the year before. The sales of sugar and molasses are confined to small retail transactions, and only a moderate business is doing in tobacco, while the movement in Western produce is unusually limited.

The weather has been pleasant, but with daily showers, which do not indicate the dry spell so much needed in the picking season. Our accounts from the country are still of a conflicting tenor, and throw no new light on the crop question.

The river remains about the same, being twelve feet two inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market closed nearly at a standstill, factors asking for new crop 27 to 28½c. for Low Middling and 28 to 28½c. for Middling, and offering old at one-half to one cent less, but buyers showing no disposition to come forward at these figures. On Saturday, with a quiet market at New York, where Middling Uplands was quoted steady at 30½c, and sales of 15,000 bales at Liverpool without any quotable change in prices, the market continued nearly stagnant, the sales being confined to 15 bales, at irregular rates. On Monday factors evinced an increased desire to realize, and purchases could have been made at easier rates, but buyers stood aloof, awaiting more liberal supplies, nearly 1,000 bales being expected by one steamer, which, in fact, arrived before the close of business with 918 bales, including 893 of the new crop. The telegrams received during the day, reporting steady markets both at New York and Liverpool, had no perceptible influence. On Tuesday, with additional arrivals of 414 bales new crop, making the entire receipts of new to date 1,939 bales, there was a manifest disposition to meet the demand more freely; but there was very little inquiry, and the few buyers who came forward demanded greater concessions than factors were willing to admit. Hence the sales were confined to 76 bales, mostly old crop of the lower grades, but including some small lots of new on the basis of 27 to 27½c. for Middling, which, however was generally held at 28c. The appearance of the new that has thus far come to hand is superior to last year's, but some of it has been badly ginned, and so much cut as to materially depreciate its value. The supply of new consists mostly of Strict Low Middling and Middling.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 91 bales, taken partly for the North and partly for foreign export.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 1,507 bales, against 188 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 1,319 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 587,891 bales, against 712,923 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 284,288 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 11,432 bales to Great Britain, of 91,873 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 662 to France.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

SUGAR.—During the past three days the market for foreign sugars has been quiet, but firm. There has been no request for round lots, and the retail demand has been only moderate. No sale of any importance has come within our notice. The small amount of Louisiana sugar now on hand has been retailing at 13¾ to 15¾c. per pound for fair to prime, 16½ to 16¾c. for yellow clarified, and 17c. for white.

MOLASSES.—There is still no market for this article. Holders ask 45 to 50c. per gallon, but sales of large lots could not be effected at all.

FLOUR.—The flour market is dull and drooping.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

GRANNIE'S TRUST.

Dear Grannie is with us no longer!
Her hair, that was white as the snow,
Was parted one morning forever,
On her head lying softly and low;
Her hands left the Bible wide open,
To tell us the road she had trod,
With waymarks like footsteps to tell us
The way she had gone up to God.

No wonderful learning had Grannie,
She knew not the path of the stars,
Nor aught of the comet's wide cycle,
Nor of Nebula's dim cloudy bars;
But she knew how the wise men adoring
Saw a star in the East long ago;
She knew how the first Christmas anthem
Came down to the shepherds below.

She had her own test, I remember,
For people—whoe'er they might be—
When we spoke of the strangers about us,
But lately come over the sea;
Of "Laura," and "Lizzie," and "Jamie,"
And stately old "Esselby Oakes,"
She listened, and whispered it softly—
"My dear, are these friends meetin' folks?"

When our John went away to the city
With patrons, whom all the world knew
To be sober and honest great merchants,
For Grannie this all would not do
Till she pulled at John's sleeve in the twilight
To be certain before he had gone;
And he smiled as he heard the old question—
"Are you sure they are meetin'-folks, John?"

When Minnie came home from the city,
And left heart and happiness there,
I saw her close kneeling by Grannie,
With the dear wrinkled hands on her hair;
And amid the low sobs of the maiden
Came softly the tremulous tone—
"He wasn't like meetin' folks, Minnie;
Dear child, you are better alone."

And now from the corner we miss her;
We hear that reminder no more;
But still, unforgotten, the echo
Comes back from the far-away shore;
Till sophistry slinks in the corner,
Though chrily sweet was her due,
Yet we feel, if we want to meet Grannie,
'Twere best to be meetin' folks too.

WETUMPKA DISTRICT MEETING.

NUMBER ONE.

Mr. Editor: The third district meeting for the Wetumpka district, Montgomery Conference, was held at Tallassee, beginning on Thursday, the 13th of August, and ending on the 16th.

Bishop Wightman was present during its session, and presided over its deliberations with great kindness and ability.

On motion of Rev. D. M. Hudson, presiding elder, C. D. Oliver was elected secretary of the meeting, and Dr. B. F. Davis assistant secretary. All the appointments of the district were represented, and the interests of the entire work received close and earnest attention.

By request of the meeting I send you an abstract of its proceedings, consisting mostly of the resolutions of its several committees.

The Committee on the State of the Church was composed of the Rev. S. A. Pilly, chairman, Rev. H. Stearns, Dr. B. L. Landrum, William White and Rev. E. A. West, with whose report were adopted the following resolutions:

1. That the ministry be urged to preach the everlasting Gospel with renewed energy and zeal, and that they strive to indoctrinate the church with just views of the Almighty, and his providence over all his creatures and his church.

2. That they be prompted to the wholesome administration of discipline upon all offenders, and to the faithful and zealous guarding of the purity of the church.

3. That we earnestly insist on reviving class and prayer meetings at every appointment within the district, and at such other places as may be practicable, with prompt holding of the church meetings at least once a quarter.

4. That we duly observe the week of religious services appointed by the bishops, to be held the last week in August.

5. That the heads of families be entreated to raise their family altars where they have died, and that such as have excused themselves from this responsible duty be persuaded to perform it, the same to consist in reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer.

6. That this meeting instruct the traveling and local preachers of the Wetumpka district, whenever practicable and consented to by the colored people, to be diligent in endeavoring to maintain our church organizations among them, affording them such advantages as may not be prejudicial to the church.

7. That the Wetumpka district meeting recommend to the Montgomery Annual Conference, at its next session, the appointment of a suitable person or persons to the special charge of the colored members of our church, in accordance with the provisions of our Discipline.

The Committee on Church Literature offered their report, which, with the following resolutions, was adopted:

1. That our preachers and people everywhere purchase their religious and Sabbath school books from our Publishing House at Nashville.

2. That pastors and all official members of our church strive to obtain subscribers for one of the Advocates in every Methodist family.

3. That while we have a high appreciation of the Southern Christian Advocate as a family newspaper, we feel that we should promote the interest of the Nashville Advocate as the general organ of our church, and the New Orleans Advocate as the special organ of our Conference.

4. That we recommend all our preachers in charge of stations and circuits to comply, if possible, with the sixty dollar proposition of our book agent, that our Publishing House may be relieved of its pecuniary embarrassments.

The Committee on the Support of the Ministry was composed of Judge T. M. Williams, chairman, B. L. Landrum, A. R. Sullenburger, L. Davis, William A. Allen, W. Knight, Rev. A. B Elliot, Rev. A. J. Briggs and Dr. B. F. Davis. The report of the above committee was an able and pointed one, deprecating stingy members of the church and lazy, timid stewards. It says: "Let the preachers put away a man-fearing spirit, and boldly denounce the sin of covetousness in the church, and educate the people to their duty and obligation in this matter; and let the stewards discharge their duties faithfully, zealously and systematically. Your committee would respectfully recommend the following as a uniform plan of operations in supporting the ministry: Let the stewards, at the end of the year or at the beginning of a new Conference year, make an assessment for the adequate support of the minister, and submit their report to the church meeting at an early day for their approval. Then let that meeting appoint a judicious committee to apportion the same among the members, according to their several ability to pay neglecting no member. Then let the stewards divide the work among themselves, collecting from each member quarterly the amount assessed, passing none by, thereby interesting the whole church, and be careful not to neglect the friends of the church," etc.

The Committee on Sabbath Schools, of which Rev. A. J. Briggs was chairman, offered with their report the following resolutions, which were adopted:

1. That it is the duty of our pastors and people, wherever a sufficient number of children can be obtained, to establish Methodist and not union schools, where we can teach our children the glorious doctrines of a free salvation.

2. That in order to attain the highest development of the Sunday school interest, we recommend the appointment, by the Annual Conference, of an agent to travel through our bounds to look after this interest, and to stir up our people to its support, and that it shall be the duty of the pastors to co-operate with him in this great work.

(CONCLUSION NEXT WEEK.)

Theology is a science; religion a spirit. The mere theologian may prosecute his task in a logical and exact manner, but the system he erects may be as dry and lifeless as a statue or a skeleton.

We should act with as much energy as if we expected everything from ourselves; and we should pray with as much earnestness as if we expected everything from God. —Flavel.

It does us good to admire what is good and beautiful. But it does infinitely more good to love it. We grow like what we admire. But we become one with what we love.

The true wealth of a community lies in the integrity of its citizens, and its chief honor arises, not from the possession of great riches, but the possession of true men.

SPURGEON AND THE BISHOP OF OXFORD.

During the debate in the House of Lords on the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the Bishop of Oxford, Dr. Wilberforce, attempted to make a point in favor of State aid by quoting from one article of Mr. Spurgeon's in which the voluntary system was defended, and another in which the poverty of some ministers was lamented. His lordship held the two articles up to ridicule, and endeavored to excite the merriment of the peers over what he deemed a ridiculous inconsistency. But he has fallen into the hands of the Philistine, and if he, with the journals that indorsed his weak witticisms, do not smart for it, it will be because Mr. Spurgeon has more charity than his titled opponent. The reply Mr. Spurgeon published in the English papers is as follows:

Sir: I have asserted frequently the superiority of the voluntary principle to that of State support in the matter of religion, and I have also at other times lamented the poverty of many ministers whose stipends are subscribed upon the system which I prefer. The two things appear to me to be quite consistent; but several of the newspapers judge otherwise, and one or two of them have printed my two statements in parallel columns, as if they contained a self-evident contradiction. The Bishop of Oxford was evidently much amused by the now well-worn paragraph, and being in a facetious vein, felt moved to read quotations from my two letters for the delectation of the peers of the realm. I am happy to have afforded some little mirth to the grave and reverend bishop, and would willingly share in it; but I am quite unable to see the point of the joke. Perhaps a parallel case may render my obtuseness less remarkable.

If the Bishop of Oxford, after having, in such a becoming manner, with such solid reasoning, defended the union of church and State, should nevertheless be found at some future day pleading for starving curates, or even preaching for the excellent society which relieves distressed clerks in holy orders with pecuniary grants and bundles of cast-off clothing, or if we should hear him deploring that a clergyman should, according to advertisement in the Rock, be subsisting upon buttermilk and potatoes, would his lordship be charged with inconsistency, and would it be commendable for some humorous member of the venerable bench in tones of mimicry to make him the subject of public ridicule? The case is precisely parallel to mine; but if there were any fun in it it would surely lie in the folly of the person who should imagine the non existent inconsistency. The poverty of some dissenting ministers is an argument against the voluntary principle only as far as the extreme distress of a considerable number of the Anglican clergy is an argument against State support. The painful evil of clerical poverty exists under both forms of maintenance, and it ought not to be made the ground of mutual attack and recrimination, but should be deeply deplored and manfully grappled with. From reasons not essential to either system a great evil arises; a zealous emulation as to which shall sooner rid itself of the mischief would be most honorable, but to twit each other with sorrows is as unwise as it is ungenerous.

Every man who speaks freely what he believes, and follows truth with a confident unreserve, will be open to the charge of inconsistency, and yet there will be only an apparent ground for the accusation. Such, I am sure, is the fact in this case. If I advocate the voluntary system, must I shut my eyes to its failures, or be impeached for folly? Must I defend its workings as absolute perfection, or else be grossly unreasonable in preferring it? If I point out its shortcomings in order to amend them, am I self-convicted of inconsistency? It may seem so to the Bishop of Oxford, but I claim the right to differ from him without being ridiculous. One illustration, and I will no further occupy your space. Suppose that two farms in Ireland are put in comparison. I declare my preference for number two, and yet regret that it is much depreciated in value by an incorrigible bog. A gentleman who vehemently advocates the superiority of farm number one, hearing my two statements, resolves to make me his laughing stock at the next agricultural dinner, and being in the full sway of his oratory, exclaims: "This Mr. Spurgeon, to whom some people look up so much, has spoken in a certain letter most glowingly of the farm which he is weak enough to admire, yet I will read to you from a document in which he admits that there is a horrible and irreclaimable bog upon it. Ladies and gentlemen, the absurdity is manifest even to the blind; but what prospect is before you if his judgment is followed? What say you to universal quagmires? How would you feel if your homesteads and estates were all turned into quivering morasses, and if the fine property of his lordship should be transformed into a vast slough of despond?"

In some uncivilized rural nook there may be a benighted population sufficiently moonstruck to admire the logic and applaud the humor of such observations; but even with so congenial an audience the acclamations would soon be silenced when the conveniently forgetful orator was reminded that his own favorite farm, about which he could not utter sufficient laudation, was afflicted with a bog equally bottomless with that which he so much decried. It is probable that our imaginary orator would scarcely have sense enough to wish that he had not spoken; in this only does this case differ from that of Mr. Samuel Wilberforce. Yours truly,

C. H. Spurgeon.

Clapham, July 3, 1868.

At the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday morning, Mr. Spurgeon, in preaching from "God, even our own God, shall bless us," availed himself of the occasion to give another reply to the Bishop of Oxford. He said: "It is not the instrumentality that makes the church irresistible. We heard it said the other day that the religion of Jesus Christ could not be expected to prosper unless it had a fair start given to it, and, strange to say, that observation did not, as you might suppose, come from an infidel, but it absolutely came from a bishop. A fair start, indeed! Put up the religion of Jesus Christ anywhere, and it asks for nothing. It only wants its own inherent strength to be developed, and to be let alone by the kings and princes of this world To be let alone did I say? Yes. Let these kings and princes oppose it if they like, only let them withdraw from it that deadly thing, their patronage, and the truth of God will always prevail, against every obstacle. We do not tremble, then, for the success of the church of Christ, though the servants of God be poor or comparatively weak in numbers, for we know that 'God will bless us;' and, if we be few, we remember that the twelve unlettered fishermen who first went out to plant the church were fewer still, yet that they made old Rome to shake from end to end, and leveled colossal citadels even with the ground; and so shall it ever be with Christianity if only God shall bless her with the ancient might that made her strong in days of old."

Near Basle, in Switzerland, in the Pilgrim Mission, there are some sixty or seventy brethren receiving instruction in a three years' course of study, and fitting themselves for missionary work. Mission experience is gained in the sixty neighboring towns and villages. Manual labor is combined with mental pursuits. Nearly seventy acres of land and meadows are being cultivated by their hands, and all the clothes and shoes for the institution are made upon the premises. They bake their own bread, take care of the gardens and stables, manage the kitchen, the washing, and all the rest of the household work. The missionaries who go forth from this institution have no salary, but are satisfied with the apostle's ration—"Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." About 120 are pastors and schoolmasters among the Germans in North and South America; and they have three mission fields of their own in Palestine, Egypt and Nubia.

A Gentle Rebuke.—A lady riding in a car on the New York Central railroad was disturbed in her reading by the conversation of two gentlemen occupying the seat just before her. One of them seemed to be a student of some college, on his way home for a vacation.

He used much profane language, greatly to the annoyance of the lady.

She thought she would rebuke him, and on begging pardon for interrupting them, asked the young student if he had studied the languages.

Student—Yes, madam, I have mastered the languages quite well.

Lady—Do you read and speak Hebrew?

Student—Quite fluently.

Lady—Will you be so kind as to do your swearing in Hebrew?

We may suppose that lady was not annoyed any more by the ungentlemanly conduct of this would-be gentleman.

The Apostle Paul's Salary.—Hunger, thirst, fasting, nakedness and peril; persecution, stripes, death. Very much like the salaries of some preachers now-a-days; only Paul received more.

CHINESE STREET JUGGLERS.

A letter from China to the Chicago Tribune says:

"Street jugglers and mountebanks abound in Canton, and in fact in every Chinese city. They also travel from place to place throughout the country, displaying their feats and picking up a little cash here and there. As a general thing their juggling feats do not amount to a great deal, yet some of them are very clever, and would create fully as much theatrical furore in the United States as did the Japanese performers. Sword-swallowing and stone eating appear to be the commonest feats, and operators of this description can be seen in almost every street. One fellow, however, performed a number of feats in front of our hotel which demand from me more than a passing notice. He stationed himself in the centre of the street, and having blown a blast upon a bugle to give warning that he was about to begin his entertainment, he took a small lemon or orange tree, which was covered with fruit, and balanced it upon his head. He then blew a sort of chirrupping whistle, when immediately a number of rice-birds came from every direction and settled upon the boughs of the bush he balanced or fluttered about his head. He then took a cup in his hand and began to rattle some seeds in it, when the birds disappeared. Taking a small bamboo tube, he next took the seeds, and putting one in it blew it at one of the fruit, when it opened, and out flew one of the birds, which fluttered about the circle surrounding the performer. He continued to shoot his seeds at the oranges until nearly a dozen birds were released. He then removed the tree from his forehead, and setting it down, took up a dish, which he held above his head, when all the birds flew into it, then covered it over with a cover, and, giving it a whirl or two about his head, opened it and displayed a quantity of eggs, the shells of which he broke with a little stick, releasing a bird from each shell. The trick was neatly performed, and defied detection from my eyes. The next trick was equally clever and difficult of detection. Borrowing a handkerchief from one of his spectators, he took an orange, and cut a small hole in it, then squeezed all the juice out, and crammed the handkerchief into it. Giving the handkerchief to a bystander to hold, he caught up a teapot, and began to pour a cup of tea from it, when the spout became clogged. Looking into the pot apparently for the purpose of detecting what was the matter, he pulled out the handkerchief, and returned it to the owner. He next took the orange from the bystander and cut it open, when it was found to be full of rice. He performed a number of very pleasing feats, but I have given enough to satisfy the reader that they are equally as expert as the Japanese."

How Men Make Epochs.—Life is short and art is long. In the secular sphere it is conceded that the powerful minds are those who rigorously confine themselves to one department of thought. Newton cultivated science and neglected literature. Kant wrought in the quicksilver mines of metaphysics for fifty years, and was happy and mighty in his one work. These men made epochs, because they did not career over the whole encyclopædia. And the same is true in the sphere of religion. The giants in theology have dared to let many books go unread, that they might be profoundly versed in Revelation. And the mighty men in practical religion, the reformers, the missionaries, the preachers, have found in the distinctively evangelical elements of Christianity, and their application to the individual soul, enough, and more than enough, to employ all their powers and enthusiasm.—Dr Shedd's Homiletics.

The stress for funds felt by the American Board does not prevent its wise managers from sending out laborers. On the 9th inst. Rev. Thomas W. Thompson sailed for Peking, China. On the 11th Rev. Messrs. Burbank and Knapp, with their families, left New York, on their return to Central Turkey. They were accompanied by the two Misses Ely, of Cheektonaga, New York; Miss Tracy, of Andover, who goes to join her sister, Mrs. Livingston, at Sivas; and Miss N. J. Dean, of Detroit, who will assist Miss Rice at Oroomiah in her labor among the women of that region. Rev. Messrs. M. P. Parmelee and family, J. E Pierce and R. M. Cole, with their wives, and Miss Van Duzee, sailed on the 8th of August; and Rev. C. H. Wheeler and family, with Misses Parmelee and Baker, on the 15th.

Recent returns show that the Quakers number, in Great Britain, only 13,185 persons, and in Ireland 2,898. This makes the body very much smaller in the United Kingdom than in the United States, where they number about 100,000.

Interesting to Inquisitive Travelers.

The following notice, which is said to be posted in one of the Ohio river steamers, will be found of interest to all travelers who like to gather promiscuous information of matters and things by the way:

Notice.—Any person or persons desirous of obtaining information in regard to the distances to the various points along the river; the probable time of reaching them; the length of time the boat will remain; why she will not remain longer; if the passengers would have time to go to the post office; the depth of water; the geological, chronological or agricultural statistics of the country; population, wealth, crops, land, or prominent characteristics of the inhabitants; their origin, average height, complexion, color of hair, eyes and eyebrows, nature of disposition; rate of increase or decrease; number of births, marriages, deaths, or serious attacks of illness; relative proportion of male and female progeny, and probable reasons therefor; causes of decline in prosperity, and different ways in which such disasters might have been and probably would have been avoided had they been known at the time; relative proportion of mules, horses, sheep, hogs, or negroes; number of bushels of corn to the acre; quantity of cotton; average size of watermelons; breadth of beam of all steamers on or near the river and the Gulf of Mexico; how many times the boat stops between any point and any other point, and why; exact distance from Catfish Bend to Skipwith; and thence to a point where the willows project into the river between Sucker's Point and Skinny Kidink; length of time the boat will remain at Vicksburg; amount of cholera and measles prevalent, and why; medicines used for different local complaints, proportion of different ingredients thereof, and the reason for adopting such proportion; amount of freight and prudence carried each trip, the points to which it is carried, the price and whether the boat is always paid promptly; how many passengers are aboard; their names; history and destination; their probable business and their qualifications for attending to the same; whether married or not, and if not, why not; and in general all details of information as to their future hopes and prospects; whether the gentlemen playing cards are professional gamblers; if so, how much has been lost; if not, how much has been won; whether the pilot is a temperate man or not; the probable danger of fire, explosion of boilers, being sunk, or any other accident; whether the clock is exactly right or not; whether the duties of a steamboat clerk are not extremely arduous; how long each clerk has been employed; whether he has ever been blown up, sunk or burned up, and why; and, in general, all information of a geological, natural, legal, medical, theological, metaphysical, biographical, historical, anatomical, statistical, astronomical, arithmetical, grammatical, ethical or intellectual character, can be accommodated by calling upon any of the gentlemanly and courteous clerks connected with the boat; or in their absence, any information will be furnished by the pilot, engineer, mate or deck hands.

"Does the name of Grant furnish any guarantee for the future of the Radicals? The people are not ready to believe it. Grant is politically only a promise and a possibility. Respectable men are not willing to doubt his honesty or his upright purpose; but these do not always qualify for success in such a strife as he must control to save the people from his party. He may prove capable; he may not; and it is a time when the people cannot trust their future to such a chance. Therefore the doom of radicalism seems to be burned into the popular brain, and on such reasoning as we have hinted the people appear to drift toward what they regard as the least of two evils, without faith in the Republicans and little hope in the Democrats. Men on either side count for little; it is the history of the Radical party that condemns it. Democracy has a bad history, too, but its sins are trivial by comparison. If this faction ever desired to reconstruct society, it was in the interest of the white man. The word taxation hardly occurs in its history, and it never aimed a blow at the Supreme Court or sought to cripple the government in the person of the executive. It sympathized with the South in the war, and that can be forgiven by a people who are at last coming to look at the Republicans as the South looked upon them when the war began. If, therefore, the history of the Democracy were darker than it is, the history of Radicalism would be infinitely beyond it in infamy. It is upon these broad views and judgments of parties that the people move."—New York Herald.

BISHOP DOGGETT.

Bishop Doggett preached on Sunday, the 30th ult., morning and evening, at Trinity Church, in Baltimore. This was an occasion of more than ordinary interest. It will be recollected that Trinity Church recently united with the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It is one of the most beautiful and comfortable churches in our city, situated on the corner of Madison avenue and Preston street. There is not to be found in Baltimore a more eligible location for a house of worship, nor a more united, public spirited and generous people than those who compose the congregation at Trinity. The bishop's visit, after his formal and public recognition of the congregation as a member of the great family of Southern Methodism, was most opportune. His sermons on the occasion were finished compositions, massive in intellectual vigor, chaste and beautiful in conception, full of evangelical doctrine, and delivered with an unction and pathos which thrilled the hearts of his large and delighted auditory. We have heard Bishop Doggett often, but never with more heartfelt pleasure than on Sunday last at Trinity. The General Conference has done the church and the world a great service in giving this gifted son of Virginia to the episcopacy. We pay him no fulsome compliment when we pronounce Bishop Doggett the "Richard Watson of America." He, with his honored colleagues, is doing the work of an evangelist. Since May last he has attended thirteen district conferences, two camp meetings, and in a few days starts for his Annual Conference among the Choctaws in the Indian Territory.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

A PRESENT SALVATION.

Such is the salvation offered to us in the Gospel—always a present salvation. It is the privilege and duty of the ministry to proclaim it. It does not require much time for a soul to be converted. Conversion must, in the nature of things, be instantaneous. The steps which precede may be slow, and the subsequent development of the new life is gradual and progressive. But the point of transition from a state of condemnation to that of pardon cannot be otherwise than instantaneous. One moment the soul is in a state of death, the next in a state of life, and the passage from the one to the other is in the twinkling of an eye.

The act of justification must be of this nature. The moment that the sinner believes he is justified. It is not susceptible of degrees; neither are we able to conceive of it as gradual. If conversion embraces the soul's spiritual regeneration, and peace and the witness of the Spirit, these must be consentaneous and immediate. When sin is forgiven this inward work also takes place. It may not always be recognized, not always clearly and fully apprehended. To the consciousness of the pardoned soul this work and witness may at first be dim and feeble, but they are bound to be there in some degree of assurance and comfort.

What is gradual in religious experience must apply to those processes which go before. Of this character are conviction and repentance. The soul often lingers a long time in the bondage state, and by painful and slow stages reaches the point of justifying faith. And afterwards the consciousness of pardon and sanctification grow and develop from a very low degree of assurance, until the light is clear as the perfect day. Here is the gradual work—not in the fact of conversion, but in what precedes and follows. The sun travels long and slowly toward and from the equator, but there is a moment when he crosses the line.

It is this view of conversion which makes the salvation of the Gospel a present salvation. If it were necessarily gradual, thousands might be lost before they could reach it, and immediate deliverance from death and condemnation could not be offered.

Although the preliminary steps are often gradual, they certainly need not be so. If days and weeks or months and years must be spent in the sorrows and unrest of penitence, before the sinner attains to pardon, there would be really no present salvation in the Gospel, and many must be lost before reaching a saving experience. We cannot suppose that a system devised for the recovery of the lost is embarrassed by any such fatal necessity. All the processes embraced in the soul's awakening and contrition may be, and often are, pressed into a brief space of time. The conversions recorded in Scripture are generally sudden in reference to the entire work of conviction, repentance, regeneration and assurance. Doubtless there were many converted on the day of Pentecost, who never before heard of Christ; and many who, for the first time, were brought in contact with the truths of the Gospel. Within a few hours, at most, the entire experience transpired, beginning with the first serious thought and ending in regeneration and the witness of the Spirit. The jailer could have been but a part of a single night in passing from the first earnest awakening to a comfortable sense of acceptance through faith in Christ. In keeping with these illustrations are all the promises. It is always now. The privilege of being saved in the present moment is constantly insisted upon. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

It is this property which makes the Gospel a gospel indeed, and stamps it as the power of God. No preacher faces an audience that may not be saved, to the last and worst man in it, before the sun goes down upon his work. Seed-time and harvest may follow closely upon each other. The fields are white to the harvest already, without waiting for the months to revolve. Immediate effect should be the preacher's aim now, and the conversion of some souls at every proclamation of his message. He has been sowing long enough; now bring the seed basket and the reaping hook, and ply them with earnest faith at once.

Let Zion's watchmen all awake to the duty of urging a present salvation home upon the consciences of sinners. Let them display the present gracious privilege of immediate deliverance to the mourners in Zion, and let them insist upon holiness amongst believers. Salvation, in all its length and breadth, is a present salvation. It is the privilege of ministers so to offer it. Our faith and effort should be directed to this end—faith in the Gospel to arrest and save the worst of sinners while they hear; and effort which, in earnestness and directness, thrusts aside every inferior object, and bears down upon the single purpose of pulling souls out of the fire. *

GOOD NEWS.

Through the church papers and private letters we learn that the week of prayer has been generally observed by our people, and that the churches are enjoying a time of unusual refreshing. A brother, writing from Shreveport, speaks of a glorious meeting in Marshall, and that gracious revivals are prevailing throughout east Texas, and at several points in north Louisiana.

The week of prayer has doubtless, in most instances, been the beginning of the good work. In many cases it has been found expedient to continue the services beyond the appointed time. Indeed, that one week of united prayer has given a wonderful impetus to the work of God, through all our borders. From Kentucky, Missouri and Maryland to Texas we hear of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. This autumn is to be a time of ingathering, and a season of abundant harvest. The church is enlarging her coasts on every hand, and the blessing already given to many sections should encourage all to put forth every effort, and to expect a visitation of mercy.

The Lord is evidently on the giving hand now. The set time to favor Zion is come. "God will help her, and that right early." The country is in a paroxysm of political excitement, but this need not prevent the progress of religion. When the public mind is agitated, and the passions of men are aroused, there is the more need of grace and its blessed fruits of peace and righteousness. Besides, when the mental action is quickened, and the people are wide awake, the Gospel is more likely to take hold of their attention. Whatever disadvantages there may be, there are some strong elements favorable to deep and powerful religious awakenings.

Under the present system of receiving members, pastors should be watchful, and carefully foster the new members. These novitiates, if we would save them, should be kept in continual contact with the ordinances of the church, instructed in the class meeting, and put into the prayer meeting harness as soon as possible. The rules should be read and explained at every appointment, and the duties of church membership carefully set forth and enforced. The fruits of a revival are largely lost for want of this care. Formerly a good number were dropped before the six months' probation expired. There is no such facility now, and if we would guard the church on the one hand, and save those who have entered it, we must nurse the young converts with the wisest care and the greatest solicitude. *

WHAT ARE THEY AFTER?

A month ago the leading editorial of the Independent was headed "The Cry of Blood," and now we have an editorial of the Zion's Herald, headed "A Pool of Blood." The one is the principal organ of the Congregational Radicals, the other of the Methodist Radicals of New England. These two papers, in point of ability and circulation, are fair exponents of the ecclesiastical wing of the Radical party; and as the church element is the most pronounced of all others in that powerful organization, two such political leaders appearing in two such organs, at this present time, are of no ordinary significance. These articles are based upon the letter of Governor Warmoth to the President. His statement that one hundred and fifty loyalists had been murdered in six weeks in Louisiana is the text. This statement was enough to produce an immense Radical sensation. But since its publication it has been challenged in every possible way, and declared to be the most monstrous exaggeration ever perpetrated by one who makes the least pretension to keep within the boundaries of ascertained facts. A call for the names of the murdered, by every newspaper and by all the taxpayers of the State, remains unanswered. It has not been yet shown that fifteen men were murdered in the said six weeks, of all colors and parties, and from all causes, not to say one hundred and fifty. This story having been nailed to the counter, the attempt to put it into circulation again must be for mischief. The Independent exclaims:

"Why stands the President idle? * * What if a hundred and fifty men had been murdered in the State of New York from the 15th of June to the 31st of July, on account of their political opinions? Would not the whole land be horror-struck? And, if Andrew Johnson, on being asked by Governor Fenton to render assistance for the prevention of such butcheries, should stand as stolid as Isis, and from his heart of stone give no helpful answer for days and days, would he not be execrated by all mankind? But is not human life just as precious to men, women and children in Louisiana as in New York? Is the murder of an American citizen less a crime in the South than in the North?"

Well, all this horror seems genuine, and it is a pity that it should be wasted upon so pure a fiction. Still the thing, as a political card, is too good to lose. The Zion's Herald is therefore determined that the public shall be harrowed thoroughly with the ghastly creation of the Louisiana official. It begins: "General Banks lately said to a friend in Washington, 'the South will be a pool of blood.' That future has become a present. It is already a pool of blood." It seems rather unkind in us to spoil such a fine frenzy as this; but we assure the editor of that venerable church paper that he is laboring under a great mistake. There were as many men killed in any one of the Middle States during the said six weeks as in this State. And more than this, we might venture to say that no larger number of men have been killed in the Southern States, since the war, than have been in the Northern, making all allowance for difference in population. The Zion's Herald goes on to say that the blood of these Louisiana victims cries against the Senators and the Chief Justice who refused to impeach President Johnson—"cries most bitterly from the ground!" We can say for the comfort of these worthies—for why should they be left in this agony?—that the mistake about this thing has been discovered, fortunately before the event, and not after it, as in the case of Mrs. Surratt and Capt. Wirz. When Governor Warmoth answers the question of the public, and gives the names of the murdered loyalists, it will be time enough to charge the conscience of Mr. Chase with their ghosts; and we believe that he can afford to sleep soundly for some time yet.

But all this pretended horror means something. It is kept up, by solemn warnings, to the effect that if General Grant is not elected there will be war. It seems to us as if those people who were made rich by the war have made up their minds that the country shall not have peace. They wish for war, and hence call out that it is coming. They are stirring up the negroes, arming them, drilling them, and inflaming them with fresh hatred all over the South. The official men in the South, who are playing into the hands of the war-loving party in power, are themselves fresh men from the North, put in office by negro votes and bayonets, who make out as bad a case as possible, and furnish food for sensation by doing all they can to bring about bloodshed, and by reporting murders that were never committed.

The silence and inaction of the Radical leaders is another item in the present situation. It indicates to our mind that some unusual attempt is in contemplation to hold the government despite the will of the people—to take away the electoral vote from the masses, or, it may be, to depose the present chief magistrate and to elect General Grant President for four years by Congress. In other words, that a coup d'etat will be attempted. To demonstrate a necessity for this is now the labor of all such papers as the Independent and the Zion's Herald—that the country must be saved from blood and war by legislative violence. This would be a natural conclusion to the career of a party that has steadily destroyed every right, every law, every constitutional check, and every office which seemed to stand in its way to power; which has plunged the country in debt like an ocean—twenty-six hundred millions; which, since the war, has collected from the people, in taxes, fifteen hundred millions of dollars, and yet has not reduced the debt one cent, but, on the contrary, has in the same period increased it by thirteen millions.

THE SUPPORT OF OUR BISHOPS.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 1, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through your paper, to request the preachers and others who have received our circular in reference to the support of our bishops, to reply as early as practicable. In making their returns they will please give the name of the Conference to which they belong, or in which they reside.

Responses are coming in rapidly.

Time of Holding the Miss. Conference.

FAYETTE, Miss., Sept. 3, 1868.

To the Members of the Miss. Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter from Bishop Kavanaugh informs me that, after hearing the opinions of all who would speak out on the subject, and maturely considering all the circumstances of the case, he has concluded to let the time of our Conference remain as appointed by the bishops, for the 18th of November. This, I think, much the best for the present. If, after a fair discussion in full Conference, the majority should hereafter prefer the first half of December, I have no doubt but the bishops will accommodate them as far as practicable.

G. JONES.

A CARD.

I have been troubled with dropsy for over four years, and have suffered under the treatment of [illegible] physicians, both in this city and New Orleans, the most [illegible] were without help in my case, and [illegible] for me. I was [illegible] condition. I had to get up [illegible] for nearly twelve months. At one time I was sitting up. I had to get up [illegible] night. My body swelled to an alarming size. My lower extremities swelled until they burst, from which [illegible] gallon of water ran [illegible] every twenty-four hours. For over three months I was given up to die, by friends, family and physicians, in this helpless condition. I fortunately fell into the hands of Dr. D. M. Dunlap, an old practitioner, who had just located in Ocean Springs, by whose medical skill, and the blessing of God, I am now cured and feel no symptoms of the disease returning. I am thankful to the doctor and to God for this miraculous deliverance from the very jaws of death.

I take pleasure in recommending Dr. D. M. Dunlap to all afflicted with this dreadful disease. CHARLES WALKER,

Late Captain Steamer Creole.

P. S.—Dr. D. M. Dunlap is located at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, and will give his attention to the treatment of dropsy, old sore legs, chronic diarrhea, chlorosis and chronic diseases in general.

EDUCATION IN CHINA.

SHANGHAI, China, July 14, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Many of our own people may be under the impression that the Chinese are not an educated people, or that they do not regard learning as of any very great importance. But let me assure them that the Chinese value education very highly. There is not a man or woman who does not desire the education of the children, and the simple reason why many are not taught is the poverty of their parents. There is one encouragement in China for a father to have his child taught, and that is, the public government offices are open to all who study and will gain them by merit. This is an inducement paramount to everything else with the Chinese, for two reasons: the one is that it is the road to fame and honor, and the other is that it is the sure road to wealth, riches and influence. It is open to the poorest and to all who desire to contend for it. And some have been known to contend for it until their locks had become whitened with age, and at last, when almost ready to give over the struggle, they have gained the point of their highest ambition, and have returned home amid the praise and admiration of their friends, and the wonder of the multitude. Now, while the present government is in a state of anarchy, these public offices are purchased by many for large sums of money; but with the educated, rank and position obtained in this way is never viewed in the same light as that obtained by merit, and the preference is always given to those who obtain it by merit. The man who buys his degree never receives the praise of the people, but they respect him for his wealth, and for his wealth only. Not many days since the viceroy paid a visit to Shanghai, and before his arrival you could see a great stir among the officials and soldiers of the place. He was heralded long before his arrival, and under officials began to quake and fear, for they evidently expected to undergo a severe ordeal in the way of examination. They were examined, and one officer, quite high in office, failed to give a satisfactory account of himself as to the manner or plan adopted to obtain his degree. The consequence was, his rank was taken from him and he was degraded. The system of education which prevails in China certainly deserves the praise of all men, and has proved to be the safeguard of the country. This empire has existed for ages, under its present form of government, and is the oldest in the world, while other kingdoms and empires have flourished and fallen into decay. Egypt, Greece and Rome are gone, and are no more what they were; but China stands the same.

The mutual feeling of responsibility among the people in regard to education has no doubt been the means of keeping the country in its present united form. They need the elevating and purifying principles of the Christian religion to [illegible] regeneration and a [illegible] people. They have had many changes, one dynasty after another, war after war, but the people are the same, their laws are the same, their customs and manners are the same. Filial obedience is taught in every school, and enjoined in every family, and may be said to be the very foundation of their institutions. It may be God has blessed them for the observance of this commandment, for it is more strictly enjoined and taught in China than in any other country. I will write you again on this subject at a future day.

Your's truly,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

A GROCER in Quebec advertises "the peculiar delicacies of the far-off Ind, and the finely-flavored and humanizing leaf of the still further Cathay; the more exciting, though not less delicious, berry of Brazil, and the spices, sugars and luscious fruits of the Antilles; the sugared condiments and the blood enriching wines of the Mediterranean; and the salt cured and brain renewing ash of our own stormy gulf." What he means to say is, that he sells tea, coffee, sugar and codfish, cheap for cash.

TRINITY Independent Methodist Church, Baltimore, with its pastor, has formally gone over to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Bishop Doggett publishes the following card: "I have been officially informed, and take pleasure in publicly announcing, that the Trinity Independent Methodist Church, of the city of Baltimore, formally adheres to the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and that the Rev. Charles H. Hall will, for the present, continue to serve as its pastor."

THE Methodist Recorder says that "at a recent Wesleyan bazar, held in High Wycombe, England, the principal local curiosity was a drum used by the mayor of Wycombe, in 1777, to drum Mr. Wesley out of town, referred to in Mr. Wesley's Journal."

WE overlook our own faults on account of our merits, and others' merits on account of their faults.

MARRIED.

In this city, on the 3d instant, by the Rev. Robt. J. Harp, Mr. JOHN C. BAKER, of Mobile, Alabama, to Miss ELIZABETH, daughter of the late Rev. Fielding Bell, M. D., of the Louisiana Conference.

OBITUARIES.

DEATH OF REV. NATHAN COFFEE.

There are some facts solemnly admonitory and others peculiarly encouraging in the Christian and ministerial experience of this worthy brother. Nathan Coffee was born in Maury county, Tennessee, June 14, 1823. He was raised to be industrious and self-reliant, but his literary advantages were exceedingly limited. About 1840 he came to Jefferson county, Mississippi, and while overseeing the plantation of Rev. Robert Malloy was awakened and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Soon after, while at church one day, he was so overwhelmed with a sense of his guilt as an unpardoned sinner that he feared he would lose his self-control if he remained in the house, and precipitately left it. He rode but a short distance, when he dismounted and fell on his knees to implore the forgiveness of his sins, and in a few moments Christ was revealed to his broken but trusting heart as his all-sufficient Saviour. He threw himself at full length on the ground and gave vent to the raptures of his new-born soul. Some of the congregation coming in sight, and seeing him prostrate on the roadside, supposed he had either fallen from a sudden attack of disease or had been disabled by a fall from his horse, and hastened to the place only to find him in the first raptures of the new birth. For a brief period his piety was undoubted by his fellow-Christians. But this promising start in the divine life was of short duration, and no one on earth knew why it was so but himself. He felt "inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the Gospel," but such was his utter want of literary qualifications that he said in his haste he could not and would not attempt to preach, and that he would let no human being know that he had any such convictions of duty. His spiritual enjoyments declined rapidly, and, while he continued his connection with the church for several years, his membership was merely nominal.

On the 30th of June, 1847, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Melissa M. Johnson. About 1850 or 1851 he moved to Louisiana, where he lived several years, mostly at Trenton. He met with some heavy pecuniary losses, but returned to Mississippi with a competency, and purchased the plantation in Jefferson county on which he died.

After his return to Mississippi he prospered in business and soon acquired a handsome estate, but in the midst of plenty he was unhappy, because his heart was not right with God. In May, 1858, he attended a protracted meeting at Cane Ridge Church, where, after a severe struggle with an unyielding and unbelieving heart, he was fully renewed in his first love. Almost as soon as he was assured of his restoration to the favor of God he again felt called to preach. Said he: "Fifteen of the best years of my life have been irrecoverably thrown away by my disobedience to God! If I rebel again the consequences will be fearfully disastrous and fatal! I must try to preach at all hazards!" He immediately became a zealous and very useful layman in the church. He excelled in leading penitents to an immediate trust in Christ, and was instrumental in the conversion of numbers.

In the fall of 1859 he was licensed to preach and admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference. As he had been a successful overseer—was well acquainted with the peculiar characteristics of the negro, and was the owner of slaves—he was selected for that delicate and difficult department of our work, and he did it well, acceptably and usefully. While in the regular work he was one of the most diligent students of theology I have ever known. His sermons were not showy, but remarkable for good arrangement, solidity and orthodoxy. After liberating several years, in returning home from one of his appointments, his horses ran off and threw him so violently from his buggy that he was wholly disabled for several months. At the end of that year the presence of the Federal army in our vicinity prevented any of us from attending the Annual Conference, and his presiding elder receiving no report from him, and not knowing his ability to fill any pastoral charge in his reach, thought it best to ask for him a temporary location, as he had done too little in the itinerancy to justify his superannuation. I think Brother Coffee permitted these apparently unavoidable circumstances in connection with the final disasters of the war to have a depressing effect upon his religious feelings and purposes, for he was no more the diligent student, and active, zealous preacher, he had been.

He died on the 13th of July last. During more than a week's severe illness his mind was wandering, and he said but little about his spiritual condition, except on one occasion, when he said he was not afraid to die. A few days after his death his only child—a very worthy and promising son, in his twentieth year—died of a similar disease. He was an undergraduate of the Mississippi University, and as his church membership was at Oxford, I presume his pastor will write a suitable obituary.

W. G. MCGAUGHEY, P. E.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made. At Conference my age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the official members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

DISTRICT MEETING.

To the Ministers and Official Members of the Vicksburg District, Mississippi Conference, of the M. E. Church South:

DEAR BRETHREN—Our District Meeting was held last year in Port Gibson, at which we appointed Fayette as the place of our next meeting, subject to the call of our presiding elder. But, unfortunately for us, we have no presiding elder to call us together. The bishop assigned to this episcopal district has been written to for advice, but at this late date no answer has been received; and as we cannot elect our lay delegates to the coming Annual Conference without a District Meeting, after due consultation we have concluded to invite you to meet at Fayette on Thursday, September 17th, at ten o'clock A. M.

We respectfully request the ministers in charge to notify their official members as soon as practicable. We expect to have a protracted meeting in progress, to be continued through the following week, and solicit as many of the brethren as can to remain with and assist us in our meeting.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

TRUST YOUR MOTHER.

Trust your mother, little one;
In life's morning just begun
You will find some grief, some fears,
Which perhaps may cause you tears;
But a mother's kiss can heal
Many griefs that children feel;
Trust your mother; seek to prove
Grateful for her thoughtful love.

Trust your mother, noble youth;
Turn not from the paths of truth;
In temptation's evil hour
Seek her, ere it gains new power.
She will never guide you wrong;
Faith in her will make you strong;
Trust your mother; aim to prove
Worthy of her fondest love.

Trust your mother, maiden fair;
Love will guide your steps with care;
Let no cloud e'er come between—
Let no shadow e'er be seen
Hiding from your mother's heart
What may prove a poisoned dart;
Trust your mother; seek to prove
Worthy of her faithful love.

Trust your mother to the end;
She will prove your constant friend;
If 'tis gladness wings the hour,
Share with her the joyful shower;
Or if sorrow should oppress,
She will smile and she will bless.
O be trustful, loving, true,
That she may confide in you!

THE TWO RICH YOUNG MEN.

A servant of God sat in a bamboo chair in the front of a mission house in the East Indies. It was the evening of the day; the sun's heat was still very great, and not a breeze moved the lofty palm trees which grew by the wayside. He looked faint, weary and careworn; for he had sat in that chair all the long day, teaching the simple truths of the gospel to any who would hear them. Some of the Hindoos, as they stopped for a moment, only laughed at his words, and then turned away to mock. Others were too prond to listen, and passed along on the other side of the road. Before this missionary was a small table, on which lay his Testament and a bundle of tracts. From time to time he gave one of the tracts to any passing traveler who would receive it. And as he gave it, he spoke a few words of truth, and then his lips moved in prayer that God would bless the message to the soul of the poor stranger.

The sun was just going down in the sky, and the missionary turned to go into his house to rest. At this moment there stood before him a young native, with a beautiful turban on his head, and wearing a robe of yellow silk. It was plain that he was of the Brahmin class, who are the highest people of the country, and are held sacred, for they alone may wear a yellow robe. The noble stranger made a low salaam, or bow, and then sat on a low and matted stool.

"I have come to tell you," said the young Brahmin, "that I have seen the sin of idol worship, and now believe that the Christian religion is the only true one." "And what do you want me to do?" asked the missionary. "I wish you to baptize me," said he, "that I may be known as a disciple of Christ." He then went on to say that he was a rich man, for he had four large estates and fifty thousand pounds in money; that among his own people he stood in the highest rank, and that he had a mother and many friends who loved him. The missionary told him to think well of what he was about to do. "For," said he, "you have riches, honor and friends; you ride in your own carriage, and live like a prince. But all you have will be torn from you if you profess the Christian faith. Then think of what is before you."

When God the Holy Spirit enlightens the mind and changes the heart, a man is willing to give up all for the sake of Christ. To know and feel the love of Jesus is better than houses and land and gold. "I hear what you say," said the rich young man, "about my rank, my property and my friends; but I put the whole in one scale, and I put an interest in Christ in the other, and they are lighter than vanity."

A few months passed away, and the honors and riches of this Hindoo were gone. His mother and friends would no longer own him. The poorest servants who once fell at his feet, as though he were a god, now passed him in scorn, and were they to have seen him dying they would not have given him the smallest help. He had become a Christian; he had given up all for the sake of the gospel; and he was without an earthly portion. That he might not eat "the bread of idleness," he hired himself to a merchant as a clerk, with a salary of fifty pounds a year, and lived happy in his poverty as became a follower of Christ.

About eighteen hundred years ago there was another rich young man, who was concerned about his soul. In his day the greatest of all teachers was on earth, and to him he went; and as he stood where Jesus was speaking to the people, he heard the gracious words: "Suffer the little children to come to me, and forbid them not." As he listened he perhaps thought, "Surely, if he is so kind to children, he will not refuse to attend to me;" and he said, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" We may suppose he was a kind and hopeful youth, for when "Jesus saw him he loved him." But the Divine Teacher tried his heart by saying to him, "Sell all that thou hast, and come, follow me." The young man turned away in sorrow, for "he was very rich." He loved the world and his wealth better than the service of Christ.

Now, let us look to ourselves. Which of these two young men are we like? What are we willing to give up for Christ? The young Hindoo gave up four large estates and fifty thousand pounds; the young Jew clung to his riches. It is true, we are not tried as they were; yet we are called to give up the ways of sin, the follies of the world, and the service of Satan. Christ only requires of us that we should forsake what is hurtful and sinful, and which ends in misery. He does not ask of us anything we truly need; and he has told us that for all we now give up, from love to him, he will more than make up to us in heaven. Let us, then, look to Jesus; and, because he has loved us unto death, let us give him our hearts, and live to his praise.

PRAYING FOR THE POOR.—We are taught in the Bible to pray for the poor, but in the Scriptures a great deal more is said about giving to the poor than about praying for them. Probably no class of people are more frequently remembered in prayer than the congregation of the Lord's poor, and yet it is to be feared that most of those who pray for the poor do but little if anything to supply their wants.

A farmer whose cribs were full of corn was accustomed to pray that the wants of the needy might be supplied, but when any one in needy circumstances asked for a little of his corn, he said he had none to spare. One day, after hearing his father pray for the poor and the needy, his little son said to him: "Father, I wish I had your corn."

A NOTABLE DINNER PARTY.

When Mr. Disraeli launched his first tale, and found it to be a great success, Lord Lytton, then Mr. Edward Lytton Bulwer, had achieved the proud place as a novelist which he has ever since retained. The aspirant for literary distinction had long admired at a distance the renown of his senior; and, encouraged by the reception which his own maiden effort had been received, he did what young authors under similar circumstances are apt to do. He sent to Mr. Bulwer a copy of 'Vivian Grey,' writing at the same time an apologetic note, and giving reason for the liberty he had taken. The letter with its accompanying gift, were at once acknowledged, and Mr. Disraeli was requested to name a day for dining with their recipient. It happened that Mr. Disraeli had arranged for quitting England on the day but one after receiving this invitation. He wrote to say so, and the morrow was fixed for the symposium. Four gentlemen sat down at Mr. Bulwer's table on that occasion; one being, of course, the host; another, Mr. Disraeli; the third, a man shy but evidently intelligent, for though he said comparatively little, his remarks, as often as he hazarded them, were keenly to the purpose; the fourth, a private friend of the host, need not be specified. It was an evening not to be forgotten, because then, as now, both Lord Lytton and Mr. Disraeli shone in conversation. The party broke up about midnight, and the host and his friend were left alone together. After discussing Disraeli, the question was put, 'Who is your silent guest?' 'He is one of the ablest men I know,' was the reply. 'He was my cotemporary at college. He is now a barrister; and, mark my words, he will attain the highest honors of his profession. His name is Cockburn.' The climax to this little bit of domestic history or gossip is very remarkable. The two brilliant novelists and the painstaking lawyer, who dined together some forty or more years ago, comparatively obscure men, have all risen to positions of eminence in the state. Mr. Cockburn is Lord Chief Justice of England; Mr. Bulwer, after serving as Secretary of State for the colonies, has become a peer of the realm; and Mr. Disraeli, on more than one previous occasion Chancellor of the Exchequer and leader of the House of Commons, is now First Lord of the Treasury.—Blackwood's Magazine for August.

A GOOD CHARACTER.—The character is like white paper—if once blotted, it can hardly ever be made to appear as white as before. One wrong step often stains the character for life. It is much easier to form a good character at first than it is to do it after we have acquired a bad one; to preserve the character pure, than to purify it after it has become defiled.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Advice to Beginners in Fruit Culture.

BY A. S. FULLER.

I am in constant receipt of letters asking advice in regard to fruit culture. These requests come mainly from young men who wish to engage in the business, but have little or no capital to begin with. Many of them appear to think that to secure a fortune it is only necessary to procure a piece of land and plant it with fruit trees or bushes. But, as this is a very erroneous view of the subject, I take this opportunity to point out some of the difficulties which every successful fruit grower has had to overcome before he has been able to make the business pay a profit upon the investment.

The first thing to be decided, after procuring the land on which to grow the fruit, is what varieties are best adapted to the location and soil. We all have our preferences in regard to kinds; and we may desire to cultivate none but the very best in quality, or those of large size. But in fruit culture climate and soil are very often all-powerful; and we are compelled to grow what we can, and not what we most desire. It is just here that we find the great stumbling block of pomology. Hundreds of men have gone into fruit culture with more enthusiasm than wisdom. Consequently, they had no time to seek advice, nor to consider whether certain varieties or species were adapted to their location or not; but they planted largely of everything that was known to be good. Now, is it any wonder that such men fail in making fruit culture a profitable business? They certainly would not succeed in any other employment if they were to adopt a similar system. It is quite probable that the principal reason why beginners in fruit culture make so many blunders is that they start out with the idea that it requires but very ordinary skill to accomplish the greatest feats ever performed in horticultural science; the acorn becomes an oak without the aid of man; the wild grape vine climbs the tall tree, and this produces fruit, although never pruned or cultivated. Then why should we talk so much about the science and practice of horticulture, when it is all so very natural? Almost every novice in fruit culture takes this view of the subject; and I regret to say that there are a few men having some experience who do much toward leading beginners into the same path by recommending little or no cultivation, forgetting that nature has one aim in producing her fruits, and mankind, usually, quite another. Now, my advice on this point is, never think of planting anything that is not worthy of the best care. But the question may be asked, when is one to know what kinds are worth cultivation until they have been tried? Of course, it is only by experience that we can determine the value of the different varieties. Still it is not always necessary for every man to make separate experiments for the purpose of deciding upon the value of particular kinds of fruits; for, if it were so, then we should make very slow progress.

ADVANTAGE OF BOOKS.

A man who is about engaging in fruit culture should read a few of the best works to be found on the subject. This will give him a general idea of the business. He should then make up his mind as to what one or more families of plants he will cultivate. But, before this decision is made, it is well to know whether his soil or location is well adapted to the cultivation of these kinds; for it must not be forgotten that one section of the country, without any regard to soil, is often far better suited to certain kinds of fruit than another. In the older States a man need not go astray; for the experience of our older horticulturists is a pretty safe guide. For instance, if a young man has made up his mind to make grapes a specialty, he should then visit some of the most successful grape regions of the country, and examine the soil, location, varieties, and mode of culture; and then judge for himself whether his own location or soil is a favorable one or otherwise. If he be desirous of growing the different kinds of small fruit, let him adopt the same plan, visiting the nearest fruit grower, and learn from him which are the most profitable varieties. Supposing a man is located in West or South Jersey, and wants to grow raspberries and blackberries, would it be advisable for him to visit the great raspberry fields on the Hudson for information in regard to varieties? No, not by any means; for the very best in that section are entirely worthless a few miles further south. But, should the man visit the extensive plantations of William Parry, Collins and other fruit growers of West and South Jersey, he could acquire in one hour as much practical knowledge as he would be likely to obtain in ten years of personal experience. These men have demonstrated the fact that particular varieties are adapted to their location, and that others are not. The same information can be obtained from men of experience in all sections of the country; and young men who fail to make use of information which is so readily obtained scarcely deserve to be successful.

UNSELLABLE VARIETIES.

There may be men who will recommend certain varieties, because they have plants of the same to dispose of. Therefore, I would say, go and see the plants when in fruit, and satisfy yourself as to their value, before purchasing. A man had better travel a thousand miles, if by doing so he can decide as to the value of a fruit which he desires to cultivate extensively.

There is another point which is worthy of some consideration, which is, whether it is best to cultivate several varieties or only the best one. It is an old adage that, if a man has several irons in the fire, some of them are likely to burn. But, if we have only one iron, and that burns, our occupation is gone. I believe it better to make a specialty of certain kinds; but not to trust all upon one. If we grow nothing but pears, and a late spring frost kills the flowers, our income, for that season, is gone; but the expense of cultivation is the same, whether the trees produce fruit or not. It is just the same with other kinds of fruit. But it is seldom that all fail in any one season. I have known strawberries to be entirely destroyed, while raspberries and blackberries were uninjured. This season blackberries are exceedingly scarce; but strawberries were abundant. Consequently, the man who has both is on the safe side.

A SUCCESSION OF FRUIT.

In cultivating the small fruits, I believe it to be the best policy to make the division about equal between the strawberry, raspberry and blackberry, as a general rule. Of course, there will be exceptions; for, if a man has a suitable soil, he will not neglect the currant, gooseberry, cranberry or grape.

Early strawberries are sometimes killed by late spring frosts. Therefore, one should have at least one early and one late variety. When the strawberry is past, the black raspberry should succeed it. This is always a safe crop, and as a general thing pays a handsome profit. There are also early and late varieties of this berry. But the grower must decide for himself which one is most desirable, for markets differ. In some instances they are in greater demand at one time than another. The red raspberry and blackberry follow close upon the former, thus giving a succession for nearly or quite three months. Now the same boxes, baskets and crates used for one of these berries may be used for all; and, by growing several kinds, we are enabled to keep the capital invested in the marketing apparatus constantly employed for several months, instead of a few days, as would be the case if only one kind were cultivated.

ADVANTAGES OF CULTIVATING A SUCCESSION.

Besides the above-named advantages, a less number of hands are necessary to take care of a certain number of acres when occupied with several varieties than when but one is grown. It will require the same number of days' work in the season, but distributed over a longer period of time. A man may be able to obtain ten hands at one time, but not twenty; and it is well for a fruit grower never to place his property at the pleasure or mercy of hired help. I have always observed that the man who so arranged his plans that he was sure of a steady income was far more likely to get rich than the one who was on the lookout for large sums at one time; and this is the principal reason why I advise beginners in fruit culture to grow a few of the best known varieties and cultivate them well.—Read at the Fruit Growers' Club.

EDUCATION IN ENGLAND.—Parliamentary returns show that one third of the men of Hertfordshire, Cambridgeshire and Norfolk, who married in 1865, had to make their mark, instead of signing their names to the register; and that more than one-third of the men of Suffolk, Bedfordshire and Staffordshire were in the same discreditable predicament. In South Wales more than one-half of the women were unable to write their names when married; and in Bedfordshire the proportion of uninstructed is very little less. In Liverpool, out of 23,740 who were apprehended in 1866, only 258 could read or write well; while of 720 children dealt with under the juvenile offenders' act, not one could do so. For the 148,000 marriages in 1864, 42,000 of the men and 58,500 of the women signed with a mark. The Birmingham Education Society states in a recent report that no more than a half of the children 'educated' at the national schools of England, or belonging to the classes for which these schools are maintained, can so much as read and write.

WATER.

Water and Its Domestic Uses.—All waters naturally contain the soluble elements of the soils they pass through; that is to say, they contain in variable proportions very numerous compounds. In water destined to domestic use one generally meets in certain quantities only the following substances (excepting mineral waters):—Alumina, iron, lime, magnesia, soda, potash or ammonia, silica, sulphuric, chlorhydrate, phosphoric, nitric and carbonic acids. In many waters we find, also, traces of bromine, of iodine, and several other substances which appear to exercise a powerful action on the hygienic qualities of water, and the study of which on that account must be prosecuted with much attention. To the mineral substances named above we add nearly always, in more or less considerable proportions, organic substances of extremely variable composition and properties, but the influence of which on the quality of the water is always very troublesome. Lastly, natural water contains, in a state of dissolution, more or less oxygen, nitrogen, and carbonic acid gas, the proportions of which must be taken into serious consideration.

The chemical properties of a drinkable water are evidently the result of the whole of the substances it contains in a state of dissolution; it is also important, before studying that complicated synthesis, to study the special influence of each of the substances found in water.

It is well understood that we shall speak only of the substances in dissolution; the substances kept in suspension in the muddy waters will be studied in the article on filtration.

Before going further, let us remark that it is very difficult to say in what state of combination are found in water the elements that analysis has separated; and it is only by hypothesis that we group between each other the bases and acids. To give only one example: If we mix dissolutions of chloride of sodium and sulphate of magnesia, we shall truly obtain by evaporation chloride of sodium and sulphate of magnesia, while by another mode of separation (the action of the cold) we shall collect sulphate of soda, chloride of magnesium being left in the mother water.

We are then placed between two hypotheses, and it will be very bold to prefer one to the other.

The very dilated dissolutions present, besides, a remarkable fact; it is the dissolving action of some salts on each other. Thus, a water which contains a few grains per quart of some salts becomes a solvent more energetic for some substances than if it was pure. In the same manner nearly all the organic substances which exist in water exercise a dissolving action on the mineral substances which often deposit when the organic matter is destroyed.

Lastly, the presence of carbonic acid also modifies the state of the salts, helping to the dissolution not only of the carbonates and phosphates, but also of the sulphates.

In presence of the impossibility of giving the rational formulæ of waters, it seems to us more convenient to simply expose the elementary results of an analysis of water—that is, the quantities of bases and acids; thus we leave to each one the care to draw the relative consequences of the mode of grouping the molecules in the liquid, and in this manner the results obtained by different chemists at different epochs become more useful and more comparable.

If the arrangement of the molecules is mysterious, it is real; and it is evidently to that molecular grouping that the special taste of waters must be attributed—taste which may be weak, and which often is only perceptible to experienced palates. We shall name as example the salts of lime and magnesia, which in the diluted state in which they are met in drinkable waters present a determined taste and give by their mixture a liquid less sapid.

We know that alkalies communicate to water a sweet taste, a little flat; however, when in the same time the water contains silica, that effect is not sensible.

These principles being given, we shall examine the different compounds that water can contain; following the order in which they have been enumerated, we shall divide them into three groups: the inorganic solid principles, the organic solid principles, and the gases.

FIRST GROUP.—Inorganic Solid Substances.—Alumina and iron are met in small quantities in drinkable waters. Iron is accompanied with special organic substances. Waters originally ferruginous are deprived of their iron by contact with the air, and they are disagreeable to drink all the while the metal is not eliminated. Lime and magnesia exist in waters in the state of carbonate dissolved in carbonic acid or combined with the sulphuric, nitric or hydrochloric acids. A little quantity of lime—0.02 to 0.04 per quart—with an equivalent quantity of carbonic acid, appears to be one of the conditions for the good quality of water, and we can admit that good water contains lime in that proportion, which, we must say now, is contrary to the opinion that a water is better when purer.

Often the salutary influence of magnesia has been doubted. It seems difficult to attribute to that substance the inconveniences and the dangers that the water would present when it is in proportion a little sensible. More experiments are necessary to fix the opinion on that point. Whatever it is, the presence of lime and magnesia in too large a quantity renders water improper for domestic use. A water containing too much lime cannot be used to cook vegetables, and it produces on the skin a disagreeable impression. Such a water is called hard, and waters can be classified by reason of their degree of hardness, according to the hydrotimetric indications, (such is the name created by Boutron and Boudet to the analytical indications given by the process of Clarke that they have modified.) We must say a few words on this process.

It is known that the addition of soap water to water gives the latter the property of foaming by agitation; then the presence of a salt of lime, which destroys the alkaline soap to form a soap of lime, prevents the manifestation of a foam which appears only when the soap has been added in excess. The hardness of the water is by reason of the soap added to produce the foam; as that reaction of the soap is equivalent, and the liquid can be tested, the experiments can be compared with each other, and it is easy to appreciate the variations in the hardness of water.

To give an idea of that variation, it is sufficient to say that it is represented in the experiments of Belgrand in the analysis of different waters by the numbers two to one hundred and fifty-five. The waters of some granitic springs have given him two to eleven hydrotimetric degrees; that of some sands, six to twenty-two; while that of tertiary earths have given forty-six to two hundred and fifteen degrees, etc.

The discussion of the results of that analytical process explains the effect produced by the calcary salts; we understand that if with a pure water it requires, for example, to wash the hands, 1.4 of soap, it must take from three to twelve with water more hard.

In the same manner the action of hard water has its importance for the cooking of vegetables. It has been ascertained that it requires one third more time to cook vegetables with water at twenty than with water at four or five only; and we understand that the slowness of the action diminishes the taste of the vegetables and increases the expense in combustibles.

It is principally in the state of carbonate dissolved by carbonic acid that lime exists in water. Sometimes it is found in a very small proportion and with a sufficient quantity of carbonic acid to keep it in dissolution; sometimes the waters are too calcary or the carbonic acid is not abundant enough; in that case the waters produce a hard deposit; several circumstances cause the formation of that deposit—for example, the contact of the air.

These deposits that form calcary water are the most often adhesive to the vessels which receive it. They are then called incrustations. These deposits are found only with carbonate of lime; the most often an organic substance is met with it, which, without doubt, plays a part in the agglomeration as in the formation of the urinary calculus.

The processes to ameliorate such waters are numerous; it must avoid the contact of the air; or, better, add carbonic acid; or boil the water so as to obtain the deposit of the calcary substances; or, as Clarke has proposed, add lime, which saturates the excess of carbonic acid. MM. Buff and Wertsmann have proposed the use of silicate of soda. From all these processes the ebullition is the one which gives the best results, when the deposit is separated as fast as it is found.—Prof. H. Dussauce, in American Artisan.

DR. ARNOLD once lost all patience with a dull scholar, when the pupil looked up in his face and said: "Why do you speak so angrily, sir? Indeed, I am doing the best I can." Years after the doctor used to tell the story to his children and say: "I never felt so ashamed in my life. That look and that speech I have never forgotten."

SIZE OF LEGISLATIVE BODIES.—There are 261 members of Congress; 54 in the Senate and 207 in the House. In England, the House of Commons numbers 558 members, making the largest legislative body in the world. In the French Corps Legislatif there are 376 members; and in the North German Parliament 280.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana, was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Con.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church)
AND BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

These foreign periodicals are regularly published by us in the same style as heretofore. Those who know them and who have long subscribed to them, need no reminder; those whom the civil war of the last few years has deprived of their once welcome supply of the best periodical literature, will be glad to have them again within their reach; and those who may never yet have met with them, will assuredly be well pleased to receive accredited reports of the progress of European science and literature.

TERMS FOR 1867.

For any one of the Reviews	$4 per annum
For any two of the Reviews	7 "
For any three of the Reviews	10 "
For all four of the Reviews	12 "

Under the care of

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A man who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

THE HOME MONTHLY, New Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following

Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. Thus meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

DOLBEAR COMMERCIAL COLLEGE

On the corner of Camp and Common sts.

(In the Spacious and Elegant Story Building,)

Is constantly in session under able Professors. It was founded in 1832, and is chartered by the State. Its former students may be found as Principals or Book-keepers in a large portion of the old houses of this city and over the Southern States. Ladies or gentlemen can attend the COMMERCIAL COURSE; or Book-keeping, Penmanship, Mathematics, English, French or Spanish, separately. A business education, that enables one to earn $1000, $2000, or $3,000 annually, is the best fortune parents can give their sons. A DIPLOMA from this College is a passport in all Commercial communities. Ladies and Gentlemen are invited to call. We have ample arrangements for 1000 students the present year. Liberal arrangements made for Clergymen or their sons and crippled soldiers' Catalogues sent to all who desire them.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Pianos with patent Combination Sonnet GRENCH

Patented August

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA MALE COLLEGE

AT AUBURN, ALA.

The Fall term of this Institution will open on the FIRST WEDNESDAY in SEPTEMBER next, and close on the 20th December. Besides the regular course of studies for graduation, large facilities are afforded for instruction in the Commercial and Agricultural branches. Separate schools for these branches, in connection with the College, were authorized at the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. A student not wishing to take either the regular or a partial literary course in the College, may confine himself to either of these Departments, and in a short time become qualified for business.

The Preparatory Department, with competent teachers, will be under the special supervision of the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The [illegible] demand for our leading articles that characterized the latter part of last week has [illegible] your mo'ber; the generals' market has ceased for her thoughtfulness to the prevailing dullness. We notice, however, rather more animation in the execution of small orders from the country, not only in staple goods, but also in groceries and Western produce. Operations in sugar and molasses are mostly confined to the imports from Cuba, and very little has been done in tobacco. New cotton continues to come in freely, and, meeting only a limited demand, has sold at reduced rates.

The weather has been clear, and pleasant, but our accounts from the interior are no more encouraging than last week.—There can be little doubt that excessive rains and the boll worm have done serious injury to the cotton crop in some localities.

The river has fallen six inches since our last report, and is now thirteen feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—We left the market, at the time of our last report, ruling at 28 to 28½c. for Low Middling and 30c. for Middling, since which, under a slack demand, and the decline noticed above, prices have given way one cent per lb. On Saturday, although factors evinced a disposition to meet the demand more freely, yet the movement being restricted by discouraging accounts from New York, and most of the previous orders having been filled, the sales were confined to 200 bales, taken by two or three parties, at figures indicating a falling off of one-fourth of a cent, Low Middling to Strict Low Middling ruling at 25¾ to 26¼c., and Middling at 27c., with occasional small transactions at a fraction less. On Monday the demand was still less active, although there was rather more inquiry for small lots, and only 100 bales changed hands, at still easier prices, Low Middling selling at 25½ to 26c., and Middling at 26½c., Strict Middling being held at 27c. On Tuesday, with a more ample supply, additional arrivals, and a decline at New York, the market opened with a continued downward tendency; but although factors evinced a willingness to submit to a further reduction of one-half cent, there was very little movement until later in the day, when a few buyers came forward and took 351 bales, at irregular prices, from one-half to one cent below Monday's figures.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 850 bales.

The receipts proper since Friday evening amount to 2,875 bales, against 1,507 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 1,368 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we now quote as follows:

Low	—	to —
Ordinary	—	to —
Good Ordinary	—	to —
Low Middling	25	to 25½
Middling	25½	to 25¾
Strict Middling	26	to 26½

Sugar.—The market has shown very little animation since our last review, and the business doing is merely in a limited retail way. The principal sales were on Saturday, when 200 hexes Nos. 12 and 13 Cuba were taken for the city trade and for shipment, on private terms. The stock in first hands embraces about 5,000 boxes and 100 hogsheads. Nos. 11 and 12 are quoted at 12 to 12½c., Nos. 13 and 14 at 13 to 13½c., Nos. 15 and 16 at 14½ to 15½c., and Nos. 17 to 20 at 14¾ to 16c. per pound. The demand is principally for Nos. 11 to 16. Nos. 17 to 20 are neglected. There is some little Louisiana sugar in market, which is retailing slowly at 13½ to 15½c. per pound for fully fair to prime.

Molasses.—Cuba molasses is in good supply, but there is no demand, and in the absence of important sales for about three months we are compelled to omit quotations. We hear that there are a few barrels Louisiana molasses on hand, retailing slowly, but have not learned at what prices.

Flour.—Dullness has been the prevailing feature since our last report. Prices, however, remain unchanged. There has been some inquiry for the trade and for shipment, but without resulting in large sales. On Saturday and Monday the sales were confined to 4,000 barrels, at $7 for superfine, $7 20 to $7 25 and $7 37½ for single extra, $8 to $8 25 for double extra, and $9 to $10 for treble extra.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed on the 1st Monday, 1863.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year, and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the tuition in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon minds, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their prices, monthly, should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

Terms—Board and Tuition per session, $300.

Payments—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

From April 1 to close of June, 12 weeks 12 00

Incidental Fees—First session, $1 50; second session, $1; third session, $1 50. All payments in advance.

Indigent young men can have tuition free, but will be expected to pay the incidental fees.

Boarding can be had (including lodging, washing, fires and lights) in the families of citizens at $2 per week.

Boys who have made some progress in Arithmetic, English Grammar and Geography can be received into the Preparatory Department. Terms, same as above named.

OWNED BY THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Fall Session of this well-known institution will open on WEDNESDAY, the 30th day of September, with a full corps of experienced teachers.

The following are the terms for a session of four and a half months, payable one half at entrance and the remainder on the 1st day of December:

Board, including washing, fuel and room-rent, in gold	$67 50
Tuition in English and Latin, in currency	25 00
French, in currency	15 00
Music, in currency	30 00
Use of instrument, in currency	7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency	2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Traveling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

FRANKLIN SEMINARY.

THE subscriber would inform his friends and the public that he has in charge FRANKLIN SEMINARY, and has a good school, which is designed to be permanent, in successful operation, and that he is prepared to receive any number of pupils that may be entered to his care. He would board, in his own family, some eight or ten pupils.

His experience enables him to assure patrons and friends that the education of their children and wards will be secured by confiding them to his institution.

The following are his terms of tuition, payable in advance, per session of five months:

Elementary Branches	$20 00
Higher Branches	25 00
Latin, Greek, etc	30 00

French, extra.

Board can be had, in good families, for $15 per month, exclusive of lights and washing. Present session ends on the 7th of February, and the next ends on the 10th of July. No vacation until July. Pupils can be entered at any time. For further particulars apply to

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

GREAT EARTHQUAKE IN SOUTH AMERICA.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The steamer Guiding Star has arrived, bringing the following news:

There was an earthquake on the 13th, along the coast of Peru and Ecuador, whereby 32,000 lives and $300,000,000 of property were lost. A rumbling sound preceded the shock, and the sea was terribly agitated. Arequipa City, with 35,000 inhabitants, passed away, leaving scarcely a vestige of the place. Four hundred lives were lost here. Arica, 12,000 inhabitants, was destroyed—not a house left standing; 500 perished here. There was a tidal wave forty feet high, carrying vessels further ashore than ever before known.

The United States storeship, with $1,800,000 worth of naval stores on board, was capsized and all hands lost. The vessel rolled over and over, and smashed to atoms. The United States steamer Wateress was carried half a mile inland, and is hopelessly high and dry—one sailor drowned.

The Peruvian corvette America was carried ashore, losing 30 lives.

The American merchantman Rosa Riveria, the English ship Chancellor and the French bark Edwards were lost.

The towns of Iquique, Moyneqna, Locemba and Pesuqua were all entirely destroyed, and over 600 persons perished at Iquique. American merchants lost heavily, but they were nearly all insured.

Torcas, Ihorra, San Pablo, Atunloque and Imatna are in ruins. Where Cotocachi stood is now a lake. The population of the above last named towns were almost entirely lost. Panicho, Pnellards and Cschequsque were also destroyed. The dead are so numerous that the survivors are compelled to fly from the stench.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—At the final interview between the Tennessee legislative committee and the President, the President stated that he had given their application mature consideration, and concluded to instruct Gen. Thomas to furnish whatever troops were necessary to maintain peace and sustain the present Tennessee government. Gen. Thomas can call on the Secretary of War for additional troops when necessary. The committee afterwards visited Schofield.

The following is the dispatch of the committee to the Legislature: 'The President will sustain the civil authorities. Orders have been issued to department commander to sustain and aid the civil authorities, and sufficient force will be furnished to accomplish such purpose.'

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—Neither State nor Navy Department has official reports of the earthquake in South America, though its occurrence is fully confirmed by private letters. The crew of the Fredonia consisted of thirteen petty officers and fourteen hands, none of American birth. At Juquois 600 people were drowned by a tidal wave. At Arequipa the tower of the Church of Saint Cataline is the only edifice left. Nearly all the inmates of the hospitals and prisons perished. The course of the river Chili is changed, and the river emits a sulphurous smell. Mount Mistio is discharging lava and mud. No one dares to go where the city was. People living in tents. At Pancarphata hundreds were crushed by falling houses. At Arics an American bark, loaded with guano, was swallowed. At Trequin 150 lives, mostly of children returning from school, were lost. The town of Shegra was swept away, only 2,500 inhabitants escaping. The niter works at Iquique were destroyed. Loss at Iquique $200,000. Mr. Bellinghurst, British consul, was killed. The American bark Condor was lost—her crew saved. At the Chinoa Islands there was first a hurricane, then an earthquake, then a tidal wave. Several English vessels were damaged, and a Prussian bark was wrecked. Over 300,000 persons are without shelter or bread.

Valparaiso papers state that Humaits was delivered up by a traitorous general. They also state that Parsguay is in a state of revolution, and Lopez dead or a fugitive.

A bloodless revolution has occurred in Panama. President Ponce is in prison, and Col. Correoso proclaimed himself President.

Later.—The Navy Department has just received details of the earthquake.

District Attorney Courtney, Solicitor Buckley and Secretary McCulloch visited the President to-day relative to the New York investigation. It is understood that the President desires Buckley to conduct the prosecution. Though Courtney is willing to have Secretary McCulloch employ additional counsel, he insists on leading the prosecution and declines acting further with Buckley. The result of the interview has not transpired.

Buckley's report to the President reflects severely on New York officials from Courtney down.

The Navy Department's earthquake advices from South America have been anticipated in all essential particulars.

Sherman calls for another cavalry regiment to fight Indians.

WASHINGTON, Sept 15.—Republican majority in Maine, 17,661. Compared with their vote in 1866 the Democrats increase their vote 14,876, Republicans 4,840. Compared with the vote of 1867 the Democrats increase their vote 10,770, Republican increase 16,827. The Chronicle gives the majority 22,000.

BOSTON, Sept. 15.—The chairman of the Maine Republican State Committee telegraphs that the Republicans carried every Congressional district, and also elected all the Senators and seven-eighths of the Representatives. Majority for Chamberlain, 20,000.

THE SEPTEMBER SESSION.

The following call for a session of Congress on the 21st inst. has been issued:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15, 1868.

The President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, by resolution of Congress, adjourned their houses until the third Monday of September, and on that day, unless otherwise ordered by the two houses, they were directed to further adjourn their respective houses until the first Monday of December. In accordance with the request of the Republican members of the Fortieth Congress, the undersigned decide and respectfully recommend that there be a full attendance of both houses on the 21st day of September.

It is not expected that general legislative business will be entered upon at that time, or that the session will be longer than to provide for another adjournment. It is important that there should be such a general attendance of members as will secure the presence of a quorum in each house.

E. D. MORGAN.
ROBT. C. SCHENCK.

THE ORDER TO GEN. BUCHANAN.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The following is the first action under the recent order to Gen. Buchanan:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, Sept. 12, 1868.

Commanding General of Department of Louisiana, New Orleans, La.:

Brevet Major Gen. Hatch, Assistant Commissioner Freedmen's Bureau, reports that there is danger of an assault upon a torchlight procession in New Orleans to-night.

You will so dispose and employ the force under your command as to prevent such an assault and preserve the peace. Please acknowledge the receipt of this dispatch.

JNO. M. SCHOFIELD,
Sec'y of War.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—It is doubtful whether a quorum of the Senate can reach here by 21st inst. If a quorum fails on that day Congress stands adjourned to the first Monday in December.

Rousseau has been assigned to duty under his brevet rank of major general. Buchanan resumes his rank of brevet major general on Rousseau's arrival in the Department of Louisiana.

Gen. Buchanan will command the District of Louisiana under Rousseau.

WHELAN SENTENCED.

OTTAWA, C. W., Sept. 15.—Whelan received the verdict with composure. He asserted his innocence, denied any connection with the Fenians, and attributed his conviction to his being a Catholic. The judge cautioned him against hoping for mercy, and sentenced him to be hung on December 10th.

LONDON, Sept. 15.—Minister Johnson was presented to the Queen to-day by Lord Stanley.

AN AWFUL CATASTROPHE.

We had by telegraph some few days ago brief mention of the washing away of the bridge in course of construction across the Chattahoochee river, at Fort Gaines, Georgia. The following particulars are from the Chattahoochee Mirror:

This morning, (5th inst.,) about eight o'clock, the new bridge being built across the Chattahoochee river, in consequence of the rising waters, which drifted rafts of timber against the temporary structures, washed them away, and the whole came down with a tremendous crash and fatal results, taking nearly the entire second span, which reached the brick pier, a distance from the wooden one of about three hundred feet. The cries and groans of the sufferers, like a panic shock, were soon communicated to the inhabitants, and our city was in general commotion, rushing to the river to save the perishing ones. Skiffs and flatboats were procured, and the dead and the wounded were loaded along on the banks of the river from the ruins of the fallen bridge, as they drifted down the stream.

About thirty hands were employed on the bridge; many were working underneath, and a large number of spectators were also on the bridge at the time it fell. All went down together, from an altitude of about eighty feet.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—A Boston dispatch says Butler has lost the nomination for Congress.

The paymaster general's report for the fiscal year ending June last, shows the cost of reconstruction $1,943,000.

Nothing official from Maine.

The Commissioner of Agriculture has perfected arrangements for exchanging seeds with nearly all the governments of the world.

A quorum of the Senate on Monday is thought improbable. If no quorum, Congress stands adjourned to the first Monday in December by virtue of the terms of the resolution authorizing the September session.

FAITH IN MAN AND CHRIST.

Simple illustrations of the method by which faith may be exercised are often effective in relieving a troubled sinner from doubts and fears. The following incident shows how readily men trust in the word of their fellow-men, and how much more reason they have to trust the word of God:

It was a time of spiritual awakening in a small manufacturing town. The foreman in a department of one of the factories became anxious about his soul. He was directed to Christ, as the sinner's only refuge, by many and by his own master among the rest; but it seemed to be without result. At last his master thought of reaching his mind, and bringing him to see the sincerity of God in the Gospel, by writing a note, asking him to come to see him at six o'clock, after he left 'the work.'

He came promptly, with the letter in his hand. When ushered into his room, his master inquired:

'Do you wish to see me, James?'

James was confounded; and, holding up the note requesting him to come, said:

'The letter! the letter!'

'Oh!' said his master, 'I see—you believed that I wanted to see you; and when I sent you the message you came at once.'

'Surely, sir! surely, sir!' replied James.

'Well, see, here is another letter sending for you by one equally in earnest,' said his master, holding up a slip of paper with some texts of Scripture written on it.

James took the paper and began to read slowly:

'Come—unto—me—all—ye—that—labor,' etc. His lips quivered; his eyes filled with tears; and, like to choke with emotion, he thrust his hand into his jacket pocket, grasping his large red handkerchief, with which he covered his face; and there he stood for a few moments, not knowing what to do. At length he inquired:

'Am I just to believe that in the same way I believed your letter?'

'Just in the same way,' rejoined the master. 'If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater.'

This expedient was owned of God in setting James at liberty. He was a happy believer that very night, and has continued to go on his way rejoicing in God his saviour, to point others to Calvary, and walk in the narrow way.

Reader, if anxious about your salvation, be persuaded to believe God, when he speaks to you in his word, in the same way you would credit the word of an honorable man, and you will obtain peace through the precious blood of Christ. 'He cannot deny himself.'—Christian Treasury.

A Few Facts for Colored Voters.

The Democratic Central Club of the city of Charleston, South Carolina, has recently issued an address to the colored voters, so pertinent, so truthful, and so convincing, that we cannot forbear quoting a few extracts. We strongly urge every colored man in the city to read and ponder well the truths herein set forth. Actuated, as the Conservative party is, by a sincere desire to secure the well being and prosperity of the colored race, it is eminently proper that they should thoroughly understand the position now occupied in the South in relation to the white race. We believe this address will furnish the means and opportunity of their doing so—a plain, unvarnished statement, which extenuates nothing, but places the issue before the world in its actual light:

We are influenced by various considerations to address you, and, in plain and simple language, to tell you truthfully our views and purposes. They are also the views and purposes of the great Democratic party, which, for fully three-fourths of the life of our government, has governed the United States, and is soon about to resume the administration of that government. Among those considerations are the following:

First. We are naturally your friends and you are naturally our friends. Any other relations between us are unnatural and injurious to both. We have the capital and give employment. We own the lands and require labor to make them productive and profitable. You desire to be employed. By your labor alone you can live. We desire to employ you and have your labor—not because it is better, or cheaper, or more profitable to us than the white labor, which will be glad to come and take your place if we are compelled to discard yours and invite it; but we desire your labor because you know us, and we know you. We were born together here, and we have grown up together. In infancy we were nursed together, in boyhood we played together, and we do not easily forget these things for the sake of strangers. Hence it is that we intend to leave it entirely to your choice whether you will be friends with us or be our enemies, and compel us to treat you as enemies.

We know we can do without you. We think you will find it very difficult to do without us. We think it our duty to take care that you are as fully informed in making your choice between enmity and hostility to us, and friendship and peace with us, as we can inform you by telling you the whole truth. The reason that it is our duty to do this is because we are indebted to you for great fidelity in the past, and because we are the stronger, and you the weaker party. It is always the duty of the strong and powerful, besides being just, to be generous.

We have the wealth. The houses in which you live are ours; the lands upon which you must labor or starve are ours. We have education, advancement in the arts and sciences and in civilization generally. You are, for the most part, uneducated, just starting in the career in which we are so far ahead of you. We have the numbers over you; our race is thirty millions or more; yours four millions or less.

We think it our duty to use all these great advantages justly and generously for your welfare, for your advancement in education, in the acquisition of property, and in the pursuit of every good thing which is meant by, or makes up what is meant by "civilization," if you will allow us to do it.

Second. We see and know that you are hurrying on into great and immediate trouble and danger to yourselves and ours. You are proposing to bring on a conflict between yourselves and ourselves. If it comes—if you bring on that conflict—it will be a conflict between your race and our race. There are indications that you already think yourselves prepared for this conflict. You have for some time practiced aggressive and hostile conduct toward us. You have assembled as a party or class, and you have deliberately interrupted us in our meetings, insulted and assaulted individuals among us, pelted our houses with stones, insulted our families by vulgar and profane language, disturbed the night quiet by unearthly whoops and screams, threatening "death to the rebels"—meaning ourselves; assaulted and threatened the police and police stations of the city. You are arming and drilling in warlike practices, and this for aggression and attack, not for defence; because you have no cause or pretence of cause for expecting aggression or attack from us. You have never been disturbed, not even in your riotous and disorderly conduct. We, of course, know that you are urged and enticed on toward this great danger and trouble by wicked white men. We know them, who they are, and all about them; what they say, and what they are doing, and we also know better than they or you can know the sure and swift penalty which will fall upon particular men when the conflict begins. But this will not then save you. You will not then be excused because you have been deluded and cheated by these infamous men.

* * * * * *

Do you remember the events of 1861—the attack on Fort Sumter, and the commencement of the war? We are sure you do remember. There were then more people in the United States who believed we had good cause of complaint—who were opposed to the Republican party and its purposes—than there are now who approve of the political supremacy which has been given to you. The Republican party was then, as you are now, in a minority. Mr. Lincoln and his party went into power by a minority vote of the whole people. A great majority of the American people was opposed to the war. It could not have been carried on against us. Artful and designing men of the Republican party, seeing this, contrived to lead us on till they made us appear before the world as the aggressors and the authors of the war. Fort Sumter was reduced and the national flag fired on and lowered by us. And then it was at once the North, and the East, and the West were united against us. So it will be with you. You will begin the conflict. You are now beginning it. If you go on, our race, with its thirty millions, will be as one man against your race, with its three millions. Ten to one! Do you see it? Do you doubt the result, or your inevitable fate? Consider what will then be your condition which you will have accepted and chosen in exchange for your present hopes and assurance of equal laws, equal justice, peace and peaceable prosperity. Again, (third,) we know and fully understand the arts and falsehoods by which the false and infamous white men excite you into your present danger. You are arming and drilling in warlike practices to protect your freedom—to protect your being again reduced to slavery! These infamous men tell you it is the purpose of the Democratic party to restore slavery—that we intend this—that if you vote with us you will vote to make yourselves again slaves. No falsehood ever exceeded this in wickedness and audacity. If you would stop to think one moment you would see and detect it. We will expose it to you; we will not ask you to take our word for it, but we will establish what we say by public records. It is a double falsehood. For they know that we are not only guiltless of the charge, but we are the party which insists that your freedom is fixed and forever settled; that it is not and cannot ever be questioned or discussed; while the Republican party have made it an open question, and have left it so; if they prevail now, at some future day the lawful extinction of slavery may be denied and discussed. We will tell you how this is: On the 6th day of January, 1865, Congress agreed to an amendment of the Constitution of the United States, to be submitted to the several States for their approval, in the words following:

"ART. XIII. SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

This could not become a part of the Constitution without the consent and approval of three-fourths in number of the States. That number of States could not be had without the Southern States or several of them. The abolition of slavery, therefore, could not be made lawful and binding without our aid. We gave that aid promptly and honestly.

We who address you were parties to it. It was done by the Legislature of 1865, on the 19th day of November. Other Southern States followed, until, on the 18th day of December, 1865, a sufficient number of the Southern States, namely: South Carolina, Arkansas, Alabama, North Carolina and Georgia, having ratified and approved of the amendment, the Secretary of State of the United States published the lawful certificates, with the great seal of the nation thereto, and from that day the amendment and the eternal abolition of slavery, and the perpetual freedom of the colored man, became the irrevocable, highest law of the land. But mark you! This is what we say. It is what the Democratic party says and insists upon, and is now struggling to establish. Not so the Republican Radical party.

* * * * * *

One thing is sure and inevitable—if you persist in maintaining such a government we cannot and will not maintain you. It will not be hostility to you—not a desire to oppress or compel you—but that irresistible, unwritten law of necessity, of self-preservation, which nature has made for us, and made it stronger than all human laws, because it is of divine origin. That law will compel us to call in the hardy and thrifty white man from abroad and substitute his labor for your labor. He will succeed to your peaceful homes and you will follow the path and the fortune of the Indian, who thought as you now think, and he rushed as you now blindly rush upon your inevitable fate. You have your choice now. You may never have it again. If you are true to yourselves, true to our mutual interests and welfare; if you stand by us we will stand by you, and there will be peace and prosperity and all their blessings shared between us. If you choose otherwise, and stand by your present associates; if you adhere to them, and insist that you will put them to govern us, and you submit yourselves to be governed by them, then you must go your ways and we will go our ways. We will not molest or trouble you. You may in peace run your course of wretchedness and ruin. We shall not follow you. We must and we will take care of ourselves. Think of these things sedately and calmly. They are vital to you. We know it, and for your own sake we entreat you to be guided by truth, and nothing else, in forming your judgment. It will be a judgment which will adhere to you for good or evil, and to your children, and the generations that will follow them.

LONG SERMONS.—A lawyer who consumes three hours in a question of law relating to the ownership of a barrel of apples, is indignant at his minister for exceeding twenty-five minutes in unfolding one of the great principles of morality, in the observance of which the tolerable existence of society depends. The judge who fills two hours with his "opinion" on the right of the counsel to challenge a witness, grumbles at his minister because he has prolonged the discussion of fundamental laws of human progress to thirty minutes. The physician who takes ten minutes to prepare the medicine for a headache is nervously restive if his minister spends only twice as many in attempting to relieve a chronic heartache. The belle who has spent—how long?—in adjusting the bows of her bonnet is remorseless in her criticisms on the minister who does not finish his meditations on the Fatherhood of God in fifteen minutes. The fop, who has combed, and stroked, and perfumed, and waxed his moustache for half an hour is mortified past endurance if the poor minister is not through his discussion of the immortal life "inside" of twenty minutes.

THE TRADE OF NEW YORK WITH THE SOUTH.—A few days ago the following paragraph appeared in the Brooklyn Union, a Radical paper:

We are assured, on what seems very good authority, that a meeting of the leading dry goods firms of New York was held yesterday afternoon, at which it was resolved that they would sell no more goods to merchants in the Southern States, except for cash, during the present season.

The New York Journal of Commerce, referring to the above, says:

It turns out that the representation is wholly false. We have inquired personally of "the leading dry goods firms of New York," and they declare that they never heard of this meeting until this paragraph was published, and that they propose to make no change whatever in relation to their custom in the Southern States.

AUTUMN.

Come with thy whispers low,
Tones which the heart doth know,
Breathing of death below,
Oh, sweet voiced autumn!

Hush to their quiet rest
On the earth-mother's breast
The browned leaves, thy bequest
To her kind bosom.

Bid thy sad music thrill
Round every vale and hill,
Till it each heart doth fill,
Æolian autumn.

Touch with thy glowing hand
All the green forest band,
And through the beauteous land,
Golden crowned autumn,

They all will change their dyes,
Like the red evening skies
Where the sun's pathway lies,
Magical autumn.

Bring quiet vesper hours,
When warm winds shut the flowers,
Bring summer's farewell showers,
O gifted autumn!

RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS.

Just wealth enough to keep away
Of want the direful scene;
Just health enough to gild the day,
And make life's course serene;
Virtue enough to act that part
Which is devoid of sin;
Courage enough to ask the heart,
"Art thou secure within?"

LETTERS FROM CALIFORNIA.

NUMBER THREE.

Mr. Editor: Doubtless my good friends, the farmers, who have read so patiently my two previous letters, will be offended with me if I do not in this one speak definitely of those matters which specially concern them. I was raised on a farm; my father, father-in-law and principal friends are farmers; I have been particular to learn all I could of farming in Alabama, and have had special commission to do the same in California. I shall confine myself within the limits of what I honestly believe the truth in all that I write, for it would be a very serious matter for me, a minister of the Gospel, to induce a family here to be disappointed.

The climate of California varies with every locality. At San Francisco it is in the highest degree peculiar. Some may not be aware that it seldom rains in summer. During the winter, from October to May, it rains probably somewhat more than in Alabama during the same months, and is cold, but scarcely ever cold enough for ice, with an occasional frost and sometimes snow. This applies to the valleys. In the mountains, of course, it is colder. From May to October, we may say, no rain falls. Grain and grasses ripen in the bright sunshine, and remain for months safe and sound, waiting to be garnered. During summer, in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys, it is about as hot during the day as in Alabama; but the heat does not enervate, because it is dry and a breeze blows all the while. The nights are always cool. After the hottest day you need a little cover at night, and sleep soundly. I can speak for myself. I have not slept so soundly for seven years as since I have been here. Sunstroke is never heard of.

Along the coast, both north and south of San Francisco, the summers are cooler, on account of the direct breeze from the sea, which, in July and August, blows from the northwest, and is cool; in the winter from the southwest, and is warm. At San Francisco, during these months, this breeze comes in through the Golden Gate so powerfully as to make these the coolest months in the year. We spent ten days there in the middle of July, and speak from experience. We wore flannel and our heaviest winter clothing all the time. At sunrise it was calm, and as cool as October; at ten o'clock, the sun shining pleasantly, it was like September; at noon the breeze was up and it became sensibly colder; and so on, until by four o'clock we had regular November weather. Still there was no freezing nor frosting; but, because of the dryness of the air, it is easy to cure heavy meat during these months. This is peculiar to San Francisco, where, it may be said, they have no summer, and the climate is bracing all the time. This coast country is healthy, but does not suit those who have weak or diseased lungs. The interior suits them exactly. In the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys there are chills and fevers, but the causes are greatly relieved by the steady sea breeze which comes in daily.

The soil also varies with the locality. I have been in the valleys and among the hills, and find it rich everywhere. The great body of valley land is a deep, rich, black prairie soil, without timber, except scattering trees, and, in its natural state, heavily grown over with clover in some places and wild oats in others. I attended a burial in the country, a few days ago, and took special notice that the soil at the bottom and top of the grave was the same. These lands are all over the State, and produce from twenty-five to fifty bushels of wheat per acre, and sometimes as high as one hundred. Next in value come the "sand plains"—open, wide, level plains, of a light sandy soil, covered with a grass excellent for stock, and, until recently, thought to be worthless except for stock raising. Now they are eagerly sought for, and are found to produce from fifteen to twenty bushels of wheat per acre. Their value is much enhanced by the fact that they can be plowed all winter, so that a man can put in nearly twice as much of this as of the prairie land. These lands abound in the San Joaquin valley. Next come the foot hills, or slopes of the mountains of the coast range and the Sierra Nevada. These are mainly valuable for stock raising, as they are covered over with the wild oats, which really is as thick and heavy as pretty good cultivated oats in Alabama. These are also the lands for fruits, and the place of places for grapes. The day is not distant when there will be thousands of acres of these hills on which a sheep or a mustang will not be allowed to set foot. I have been on them, and they are rich to the very top.

The price of land varies according to character and location.—Near market—that is, within a few miles of any railroad or steamboat landing—the best land is worth $50 per acre. Ten miles out the same quality can be got for $15, and fifteen or twenty miles out at from $5 to $10 per acre. The sand plains are much cheaper, and the foot hills still cheaper. In the San Joaquin valley, within twenty miles of market, there is yet plenty of public land, of the best quality, which can be entered by actual settlers. Much also, nearer to market, can be bought, at second hand, for from $2 to $5 per acre. Only yesterday I had a conversation with the agent of the United States Land Office, in this place, who assured me of these facts.—But the public lands can only be obtained by actual settlers, and are being taken very rapidly.—Whenever a settlement is made the price of the land advances rapidly.

Of productions it is difficult to speak without seeming to exaggerate. Nature has exaggerated everything in this country, and I need only tell the truth moderately. Not only is the wheat produced abundantly, but the grain is a half larger, the flour much better, and there is no weevil. On our voyage, as soon as we passed from the Atlantic to the Pacific steamer, we noticed the remarkable improvement in our bread.—California wheat commands a higher price than any other in the New York market. Barley and rye produce more abundantly than wheat. Oats, as we have already said, grows everywhere uncultivated, and is cut in great quantities for hay. As there is no rain in harvest time, these grains will wait for months for the reaper, and then lie in the fields until you are ready to haul them to market. Of course they need no extra sunning. Everything is done by machinery. Any white man, who is able to sit in a wagon and drive four horses, will do for a farm hand in California. The ground is first turned over with a four-horse gang plow, then harrowed in by a machine which does the sowing, as well as the covering. The reaping is done with a very complicated machine denominated a "header," which cuts the grain about six inches below the head, and casts it into a large, open-bodied wagon, which follows alongside. This wagon, when full, bears the heads to a thresher, stationed in the field and run by steam, which threshes, cleanses and sacks the grain. The only handling of wheat done in California is in the one hundred pound sack. I have seen all these implements, and they are wonderful realities.

Of fruits and vegetables I need say but little. I have seen young fig trees here as tall as China trees, and tomato vines seven feet high, loaded with fruit. I can see more fruit in one hour's walk around Stockton than I could see in a week's ride through Alabama. Peaches, pears, apples, figs, apricots, plums, watermelons and canteloupes are very abundant. Vegetables of every variety, Northern and Southern, are double as large and decidedly better, growing in the natural soil, than I ever saw them raised by the best gardeners in Alabama. I do not think I risk much in saying, you may believe all that you have ever heard or read of the fruits and vegetables of California. As we arrived here in mid-summer, we have had, thus early, a fine opportunity of seeing for ourselves; and our table every day testifies to a more carnal sense than that of sight.

WETUMPKA DISTRICT MEETING.

NUMBER TWO.—CONCLUDED.

The Committee on Church Property, composed of Rev. J. P. Jones, chairman, A. B. Elliott, S. J. Kidd, William R. Williams and J. L. Nichols, offered their report, which was adopted. It represents the church property in the district as being generally in a good condition, and is valued at $36,125. It recommends the trustees everywhere on the district to see that this property is legally secured to the church and kept in good repair, and that the houses of worship be considered as sacred to religious services, and that they be not otherwise used. The report advises that where two or more societies can unite and organize a church at some central point, that they do so. It regrets there are so few parsonages on the district, and suggests that something should be done to remedy the inconvenience, etc.

The following was reported by the Committee on Apportionment:

The Wetumpka district was assessed $800 for Conference collection, $250 for bishop's, $500 for missions and $1,500 for education, distributed as follows:

	Conf.	Bish.	Miss.	Ed'n.
Pleasant Hill	$35	$15	$25	$75
Loundeeb'g and Hayneville	125	40	85	250
Autaugaville and Ivy Creek	125	49	85	250
Prattville	150	50	100	275
Salem	40	15	25	100
Kingston	40	15	30	100
Wetumpka	80	25	50	150
Carolina	40	15	35	100
Socapatoy	40	15	35	100
Tallassee	40	20	35	100

The Committee on Denominational Education, of which C. D. Oliver was chairman, offered their report, which was adopted, with the following resolutions:

1. That we recommend to our people to encourage the thorough and practical education of the children of the church, and of the country at large, that they be prepared to fill usefully any station in after-life.

2. That we recommend the East Alabama College, at Auburn, as an institution of learning worthy of the largest patronage, and as offering facilities for acquiring a thorough and practical education second to none in the land.

3. That this district meeting will raise an amount annually sufficient to pay the board and tuition of some young man, to be selected from this district, who is called to preach the Gospel, and enable him to pursue a literary course in the college.

4. That a committee of —— be appointed to apportion this amount among the different stations and circuits, and that the pastors and official members be requested to collect and pay it over, at such times and in such proportions and to whomsoever this meeting shall order.

5. That this same committee be authorized and empowered to select the young man to receive the benefit, and they are especially instructed to look well to his gifts, graces and usefulness.

6. That we return our devout gratitude to God for the prosperity which has attended our institutions of learning during and since the war, and that we sincerely invoke him to continue his gracious providence over them.

7. That this district meeting hereby pledges itself to use its best endeavors to have raised the amount assessed by the board of trustees of East Alabama College.

8. That the sending of our children abroad to obtain an education, when they have equal advantages at home, is damaging to our institutions in depreciating them in the eyes of the public, and in withholding from them that support which is necessary to their existence and success.

The meeting appointed the following committee to carry out the provisions of the fourth and fifth resolutions: Hon. T. M. Williams, A. J. Briggs, D. M. Hudson, Hon. William A. Allen, Dr. B. F. Davis and Daniel Pratt.

Dr. Dowdell, president of East Alabama College, and Rev. Ed. J. Hamill, its agents, made effective speeches in its behalf.

Resolutions of thanks to the people of Tallassee were adopted for their hospitality, and to the Baptists for the use of their pulpit.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Resolved, That this district meeting feel under obligations to Bishop Wightman for his attendance at this meeting, and for the able, kind and wise manner he has presided over it, and that we humbly beg God to go with him and bless him in the discharge of his official duties.

The bishop's sermon on Sabbath morning, on the first and great commandment, was in keeping with the magnitude of his theme. All classes seemed impressed with its power.

Rev. A. J. Briggs preached an excellent sermon on revivals. Revs. James F. Durdell, Pilley, Edwards, Stearns and others preached with profit to their hearers. R. A. Timmons, the preacher in charge of the Tallassee work, provided his brethren with comfortable homes.

The secretary, with Bishop Wightman and Hon. William A. Allen, were delightfully entertained at the residence of Dr. Ruskin. The kindness of himself and lady can never be forgotten.

The religious exercises of Sabbath night, consisting of a sermon from ——, and the sacramental services, conducted by Bish. Wightman, closed the meeting. The occasion was a solemn and spiritual one. The entire meeting was a success and a pleasure.

C. D. Oliver, Secretary.

P. S.—The following persons were elected representatives to the next Annual Conference: Hon. William A. Allen, Daniel Pratt, Esq., Hon. Thomas M. Williams and Hon. William Garrett. Alternates, Rev. Harris Stearns, Dr. B. F. Davis, A. R. Sullenberger and H. V. Smith.

DISTRICT MEETINGS.

Mr. Editor: I am somewhat reluctant to thus make public my opposition to district meetings, first, because I have but a poor talent for controversy; and second, because it attacks a very popular measure. I intend, however, to be not only respectful but even deferential, both to the General Conference and those who very highly favor the scheme.

The theory of these meetings is wrong, because it proposes to harmonize, systematize, and more perfectly concentrate the working power of the church by districts, without a proper preparation of churches and circuits. It puts the corps into the hands of the major general without sufficient company drill.

Who does not know that prayer meetings, love feasts, quarterly meetings, family prayer, etc., are lamentably neglected? How, then, are these essentials to be supplied by this wholesale effort? Again: it adds another wheel to the great itinerant machine; increasing the friction, and consequently checking its speed and power. What do you see? What? That the mill grinds more slowly, evidently.

You ask, is it not a good wheel? Well, yes, but there is not water enough to drive it. When this wheel runs, others stand still. Other meetings, which would pay more, are neglected. I would not charge the General Conference with constitutional tinkering, but really the introducing of these district meetings might indicate that the mania to improve or amend the constitution had spread from the State to the church.

If the piety, personal piety, family piety, church piety, circuit piety, shall be increased, so as to afford more power, then you can and ought to multiply the wheels. But, again, it is a popular delusion. It attributes to the district meetings what properly belongs to the bishops.

Let any of the bishops publish a string of appointments, without the district meetings, and don't you think they would have as many hearers, and likely do more good, because their time would not be employed in the secular concerns of the church. Why, it don't require a bishop to appoint a committee or hear a report. But, again, these meetings burden the columns of our excellent Advocates with numerous lengthy reports, which not only show us nothing but what we already know, but which reports are almost identically the same, except in style, which shows only that they are written by different men. Moreover, these meetings require more of the bishops than should be either demanded or expected.

I venture that no mountain circuit preacher will have done more hard work the present year than the bishops. At the close of their summer labors they go by home, to remain long enough, perhaps, for their little ones to become reacquainted with them, before they must be off to attend the fall and winter conferences.

I tell you, Mr. Editor, you are killing the fowl to get the golden egg.

If the bishops must circulate around through the summer, (and to this I have no objection,) let them appoint old-fashioned two days' or protracted meetings. Let their object be the conversion of sinners and sanctification of the church. Let them do like Bishop Pierce and Dr. McFerrin, viz: one preach, and the other exhort and call mourners, and if you didn't see sinners come, you would see the church bow, and hear the song again: "Lord, I want more religion." The power would be increased, and then you might add new wheels.

O, how I was rejoiced to read the advice of Bishop Pierce, where he connected revivals so closely with heart-repentance, new birth and witness of the spirit.

In conclusion, if we must have district meetings, let them be held quadrennially, viz: commencing at the close of the General Conference. It may serve to break in the new bishops and wear off the wire edge.

Your's truly, Vedette.

DULL MINISTERS.

The Independent offered, a few weeks since, some plain suggestions concerning petted ministers. Those views seem to have been accepted as sound doctrine. But the matter is incomplete unless a word or two upon dull ministers be also added.

No remark at the late Boston anniversaries seemed to hit the nail on the head so well as the demand made by Rev. J. F. Moors, of Greenfield, Massachusetts, for "a few dull ministers." He called for a few men who, as they say of domestic servants at intelligence offices, would be "willing to go into the country." It was evidently received as a novel, admirable and startling demand. And, though no such recruits offered themselves on the spot, yet the opportunity is still open in every religious body.

Yet it might seem hardly needful to advertise for dullness. Since Pope's "forty parson power" of that quality in the Dunciad, the trait has been thought chronic among the clergy. To invite clergymen to be dull seems to the world like inviting a broker to turn a penny or a politician to turn his coat. "It is their nature to."

Ah! but the right kind of dullness is not so common, after all. Honest, kind hearted, sensible dullness is growing rarer than it was. It is dying out with that race of country pastors, "passing rich with forty pounds a year," who farmed the parish farm, such as it was, and harvested their own apples, and sent half a dozen sons through college on the product. These men told homely truths in a very homely way. Their phrases smacked of the soil. Their applications went down into every pew. Their prayers were a weekly narrative of the events of the village. The divine grace was successively invoked on all experiences, great or small; whether this deacon had lost his wife, or that deacon his barn. No longing after pleasant city suburbs disturbed these men's souls. Their gods were gods of the hills, as Ethan Allen said; and they were satisfied. There are such men still; but we need more of them. We agree with the anniversary speaker. The race of dull ministers must not die out.

Every man knows ministers who, without a trait of brilliancy, are yet part of the vital force of their whole county. No matter if their reiteration of simple truths becomes a little fatigning; it is always to the point. No matter if their jokes at the parish tea tables are time-worn; they are hearty. These men know every child in town, because they recall its grandfather. They superintend the schools; they watch over the village morals; and their life is one long struggle against that anti-Christ, the tavern-keeper. They even cope with him in town meeting, and refuse him a license unless he behaves himself. What would any New England village be, for instance, without its dull minister?

And these men know their limitations, and have sober wishes. Their more showy neighbors ("exchanges" they are technically called) are, one by one, drafted away to city parishes. There they save souls in the best styles, with the latest improvements, regardless of expense. The dull ministers stay behind, and occasionally peruse the discourses of their old friends. Their wives perchance are indignant, and opine that some other people's sermons would read quite as well in the Christian Thunderbolt. We believe it. "Smart" preaching is a great deal worse than dull preaching.

But, after all, why should any preaching be dull? Any man who speaks simply from his heart, and does not go beyond his depth, can make something worth saying out of the common-places of every week. Any gossip can make these subjects attracting in her way; cannot the minister in his? The trouble lies chiefly in a false method. The dullest discourse could commonly be made interesting by shortening it one-half, chopping each sentence into two or three, striking out most of the doctrinal argument, and filling in with such simple illustrations as one would use in conversation. Let each man, in addition, make three-fourths of what he says extemporaneous, and remember that grown people are, after all, much like children, and need, like them, to have everything simplified and illustrated. With this method we should in time have a new race of country ministers, better than the old, retaining all the heartiness and escaping much of the dullness.

Folly does not know when to hold its tongue. Wisdom does, and this shows the difference between them.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Where are all the birds that sang
A hundred years ago?
The flower, that all in beauty sprang
A hundred years ago?
The lips that smiled,
The eyes that wild
In flashes shone
Soft eyes upon;
Where, ah! where are lips and eyes,
The maiden's smiles, the lover's sighs
That lived so long ago?

Who peopled all the city streets
A hundred years ago?
Who filled the church with faces meek
A hundred years ago?
The sneering tale
Of sister frail—
The plot that wark'd
A brother's hurt;
Where, ah! where are plots and sneers,
The poor man's hopes, the rich man's fears,
That lived so long ago?

Where are the graves where dead men slept
A hundred years ago?
Who were they that living wept
A hundred years ago?
By other men
That knew not them
Their lands are tilled—
Their graves are filled;
Yet nature then was just as gay,
And bright the sun shone as to day,
A hundred years ago.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mrs. Rachel A. W. Jones was the daughter of Rev. Heman Bangs, of the New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was born at Warwick, Orange county, New York, November 1, 1820. She joined the church when about ten years old, and was converted in New Haven, Connecticut, in 1836. In 1841 her elder sister, then residing in Mississippi, went to visit her parents and family in New York. Rachel's health being delicate, and her sister desiring the renewed companionship of one who had been the constant and cherished companion of her childhood, she returned with her and remained until the spring of 1843. While residing at Centenary College, then located in Rankin county, Mississippi, she became acquainted with Rev. Benjamin Jones, pastor of the church at that place, to whom she was subsequently married at her father's home in New York, June 11, 1844—at the close of the eventful session of the General Conference which resulted in the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church. From that time she always resided within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, of which her husband was a member, until her death, which occurred at Wesson on the 3d of June last.

Mrs. Jones was a remarkable example of a well-developed woman in her social, moral, intellectual and religious character. Fond of society, she was cheerful even to mirthfulness, yet always within the bounds of self-respect, and without incurring the slightest abatement of the respect of others. Naturally witty and sarcastic, and inclined, like all who possess them, to the exercise of these gifts, she was controlled in the indulgence of them by a delicate regard for the feelings of others. But in all the joyousness of her nature, and amid all the pleasantries that rendered her society delightful to the young and cheery to the old, the dignity and purity of her Christian character were ever conspicuous and made religion itself attractive to those who came within her influence.

Her intellectual endowments were of a high order. She enjoyed the best opportunities of education, under the judicious care of her wise father. These she improved diligently while at school, and continued in after life to build upon the foundation then laid. She was thus prepared for usefulness; and she was no idler. Few women of her age had accomplished more of good. Beside the active influence she exerted in the church and community, as a pastor's wife, she was for many years engaged in the education of young ladies—first, as the head of a large school in Jackson, Louisiana, and subsequently of the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy. For this position she possessed pre-eminent qualifications. With a wonderful faculty of imparting instruction and stimulating the efforts of her pupils by her cheerful intercourse and an ever-wakeful consideration for their happiness, she made their school life a continual holiday; and so thoroughly did she impress them with her own spirit that the intimate friends of Mrs. Jones often said they could recognize her scholars wherever they met them. All over this Southern country her memory is enshrined in the heart of many a good woman whose character was molded and developed under her care—wives and mothers and teachers silently fulfilling these sacred offices, and multiplying the good influences which had been shed upon their own lives. Her influence as a Christian teacher was not confined to the school room. She rarely omitted the opportunity, in any conversation, to let fall some "word in season," so pleasant as never to offend, and so impressive as never to be effaced. She delighted in the Sabbath school. She had the rare gift of interesting small children, and generally made it her specialty to bring together the little ones of the flock and interest them in the things of God. The infant class was always an attractive feature, in whatever school she was engaged. Her success in training them in the simple truths of the Bible, in Scripture recitations, and in singing (though herself no singer) was truly surprising. These little disciples loved her as a mother. They delighted to meet her in the class, and to group about her in her home.—Twenty-seven years ago, in Green street church, New York, I saw her surrounded by an amphitheater of little scholars—none exceeding six years old—every eye sparkling, every attention wide awake, every tongue ready with the appropriate reply, and every voice to join the sweet concert of child-music, which ever and anon interpolated the exercises of recitation. One year ago I saw her again in different circumstances, but in the same holy work. Wesson is a new place—a manufacturing town. Its population consists entirely of those connected, in the various capacities, with the business of the factory. She had gathered the small children of the community and had already given good evidence of what could be done with them. The class increased in numbers and interest until it became a chief attraction of the place. The beloved teacher is gone, but in many a young heart a seed has been planted by her loving care which will spring up and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God. Here was a whole character. With talents which, had she chosen that path, would have secured her distinction in the literary world; with ability to bear well her part with the ripest minds; she was equally ready, and loved as well, to watch the buddings of intellectual and spiritual life, and nurse them, as they unfolded, into bloom.

As a minister's wife she never hindered her husband, but always sustained, encouraged, cheered him in his work. She was his help. "I do not undertake," he writes, "to measure my loss or express my sadness. God is my God—he was hers. We have trusted all our lives—together lived, loved, trusted, hoped." Again he writes: "The light of our home is gone; the center of our family circle is blotted out. I am a child again. My self-reliance, my manhood, is gone. I am afraid." Such was she to him.

She was a devoted daughter, an affectionate sister, a loving and discreet mother, a kind and enduring friend—fulfilling all the duties that each relation imposed. She never wavered in her religious faith.—Firmness was manifested in every thing she undertook. She was perfectly regular in her private devotions, in reading, meditation and prayer. She knew the Bible, comprehended its teachings, and was imbued with their spirit. She missed no opportunity of attending upon the public services of God's house. In feebleness or health, if she was able to go, her seat in the church was always occupied. Never very demonstrative, she was often joyful in God. Fruitfulness, sincerity, justice, temperance, patience, joyfulness, humility—these traits were so distinctly exhibited in her life that they might severally be regarded as characteristic. She was eminently unselfish, seeking not her own, but the ease and comfort of others. She paid great respect to age and the ministerial office, and touching illustrations might be given of her tender sympathy for the humble and destitute. She was the friend of the poor. Her tastes were highly cultivated. She loved and appreciated the beauties of nature and art, of science and literature. A disciplined mind, a mature judgment and discriminating taste made her a judicious critic, and gave value to her opinions of literary works.

Always a great sufferer, living, as it were, almost in the immediate presence of death, she was familiar with the thought and had no dread. Years ago she said in a love feast: "I have no fear of death and but little anxiety about it. I am anxious to live right; for, if I can live right, I know I shall die right. God will see to that." It was this unhesitating trust in God, with the ever-present consciousness of striving to do right, that sustained her in affliction, cheered her amid discouragements, made her joyful in tribulation, and enabled her to diffuse so much of life and joy and happiness around her. She loved life, and enjoyed every day that God allowed her; but she lived and enjoyed each one as if it might be the last. For two years previous to her death her physical sufferings were much greater, the symptoms of a fatal disease which always terminates in sudden death having become too palpable to be mistaken. Through all this trying period she exhibited the same cheerful, trustful spirit. Waiting for the summons, which she knew might come at any moment, she continued her labors of love in the family, the church, the Sunday school, the community. A few days before her death, in a letter which breathes the spirit of a better world, she writes to her brother and sister: "It is worry that wears us out; not work. Live—live actively and pleasantly and smilingly, 'mid hard times, and tight times, and bereavements and sorrows and disappointments, and you will improve your own nature, and glorify God, who has left you much to enjoy." In these words of encouragement and exhortation may be seen the spirit and practice of her own life.

On the morning of her death she walked, with little assistance, to the breakfast table and ate with her usual relish. At ten o'clock her husband, coming in, found her with a flush on the cheek and an inability to collect her thoughts. But she rallied and "seemed at times as life-like as she had done for weeks—talked cheerfully to the last, more than cheerfully." She indulged in pleasantry with the doctor upon his inability to afford relief; told him if he let her die on his hands he would be the first doctor that ever did. A few minutes before her death she had her apparel changed and lay down on a lounge. Her friends moved the lounge into a current of air. As they carried her she kept up her conversation: "You are giving me a sweet ride," she said; "this is equal to a ride in Mr. Moody's carriage. I feel like you were carrying me to heaven." These were her last words, and the smile with which they were uttered remained when the spirit had departed. They were not idle words, but words of high significance.—She had neared the better land, perhaps had caught a glimpse of its beauties, and escaping the terrors of the "dark valley," passed within the gate—passed from the sunshine of her own good life into the "brightness of the Lord's glory." She had no special preparation to make—her life had been a continued course of preparation—her house was in order. She had no special message to leave—her life had been a message of good to all. Her light had shone, her good works had been seen, and others, through them, had been "constrained to glorify God."

Some of her friends have regretted that, believing—as we have certain knowledge she did—that a few hours would close her life, she had so little to say about death. But to us, who had watched her daily life for thirty years, the closing scene was as beautiful as it was characteristic. Had she died like any other, it would not have been like herself. To the last breath she tried to sustain the drooping spirits of the loved and loving around her. For herself nothing remained but to enter upon the reward of a well spent life. It was the sublime death of one who rested in the sublime faith of the Christian. "God will see to that."

Importance of Regular Habits.

A person visiting New York for the first time, and curious to observe the peculiarities of the metropolis, would probably immediately notice the great number of restaurants, eating houses and stands, in the markets and streets, loaded with eatables. Go where he would, by day or night, he would find accommodations for eating, and people availing themselves of them. The facilities thus afforded for obtaining meals at all hours are, without doubt, leading to great irregularities in eating, and thus exerting a deleterious influence upon the public health. It may, therefore, not be amiss to devote a brief space to the consideration of the effect of all irregularities in habits of living upon the animal economy.

It is a fact well recognized by physiologists, that the constitution of living beings possesses a recuperative power that is capable of resisting attack from external agencies, or, rather, is able to restore the damage caused by such attacks. The lower in the scale of existence an animal is found, the stronger is the power of its organism to restore parts removed by mechanical means, and the less is its susceptibility to the influences which cause disease. If, from individuals of the lower orders of animals, a limb, or even a portion of the body be removed, a new one will grow in its place; and in many cases the parts removed will supply the necessary parts which are absent, and become a complete organism. In vegetables this is almost universally the case; and the propagation of plants by slips cut from the parent stem is a process of daily occurrence in horticulture. The recuperative power is indeed so great in many plants, that they can, by the most extreme efforts, be scarcely removed from a soil where they have once obtained a foothold. The plant known to farmers as quackgrass is a good example.

The power to restore parts which have been lost extends to the highest orders of the animal creation. Teeth which have been removed by mechanical means have often grown again in the human jaw years after the second set, which takes the place of the first in the regular course of nature, had been supplied. This is, however, probably the only organ that the human recuperative energy has power to restore.

As age advances this power becomes less, so that repair takes place slowly, and in very advanced age ceases altogether. Broken bones refuse to unite, and abrasions of the skin become chronic ulcers.

There is, however, a striking characteristic of the power of recuperation, which has a most important bearing upon the health, both of men and animals. It is this: The power to restore increases with the regularity of the power and periods of attack. It is as if the constitution were a citadel, upon the reduction of which two kinds of tactics were employed. So long as the attacks are made at regular intervals, the garrison may sleep while the besieging forces are withdrawn, and rise refreshed to increased resistance; but attack it at unexpected times, and with irregular force, and unremitting vigilance must at last wear out the strength of the besieged.

Many phenomena which cannot be accounted for in any other way, at once find an explanation by the application of this truth.

The taking of proper exercise, pure air, sustenance, sleep, and recreation, may be compared to the withdrawal of the attacking forces. If the withdrawals are regular, the attacks will also be regular, and the resisting power of the vital structure will in the mean time have accumulated.

We believe that six hours of sleep per diem, begun and ended at uniform times, are as good as eight taken at irregular periods. It follows, then, that regular sleep gives two hours, at least, more time per day available for business, pleasure or study, than can be otherwise obtained.

In short, nothing is so economical as regular habits. Less food, less sleep, less clothing, less medicine is required to sustain nature; and better health, more happiness, more knowledge and longer life are obtained in their exercise.—Scientific American.

FAMILIAR ILLUSTRATIONS OF SCOTTISH LIFE.

We publish a few of the quaint sayings, as uttered by the people of Scotland, as we find them in Dr. Rogers' little book on Scottish character:

The blacksmith is frequently the most intelligent man in the place. His smithy is a constant resort of the villagers; and if he has limited opportunities of gleaning knowledge from books, he gathers much that is curious from the conversation of neighbors. Dr. McKnight, of Edinburg, when minister of a country parish, was asked by the parish blacksmith for the loan of a theological work. The doctor, who was afraid of finger-marks on his expensive volume, stated that he never lent books out the house, but that the smith was welcome to come to the manse and read it there.—Shortly after the reverend doctor was about to proceed to a neighboring parish to officiate for the incumbent, when it was discovered that the key of the stable was amissing. The doctor sent for the blacksmith to force open the door, but received the reply that he was welcome to the use of his tools in the smithy, but he never lent them out of the house.

A probationer of the church had been officiating in his native parish in East Lothian, and had been somewhat lengthy in his services. "I gave you good measure yesterday," said he to a farmer in the place, "and I know that you farmers like that." "Oh ay," said the farmer, "we like gude measure, but we like it weel dighted too."

A late minister of Biggar, who was a slavish reader in the pulpit, closed his discourse with the words: "I add no more." "Because ye cannn," exclaimed an old woman from her pew.

The celebrated Mr. Fletcher, of Saltoun, was possessed of a very irritable temper. His butler intimated his intention of seeking another place, when Mr. Fletcher proceeded gently to urge him to continue in his service. "I cannot bear your temper, sir," said the butler. "I am passionate, I confess," said Mr. Fletcher, "but my passion is no sooner on than it is off." "Yes," rejoined the butler, "but then it's no sooner off than it's on again!"

A country laird heard that his man servant had, in the neighboring village, been denouncing him as "no gentleman." The servant plead not guilty to the charge; adding emphatically, that when he went to the village he "aye kept his thochts to himself."

The Rev. Mr. G., of Stirling, remarked to one of his hearers that he had heard he was about to be married for the third time. The reverend gentleman added: "They say, John, you're getting money with her; you'll get rich by the wives." "Deed, sir," quietly responded John, "what wi' bringin' them in and puttin' them out, there's nae muckle made o' them."

The greatest compliment ever paid to the pathos of Christian eloquence was in the simple saying of a country wife. The late Rev. Dr. Andrew Garstairs, minister of Anstruther-Webster, was reputed for the excellence of his communion addresses. He was in the habit of exhorting tables at the celebration of the communion at Dunino. The parish minister asked an elderly widow as to her opinion of the doctor's services. "Deed, sir," said the widow, "I just begin to greet when Dr. Garstairs begins to speak, for I ken I'm sure he'll mak me greet before he's dune."

The late Rev. Dr. John Thompson, of Markinch, had been preaching on the moral depravity of man, and the evils of licentiousness. Returning to the manse through the church yard, he overheard the following colloquy between Johnny Spittal and Davie Thompson, two of his more errant parishioners: "Weel, Davie, did you hear a' yon?" "Deed did I, Johnny, man." "An' what thocht ye o't a', Davie?"—"Deed, Johnny, man, if he hadna been an awfu' child himsel, he wadna kent sae weel aboot it."

A late minister of Peebles had been discoursing on the sin of falsehood, and had portrayed the unhallowed consequences of indulging in the practice. A small trader in the place, whose conscience had been for the moment aroused, exclaimed to a neighbor on going home: "The minister needna hae been sae hard, for there's plenty o'leers in Peebles besides me!"

The Rev. Dr. Thomas Chalmers wrote very illegibly. When minister of Kilmany, he dispatched letters weekly to his parents at Anstruther. There was generally experienced considerable difficulty in deciphering his communications; but one letter proved an absolute puzzle. It was at length ruled by the divine's mother that the letter should be laid aside, "that Tam, when he cam', might read it himsel."

An eloquent preacher was discoursing in a tent. His discourse was so extremely pathethic that the audience, with the exception of a single person, was moved to tears. The stolid individual, on being asked how he could listen to the discourse unmoved, made answer: "Oh, I dinna belong to this parish."

Sir Walter Scott was in one of his walks leaning on the arm of his faithful attendant, Tom Purdie. Tom said: "Them are fine novels of yours, Sir Walter; they are juist invaluable to me." "I am glad to hear it, Tom." "Yes, sir; for when I have been out all day hard at work, and come hame very tired, and tak up one o' your novels, I'm asleep directly."

The late distinguished Rev. Dr. Duncan, of Ruthwell, began early in the century a course of week-day scientific lectures in his parish, and which is understood to have been the first attempt at the establishment of mechanics' institutes in Scotland. The doctor had one evening stated and illustrated the discovery of Copernicus respecting the double motion of the earth. The lecture called forth severe strictures in regard to the doctor's orthodoxy, and an old cobbler undertook to prove not only that he was theologically unsound, but scientifically erroneous. He proved the latter by appealing to the fact that he had been in the habit of suspending his dried fish on a pin outside his door every evening, and that he had uniformly found them in precisely the same position next morning, which he maintained would not have happened "had the earth been flee-in' roun' like a ba'." The cobbler's reasoning was deemed conclusive, and Dr. Duncan was obliged to discontinue his lectures.

During a severe storm which occurred at night, the wife of a hill farmer in Roxburgshire was awakened by the crashing sound produced by the fall of a tree. She awoke her husband with the exclamation: "Get up, gudeman, for sure enough this is the last day!" "Lie still, woman," replied her impatient lord, "wha ever heard o' the last day comin' i' the middle 'o the nicht?"

An anecdote relating to the late Principal Taylor of the University of Glasgow is sufficiently ludicrous. A noble lord had been on a visit to Glasgow, and wishing a suit of clothes for a special purpose, requested the waiter of his hotel to send for the principal tailor in the city. In a short time a venerable-looking person was ushered into his presence. "Are you the principal tailor here?" said his lordship. "I am at your service," replied the visitor. His lordship proceeded to explain that he was desirous of procuring a well made suit of black clothes. "Ah," said the visitor, "I see there has been a mistake; you had sent for a principal tailor, and your message has been misunderstood. I am Dr. Taylor, principal of the university."

A noble lord, who was extremely vain and very parsimonious, sold the produce of his dairy and orchard to the peasantry in his neighborhood. Meeting one day a little girl, the daughter of a cottager, carrying a milk pipkin, his lordship kissed her, and said: "My dear, you can tell your grandchildren that you once received a kiss from the Earl of ——." The girl, looking archly into his lordship's face, exclaimed: "But ye took the penny for the milk, though!"—Free Christian Commonwealth.

Size of the Stars.—How large are the stars, and are they alike, or do they differ in size? It used to be conjectured that they are of somewhat similar magnitude, presumably about as great as our sun, and that the differences of apparent size are due to differences of distance; but when astronomers came to discover that some of the smaller stars are the nearest to our system, this idea fell to the ground. A German computer has now, however, calculated the actual dimensions of one particular star, and finds that its mass is rather more than three times that of the sun.—The star in question is less than the fourth magnitude—a comparatively small one. What then must be the size of the Sirius and Aldebaran class? The reason of its selection for this determination was that it is one of the components of what is called a binary system—two stars revolving about each other like the sun and planet—and the motions of the members of such a system afford data for the computation. The star's distance from us is a million and a quarter times that of the earth from the sun, so that light takes twenty years to travel hither from it.—Once a Week.

We recollect hearing of two New York ladies, one of whom was an attendant at the aristocratic Grace Church, and the other at the humbler St. Paul's; that the former one, one Sunday morning, sent a request to the latter that she would go to church with her; to which her friend replied that she would be happy to do so, only she was dressed for St. Paul's!—Christian Era.

North Warren Circuit Miss. Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Since the commencement of our protracted meetings on this (the North Warren) circuit, Mississippi Conference, I thank God that I can report the church graciously revived. There have been about thirty-nine additions to the church, and about the same number of conversions. Our meetings have been conducted in the old-fashioned way. Shouts of members and of new born souls have been repeatedly heard. Affectionately, your's in Christ, A. R. STEWART.

Unparalleled Railroad Progress.

The Pacific railroad hastens toward completion. No peaceful enterprise of ancient or modern times was ever prosecuted with such energy and persistence. The two mountain ranges of the continent have been successfully crossed, and within a year we shall have unbroken communication between New York and San Francisco. At the latest dates there remained only a gap of five hundred and twenty miles between the eastern and western portions. The line is being extended from both directions as fast as labor and means can grade and lay the track, the Central Pacific Company having put down six miles in a single day. By the close of this year, it is thought, the gap can be reduced to less than three hundred miles, possibly to less than two hundred.

Thus far the Central Pacific Company have sold their own first mortgage bonds as fast or faster than they received the corresponding U. S. bonds on the road built, and in some cases it has been necessary to issue certificates calling for the former, as soon as the company could deliver them. It is not improbable, therefore, that the whole of their first mortgage loan will be disposed of before the through connection is made, and perhaps before January next. The advantages of these bonds, as well as much information concerning the road, is set forth in our advertising columns of this issue.

"THIS YEAR THOU SHALT DIE."

Whatever harvests fail, that of death never does. He gathers certainly and abundantly. All the living must, sooner or later, fall beneath the sweep of the inexorable reaper. How many of those who read this article shall die this year? Yet it would require a special revelation, attested by striking miracles, to convince any one of our thousands of readers that he is so near the end of life. How would we act if it were made clear that so brief a space remains? How would the editor write? Doubtless, something that might be comfortable to think about when the shadows begin to close around the dying bed. He would aim to meet the great responsibility of his position by sending out words to awaken the careless, to stimulate and deepen the piety of believers, and, as far as possible, to arouse the church to a sense of her great and sacred mission.

With such an impression resting upon him, how would the preacher preach? We believe, for one thing, that he would never venture far from the Cross. There would be no elaborate moral essays, no fine sermons, none that the worldly critic would pronounce splendid or magnificent. Every sermon would be plain and practical, earnest and searching. Nothing would be sought but the approval of God and the salvation of the hearer. To declare the whole counsel of God, and to be "clear of the blood of all men," would be the constant purpose. The minister would watch for souls, "as they that must give account," "warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom," laboring to "present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." His aim would be to "feed the flock of God," to recover the wandering and straggling sheep, and to snatch sinners from the devouring fire. All self-seeking, all "itching ears," all baser ambition, love of human applause, and the passion for popularity would wither under the rebuke of higher and better motives. Why should not the preacher live and labor under this solemn possibility? If he outlives the year, it is quite certain that many who are under his ministry will not.

How would the Christian act if persuaded that this year would end his life on earth? There are not a few who would rejoice in the prospect. They would look forward to it as a long-desired deliverance. But the most would probably feel that their work was poorly and imperfectly done. They would look closely to the inward life, and begin a self-examination more thorough than for years past. Neglected duties would be entered upon; they would be stirred up to greater faithfulness and a more complete consecration.

In this nearer view of eternity they would scan more narrowly the foundation of their hope, and the meetness that is in them for heaven. How, under such circumstances, would they not pray, search the precious word, and seek the fellowship of the saints! It would be a time of alarm to those who are at ease in Zion. "The sinners in Zion are afraid." The backslider would repent and do his first works. The near approach of the Bridegroom would lead him to search and try his ways, and to fill and trim the expiring lamp. There would be mourning over broken vows, and the most grievous abuse of the mercies of God. And with all who name the name of Christ there would be the sense of misspent time, of unfruitfulness, and the urgent need of a closer walk with God. How many of all who profess to be Christians are really and consciously ready! The Lord shall judge his people, and not we. But are not some painfully sensible that greater faithfulness is required, and that a more perfect love and a more complete sanctification are needed? They expect to be better and be better before they die. To go to judgment, as they are, is not to be thought of. But how and when is this more thorough preparation to be effected?

How would the sinner act if convinced that his last year had come? The possibility of convincing a sinner of this fact is questionable. He would shrink from the revelation, pervert and distort the evidence, and, in whatever shape it came, persuade himself that it was a mere scare-crow, or illusion of the senses. But supposing such a conviction securely lodged, how would he act? Not many would continue to neglect "so great salvation;" not many would defer for another day the work of repentance. Time which now hangs heavily, and is a mere drug, would become precious, as embracing the last opportunity and hope of mercy. The long slumber of sin would be broken, and the awakened soul would begin at once to exclaim: "What must I do to be saved?" The world and its pleasures would be forgotten in the earnest and hurried pursuit of eternal life, sin would rest as a mountain weight upon the conscience, and the soul would agonize to enter in at the straight gate. For once the sinner would thank God for so mighty a Saviour, and for so present and powerful a salvation.

And yet, are people one whit the less foolish and the less guilty who live unprepared for eternity because they do not know that they shall die this year? Such an alarming revelation would appeal only to our fears, whilst all the higher and nobler motives are addressed without it. Ought not the believer to be ashamed of himself, who is less earnest and faithful because he expects to live for many years? Can the unconverted man see this principle operating in himself without feeling a deeper moral degradation? Where are love, gratitude, and even prudence, when we are waiting to be whipped into repentance and holiness by the alarming shadows of the grave? Assured length of days, and religion sought and practiced under this assurance, is something nobler and juster, and more in accordance with a true apprehension of the nature and responsibilities of the Christian life.

But we ought to pause at the thought that our probation may be so near its close. Our writing, preaching, praying, living, working, may thus soon be brought to an end. It is certain that many of us will die this year. "Lord, is it I?" Religion is not a gloomy thing, nor is its dwelling place among the tombs. It is joyous, however, not by forgetting death, but by rising above it, and by triumphing over it. Death appeals to our fears until swallowed in the victory of faith and love, when it gives place to the purified affections and the reasonable service of consecrated hearts.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

From Mr. Jas. A. Gresham, No. 90 Camp street, we have received THE HEROES, by the Rev. Charles Kingsley. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1868: 12mo., pp. 335. The vague notion which most persons have of the history of this most famous and most ancient order of ascetics will experience a delightful relief in the perusal of this volume. It reproduces the lives of the distinguished hermits of Egypt, Syria, Persia and Western Europe, as gathered from the writings of Rosweyde, Montalembert, Milman, Ozanam, Gibbon and other standard authorities. Mr. Kingsley has thrown around the subject the charm of his vivid conception and brilliant description of scenery and character, and has further enriched it by a most admirable chapter on the natural history of prodigies—a subject which demands more and more scientific solution. The account given of Saint Brendan, the son of Finninga, and founder of the Abb. Clonfert, County Galway, Ireland, "father of nearly three thousand monks," together with his discovery of a "delicious island" in the watery waste westward, which is carried out to be the "Land of Promise," is always the full breadth of the superstition of the Catholic Irish. This saint from the "Island of Saints," in his voyage into "the deserts of the ocean," after the style of the wanderings of Ulysses, came to "the Isle of Birds," spent Easter eve on the back of the fish Jaconins—mistaking it for an island—thence to the "Isle of Sheep," thence to the "Isle of Strong Men," and thence to a rock in mid ocean. Then the saint and his fellow voyagers saw a man "sitting on a rough and shapeless rock, and the waves beating over his head;" and when they fell back the bare rock appeared on which that wretch was sitting.—Before him was a veil, as big as a sack, hanging between two iron tongs, and rocking on the waves like a boat in a whirlwind. And the cloth which hung before him the wind moved, and beat him with it on the eyes and brow." In answer to a question, who he was and how he had earned that wretched doom, he said: "I am that most wretched Judas, who made the worst of all bargains. But I hold not this place for any merit of my own, but for the ineffable mercy of Christ. * * I have this refreshment, for it is the Lord's day now, and as I sit here I seem to myself in a paradise of delight, by reason of the pains which will be mine this evening." Then he told them how he had his refreshings there every Lord's day, and from Christmas to Epiphany, and from Easter to Pentecost, and from the Purification of the Blessed Virgin to her Assumption. Other Irish saints, with "St. Patrick at their head, shining like the sun," and "St Columbo shining like the moon," are also treated of in this novel work. The publishers have gotten it up very tastefully, in ultramarine covers, wood cuts, beautiful paper, type and presswork.

THE STATE OF THE HEART.

The whole moral condition is expressed by the heart, not only in Scripture, but in common speech. We say a hard heart, a tender heart, a kind heart, a cruel heart, a generous and a mean heart. Perhaps no one thing is more talked about than the heart, and none, perhaps, less understood. The reason for this, however, is plain enough: "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" A deceitful man is as one who wears a mask. His real features are concealed, and, therefore, are not known. Such is the condition of the heart—deceitful—its true state unseen and unknown. Most impenitent men are disposed to plead that their hearts are not bad, that their continued impenitence is not the result of a wrong state of the heart, but their difficulties lie in the direction of the intellect—their difficulties are intellectual—that the Scriptures are not sufficiently proved to be the word of God; that there are mysteries in the Bible, in the plan of salvation, and insuperable difficulties in the divine government: that there are contrarieties of opinion, and inconsistencies in practice, among professed Christians. In short, it is not his heart, but intellectual difficulties that keep him from God. This view of the innocence of the heart is not only held by sinners in relation to themselves individually, but it is held in regard to sinners generally: for example, a man shall violate the third commandment by a daily and gnarly series of most shocking and disgusting profanities, yet you shall hear that he is a good-hearted man. Another shall violate, from year to year, the fourth commandment—to remember and keep holy the Sabbath—by buying and selling and doing ordinary work, and neglecting all its solemn observances, yet you will be told he is a "good-hearted man." And yet another shall violate the seventh commandment, by the grossest impurities and wrongs, and yet if he be a man of agreeable manners it will be said he is a "good-hearted man." Another gets drunk, but "poor fellow, he has a good heart," though he is beggaring and disgracing his family: and multitudes never pray, never recognize any religious obligation, and yet they are allowed to have "good hearts". Now if the [illegible] of true godliness, a [illegible] apart from the standard of the [illegible] ness. God says "[illegible] of the heart [illegible] ness is often very heavy, and to proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies; these are the things which defile a man." The heart is the main spring in the moral machinery; if it is defective the whole work will be bad, and no gold ease nor sparkling jewels can correct the evil. It lies within. The spring must be renovated and put in harmony with the watch, or there never will be correct and regular movement. Sometimes, when pressed on this point, the sinner will admit your position, with the hope that he will be able to show that, if it is true, it proves too much, and exonerates him from all blame, all responsibility. He says: "I cannot help being born with a depraved heart." Very true, a man cannot help being born ignorant; but if he has the means of education, and the possibility of knowledge in his grasp, he is greatly to blame if he remains ignorant. There can be nothing more plain than that God charges the blame upon our hearts. He says of certain sinners: "Because, that when they knew God, they glorified not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened;" again, "after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath;" again, "to-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." The fault is with us, and hence the Master says: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." In view, then, of this state of our hearts, it becomes us to utter the prayer of the Psalmist: "Create in me a clean heart, oh God, and renew a right spirit within me."

THE CONFERENCES.

The season for holding the annual sessions of our Conferences has arrived. Yesterday, the 9th instant, the Missouri Conference commenced its session at Weston, and the Kentucky Conference commenced its session at Frankfort. On the 23d instant the St. Louis Conference will open its annual session at Jefferson City; and the Illinois Conference on the same day, at Canton, Illinois. These are always seasons of great interest to the preachers and of great importance to the church. Managed rightly, they afford the preachers an opportunity, not only to renew their acquaintance with each other, and enjoy that Christian fellowship and communion always so sweet to kindred spirits, but also for a large increase of intellectual and spiritual comfort.

The Discipline of the church prescribes a general method for conducting the business of these Conferences, and also contains valuable suggestions respecting the personal improvement in piety of each member of the Conference.

These annual meetings ought to be, and might be, occasions of great profit to the people where the Conferences are held, as well as to the preachers—occasions when there should be a large increase in the knowledge of the truth and of a growth in grace on the part of all who enjoy them.

The pulpit should, at such times, be occupied by the ablest and best men the Conferences have, and the preaching be such as looked directly to the conversion of sinners and the salvation of souls then and there. Hence, every sermon should be prepared with great care and delivered in the best manner of which the preacher is capable. It would be well if more attention were paid to this matter than has heretofore been the case. As a general thing, the character of the preaching at the Conferences is below that of other times and places. There are, of course, various and plain reasons for this, but none of them so strong as that they might not be overcome with a little effort.

Then, again, there is some ground for fear that the preachers allow themselves, while at Conference, to lose sight of what should be one great object before all, that of saving souls, there and then. It is true the Conferences are assemblies for the transaction of ecclesiastical business, and the business is often very heavy, and requires not only much time and attention, but the time and attention of the most experienced and wisest men of the body. Still the direct and immediate religious interests of the people where the Conferences meet must not be overlooked, and a majority or all of the preachers might oftener attend and take greater interest in public worship during the Conferences, if they would. And with all due respect to all concerned, we think some improvement in this respect is much needed. In many cases preachers are too negleetful of public worship during the Conferences. Pity it should be so. In future let it be otherwise, and when in the house of God, listening to preaching, let the spirit of curiosity and of criticism give place to the spirit of prayer, of faith and of a sound mind.—St. Louis Christian Advocate, Sept. 10.

THE CLEANSING BLOOD.

A visitor among the poor was one day climbing the broken staircase which led to a garret in one of the worst parts of London, when his attention was arrested by a man of peculiarly ferocious and repulsive countenance, who stood upon the landing place leaning with folded arms against the wall. There was something about the man's appearance which made the visitor shudder, and his first impulse was to go back. He made an effort, however, to get into conversation with him, and told him that he came there with the desire to do him good, and to see him happy, and that the book he had in his hand contained the secret of all happiness. The ruffian shook him off as if he had been a viper, and bade him be gone with his nonsense, or he would kick him down stairs. While the visitor was endeavoring with gentleness and patience to argue the point with him, he was startled by hearing a feeble voice, which appeared to come from behind one of the broken doors which opened upon the landing, saying:

'Does your book tell of the blood which cleanseth from all sin?'

For a moment the visitor was too much absorbed in the case of the hardened sinner before him to answer the inquiry, and it was repeated in earnest and thrilling tones:

'Tell me, O tell me, does your book tell of the blood which cleanseth from all sin?'

The visitor pushed open the door and entered the room. It was a wretched place, wholly destitute of furniture, except a three legged stool and a bundle of straw in a corner, upon which were stretched the wasted limbs of an aged woman. When the visitor entered she raised herself upon one elbow, fixed her eyes eagerly upon him, and repeated her former question, 'Does your book tell of the blood which cleanseth from all sin?' He sat down upon the stool beside her, and inquired, 'My poor friend, what do you want to know of the blood which cleanseth from all sin?' There was something fearful in the energy of her voice and manner as she replied, 'What do I want to know of it? Man, I am dying! I am going to stand naked before God. I have been a wicked woman all my life. I shall have to answer for everything I have done,' and she groaned bitterly as the thought of a lifetime's iniquity seemed to cross her soul. 'But once,' she continued, 'once, years ago, I came by the door of a church, and I went in—I don't know what for. I was soon out again, but one word I heard there I have never forgot. It was something about blood which cleanseth from all sin. O, if I could hear of it now! Tell me, tell me, if there is anything about that blood in your book.' The visitor answered by reading the first chapter of the first epistle of St. John. The poor creature seemed to devour the words, and when he paused, she exclaimed, 'Read more, read more.' He read the second chapter—a slight noise made him look round; the savage ruffian had followed him into his mother's room, and though his face was partly turned away, the visitor could perceive tears rolling down his cheeks. The visitor read the third, fourth, fifth chapters, before he could get the poor listener to consent that he should stop, and then she would not let him go till he promised to come again the next day. He never from that time missed a day reading to her until she died, six weeks afterward; and very blessed was it to see how, almost from the first, she seemed to find peace by believing in Jesus. Every day the son followed the visitor into his mother's room, and listened in silence, but not indifference. On the day of her funeral he beckoned him to one side as they were filling up her grave, and said: 'Sir, I have been thinking there is nothing I should like so much as to spend the rest of my life in telling others of the blood which cleanseth from all sin.'

Thus the great truth of grea

pardon through the blood of Christ sinks into the soul and saves. Thus grasped, when all else is gone, it has power to sustain the drowning spirit, and lift it up above the floods that are going over it. Thus it breaks the heart of stone, which nothing else could touch, and turns the abandoned persecutor into the zealous teacher of Christianity.

The Birmingham Gazette, in speaking of a recently deceased Wesleyan preacher, says: "At a country Methodist missionary meeting, in 1832, Mr. Naylor was associated on the platform with a handsome, dashing, clever young man, who spoke effectively in behalf of Wesleyan missions. That young man is now premier. Imagine the Hon. Benjamin Disraeli at a Methodist missionary meeting! But he is versatile enough for anything. Mr. Naylor was one of the founders of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, and lived to preach one of its jubilee sermons."

A CARD.

I have been afflicted with dropsy for over four years, and have been under the treatment of some of our most eminent physicians, both in Mobile and New Orleans, the most of whom said mine was a helpless case, and that there was no cure for me. I was truly in a deplorable condition. I had not been able to lie down for nearly twelve months. All the sleep I got was sitting up. I had no rest day nor night. My body swelled to an alarming size. My lower extremities swelled until they burst, from which from half to one gallon of water run out every twenty-four hours. For over three months I was given up to die, by friends, family and physicians, in this helpless condition. I fortunately fell into the hands of Dr. D. M. Dualap, an old practitioner, who had just located in Ocean Springs, by whose medical skill, and the blessing of God, I am now cured and feel no symptoms of the disease returning. I am thankful to the doctor and to God for this miraculous deliverance from the very jaws of death.

I take pleasure in recommending Dr. D. M. Dualap to all afflicted with this dreadful disease. CHARLES WALKER,
Late Captain Steamer Creole.

P. S.—Dr. D. M. Dualap is located at Ocean Springs, Mississippi, and will give his attention to the treatment of dropsy, old sore legs, chronic diarrhea, chlorosis and chronic diseases in general.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mrs. A. Powell, on the 8th instant, by the Rev. A. B. Stewart, Mr. JAMES PENDER to Miss MOLLIE J. SNYDER, all of Warren county, Mississippi.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN S. B., infant son of the Rev. W. and Sallie Wadsworth, of the Mississippi Conference, was born June 8, and died August 11, 1868.

Died, on Sunday morning, August 9, 1868, LOULA E. HARPER, infant daughter of Mrs. Laura J. Blanks, of bilious remittent fever, in Loachapoka, Alabama, aged five years, six months and fifteen days. Little Loula was fond of attending Sabbath school, and was present there the Sabbath before she was taken sick. At night, before retiring to rest, she would kneel and repeat her little prayer. She never knew a father's love, he having lost his life in the Confederate service. Her sufferings lasted twenty one days, and many spoke of how patiently she bore them. Often, during her illness, she would put her arms around her mother, and beg her not to weep. The dear little flower of earth has been transplanted from this to a brighter world, whither other loved ones have gone. L. J. B.

HENRIETTA BENNETT, wife of Wm. Thompson, Esq., died at the family residence, near Spearsville, Union parish, Louisiana, on the 16th of July, 1868. The house of Wm. Thompson has been always a pleasant place of rest for the Methodist itinerant. Brothers Goodwyn, Miller, Parish and many others will read, with regret, the announcement of the death of his devoutly pious wife, whose highest happiness in life was to minister to the wants of the servants of God.

Sister Thompson was born in North Carolina in 1811. She was married to Wm. Thompson, in the western district of Tennessee, in 1825. Subsequently they removed to Arkansas, but for many years have resided in Union parish, Louisiana.

She had been a patient sufferer, under great bodily affliction, for a number of years. During the past twelve months her death has been daily expected. She "held fast the profession of faith to the end." Like the "Captain of our Salvation," she was "made perfect through suffering," and, in dying, was blessed with "that peace which passeth all understanding."

One member of the family, the eldest son, went down in the struggle for Southern independence; all the others, seven in number, still live, and, with one exception, all are religious. May the bright example, the pious counsels, and triumphant death of the sainted mother win him to the fold of Christ. A FRIEND.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT MEETING.

The Natchez District Meeting will be held at Midway, Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and will convene on Thursday, the 1st, and continue until the 4th of October next. Brethren attending the meeting will please call at Mr. Chapman's, in Centreville, who will direct them to their homes during the session.

Brethren from a distance would do well to reach Centreville on Wednesday evening, as the meeting will organize at eleven o'clock on Thursday.

Pastors will please prepare full written reports of all matters pertaining to the church in their several charges.

JOS. T. CURRY, P. E.

Vicksburg Dist., Mississippi Conference.

To the Pastors and Official Members:

DEAR BRETHREN—A letter just received from Bishop Paine requests me "to act as presiding elder" on this district until other arrangements are made at Conference. My age and bodily infirmities will make the task heavy indeed, but, by the help of God, my mind is made up to undertake it. The Conference year is so far advanced I can only make one round, in connection with some previously-made appointments which I cannot recall. As soon as you see this notice please inform me by letter, directed to Fayette, Mississippi, at what places your quarterly meetings will be held. I earnestly request the attendance of all the clerical members, that we may finish our work handsomely for Conference. According to my usual plan, when out on the district, I will be glad to have a few intervening appointments in the day-time at convenient places. The preaching does not oppress me; traveling and exposure to inclement weather do. Subjoined you have the time of the appointments:

RECOLLECTIONS OF REV. JOHN JOHNSON AND HIS HOME.
An Autobiography, by Mrs. SUSANNAH JOHNSON. Edited by Rev. ADAM C. JOHNSON, M. D.
The above book will be published at Nashville, September 15th, in one 12mo. volume of 310 pages. It records the varied experiences of a pioneer Methodist preacher of no small celebrity, as well as the toils and privations of his family, and forms a most entertaining and affecting biography. It contains no chapter that can be read without emotion. In short, it is a faithful picture of the men and manners of early times, and as such will have an interest far beyond the sphere of Mr. Johnson's labors, extensive as they were.
It may be ordered from
A. H REDFORD,
Agent, Nashville,
Or from P. M. PINCKARD,
Saint Louis.
Price, $1 50, with usual discount.
I offer the following

PREMIUMS TO AGENTS.

1. To any one buying 50 copies, from me or my booksellers, at once or in lots, Cruden's Concordance, worth $5 00
2. To any one buying 100 copies, as above, Webster's Pictorial Unabridged Dictionary 12 00
3. To any one buying 200 copies, as above, Clarke's Commentary 24 00
4. To any one buying 300 copies, as above, a fine Silver Watch and Chain 50 00
5. To the one buying the highest number up to October 1, 1869, a Cabinet Organ, Mason & Hamlin's, worth 250 00

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE GREAT PACIFIC RAILROAD,
RECEIVING THE AID AND SUpervision of the Government, and carried forward by the extraordinary resources and energy of the powerful corporations to whom it was entrusted, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is safe to say that New York and San Francisco will be connected by rail by the FOURTH OF JULY NEXT.
More than two thirds of the Through Line and Branches between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean are constructed, at a cost of nearly
ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS, and the remainder is being pushed forward with unparalleled vigor. The
CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
to whom belongs the Western and principal portion of the Main Stem Line, receive from the United States Government:
1. The right of way through the Territories, with the use of timber and materials along the route.
2. An absolute grant of twenty sections per mile (12,800 acres) of the Public Lands on the line, the minimum value of which is now fixed at $2 50 per acre.
3. A special issue of United States Six per cent. Bonds, at the average rate of $35,000 per mile, delivered as the work progresses; which the Company are allowed to repay within thirty years, mainly by transportation services.
4. Authority to issue their own First Mortgage Bonds to the same amount, having the preferred lien—superior to that of the Government.
5. It receives, in addition, donations and subsidies from the State and Cities of California amounting to more than $3,000,000 in gold;
Or an aggregate of Cash Resources for construction of more than Sixty Millions upon 725 miles; independent of the ten millions of acres of public lands, and further subscriptions to the Capital Stock. The early completion of the enterprise is therefore beyond all doubt.
This Company have already carried their road successfully across the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and are rapidly exceeding the track across the Salt Lake Plains, and have already a valuable way traffic thereon. Besides a mileage upon all through business, this road, having the best lands for settlement, the most productive mines, the nearest markets, and being exempt from competition, will always command large revenues. The net earnings upon the completed portion are more than double the total annual interest liabilities to be assumed thereupon.
The undersigned offer for sale, and recommend to investors, the
FIRST MORTGAGE 30-YEAR GOLD BONDS
OF THE
Central Pacific Railroad Company,
bearing six per cent. per annum interest, both principal and interest payable in "United States gold coin." These Bonds are the first lien upon one of the most productive and valuable railroad lines in the world—a line which will be finished within twelve months, and which is already earning, after paying operating expenses, more than twice the annual charges of its Bonded debt. They are already widely known and esteemed in this country and Europe, and it is believed the remainder of the Loan will speedily be taken.
A limited amount will be disposed of at 103 Per Cent. and Accrued Interest,
IN CURRENCY.
The Bonds are of $1,000 each, with semi-annual gold coupons attached, payable in July and January.
☞ The Company reserve the right to advance the price at any time; but all orders actually in transitu at the time of any such advance will be filled at the present price. At this time they pay
More than Eight Per Cent. upon the Investment, and have, from National and State laws, guarantees superior to any other corporate securities now offered.
We receive all classes of Government Bonds, at their full market rates, in exchange for the Central Pacific Railroad Bonds, thus enabling the holders to realize from five to ten per cent. profit and keep the principal of their investments equally secure.
Orders and inquiries will receive prompt attention. Information, descriptive pamphlets, etc., giving a full account of the organization, progress, business and prospects of the enterprise, furnished on application. Bonds sent by return Express at our cost.
Subscriptions Received by Banks and Bankers, Agents for the Loan.
☞ All descriptions of GOVERNMENT SECURITIES bought, sold or exchanged, at our office and by mail and telegraph, at market rates.
Accounts of Banks, Bankers and others received, and favorable arrangements made for desirable accounts.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

WILLIE'S SIGNAL.

BY REV. THERON BROWN.

At twilight, in old Hospital St. Luke,
The smiling eyes that watched grew wet with crying,
And kind lips kissed away, with love's rebuke,
The cruel anguish of the sick and dying.

In the fourth ward a boy with broken bones
Lay dreading what the morrow should betide him,
And sobbed and talked by turns, in faltering tones,
With little Susie in the cot beside him.

For he had borne the knife that day, and strain
On his weak limbs of surgeon's cord and splinter,
Till he had fainted with the weight of pain—
Too great for one just through his seventh winter.

And oh! to wait the rest—'twas worse, he said,
To lie and tremble at the doctor's warning—
I think 'twere better, Susie, to be dead
Than bear the hurt that's coming in the morning.

"They say that every night the loving Lord
Comes here for some of us, in watch or slumber,
And I have prayed that when he walks our ward
To-night, he'll take me, too, among his number.

"I hope he'll know I want him—and I've planned,
For fear I may be dreaming when he sees us,
Above the bed-clothes—so—to prop my hand,
And hold it there to be my sign for Jesus."

At midnight, in old Hospital St. Luke,
While lamps burned tow'ring lives yet lower burning,
And angel sleep, aloof at pain's rebuke,
Tempted pale eyelids, going and returning.

Who saw the Son of God, with countenance bland,
In pity sweet his glory all concealing,
Come at the beckoning of that lifted hand,
And smile his answer to its mute appealing?

The arm grew weak that held it—faith's good will Stayed up the tiny sign of supplication
Full long, and when it quivered and grew still,
It pointed up from sorrow to salvation.

'Tis morn at last. The nurses come again,
And see that child-like token where it lingers,
Erect and cold, above the counterpane,
With resignation in its helpless fingers.

From sight of fear and sound of parting hope,
And curses wrung from sufferers unforgiven,
The soul of wounded Willie had gone up,
Led by that little lifted hand, to heaven!

Why wait for death, O spirit sick with sin?
Faith now may imitate the child's behavior,
And from the wounds of penitence within
Stretch forth her signal to the healing Saviour.

Watchman and Reflector.

A DOG SAVING A SHIP.

A few years ago a sea captain from Massachusetts, who was in Havre, in France, obtained there a fine little rat terrier, which he called "Neptune," to be a companion on his voyage. Little "Neptune" soon learned to like the vessel, and he would run up ladders like a little sailor, though he could not come down without help. After the vessel had been at sea some weeks or months, when they began to approach land, before it could be seen by the men, Nep. would mount high up on the forward part of the ship, and snuff, and snuff, and bark, and show signs of joy. His keen scent enabled him to smell the land before it could be seen. He would also detect the approach of another ship when he could not see it, in the same way.

When Nep. had been to sea with his master about two years, the "Hortensia"—that was the vessel's name—had been to New Orleans for a load of cotton, and was on her way out to the Gulf of Mexico, into the Atlantic ocean. For some days there had been "squally" weather, with light baffling winds, and the vessel had not sailed very rapidly, but she was in a dangerous neighborhood, and a constant watch was necessary; for along the coast of Florida are long, low reefs and islands and bars, which have caused the destruction of many vessels. It had been the captain's watch in the early part of the night—that is, the captain, with a few men, remained upon the deck while the rest slept, then the others, at the sound of the bell, came upon deck, the mate took charge of the ship, the men who had been watching went below, and the captain, after telling the mate to call him before three o'clock, went below and "turned into" his berth to sleep. Nep. lay at his master's state-room door, for that was his sleeping place. There lies in the Florida Straits a large and dangerous rock called the "Double-headed Shot Keys." A light house is built upon it, that vessels may be kept from running upon it in the night. "Be sure to call me by three o'clock," said the captain, "as by that time we shall be up with the Double-headed Shot Keys, and sooner, if there is a change of weather."

The night wore on, and all was still but the splashing of water; the mate went below to get something from his chest, sat down upon it a few minutes, and, before he knew it, was fast asleep; the men on deck receiving no orders, supposed all was right, and one by one they, too, fell asleep; no one was awake but a little Spanish boy, whose turn it was to be at the wheel—that is, the helm, where they steer the vessel. Meantime the wind changed, a stiff breeze sprung up, the sails were filled, and the "Hortensia" plowed through the ocean briskly, straight toward the Double-headed Shot Keys. The little Spanish boy, half asleep at the helm, knew not of the danger, neither could he see ahead from where he stood, for the great sails concealed the view of the light house; but Nep., the good sailor that he was, discovered that land was near—he smelt it, and he saw the light. He rushed down to his master's state-room, and barked, and jumped up to him as he lay in his berth. "Get down! be still, Nep!" said the sleepy captain. But Nep. would not be still—he only barked the louder. "Be still!" said the captain again, and he pushed the dog away. Again the faithful little fellow jumped up, pulled his master's sleeve, and took hold of his arm with his teeth. Then the captain, thoroughly roused, began to think something must be the matter. He sprang up, and Nep. run forward, barking, to the companion way; the captain's head no sooner came above the deck than he saw what was the matter. Right ahead was the fearful rock and the light house, and the ship plunging toward it at the rate of nine miles an hour! He seized the helm, the ship struggled, swung round, and when her course was shifted, she was so near the rock that in three minutes more she would have struck and been a wreck; the sleeping sailors were roused to their duty, and the astonished mate rose up from his nap on the chest, to learn that but for the faithful dog the waves might have already closed over them.

Do you wonder that the captain thinks his dog is worth his weight in gold? He has been offered large sums of money for him, but money cannot buy him. He does not go to sea now. Nep. went as long as his master did, and now he makes himself quietly useful at home by catching all the rats in the neighborhood. May he live to a good old age, the pet and admiration of all who know him!

TALK OF THE LICHENS.

Far up the side of the mountain the naked rock shot up still higher. It seemed very high as you looked upward. The rock was even on its face, and was full perpendicular. On its surface were four kinds of lichens growing—from that whose leaf was very small, to the last, which was quite coarse and large. We sometimes see such lichens on an old fence, an old tree or an old house. The face of the huge rock was almost covered with them. As I sat down under the shadow of the mountain, waiting for my friends, I gazed at the lichen, and began to wonder in my own mind what it was created for, and of what use it could be, when I seemed to hear a small, crispy voice far up the rock, calling out:

"Mother, how old am I?"

"Why, my child, you have just begun to live. You are only eighty years old yet."

"And how old are you?"

"I call myself young, for I am only five hundred and twenty years old."

I now listened with all my ears, for I knew the lichens were talking among themselves. I felt sure they would say more, and I took out my pencil to put down what they would say. Pretty soon I heard the same little voice say:

"Mother, ain't you discouraged?"

"Discouraged! at what, pray?"

"At your size! Five hundred and twenty years old, and how very small you are!"

"Not so small, either! I cover six inches square already, while there's my poor grandmother, almost eleven hundred years old, and she covers only five inches even now! Very few, I am happy to say, of the lichen family, who have worked harder or accomplished more than I have, though I do say it myself."

"Well, mother, of what use is it to cling to this great rock, and hang here summer and winter, amid storms, and cold, and wind beating upon us? Here I have clung and been trying to gnaw into this rock for eighty years, and have not yet got my roots in half an inch.—What's the use? We might as well die and drop off. Nobody would miss us or care. What do we live for?"

"To raise wheat."

"Raise what?"

"Raise wheat, to be sure."

"Pray, mother, what do you mean? We lichens away up here, on this cold rock, raise wheat! If that isn't funny!"

"Listen, my child. This huge mountain is a solid rock. If it was all pounded up fine it would make soil on which men would raise wheat. But it is now very hard, and there is nothing to pound and turn it into powder. And so God has created us, the lichens, to have our home here, to cling to it, to gnaw it, and with a kind of acid we have, to crumble and dissolve it. Don't you remember that the very last year you rolled down two little grains of the rock? Well, every grain we make falls down; then the rains wash it into the little brook, and the brook carries it into the river, and the river raises it up, and as it overflows its bank, drops it just where the old soil is worn out, and the wheat needs new. The Nile thus carries down little particles from the mountains, and makes Egypt so fruitful."

"O! mother, how often can I gnaw off rock enough to raise a kernel of wheat?"

"Perhaps once in thirty years."

"O! what slow work! When will what you dig out this year raise wheat?"

"Perhaps five hundred years hence. God sees that there will be old men and little children upon earth then, and they will want bread; and so he has created us and placed us here to prepare soil, and get this rock ready to raise wheat. Thus he goes before, and provides, and makes even the poor little lichens useful; and if we do our duty, his smile will cheer us; and though we can do but little, a very little, yet that will do good to somebody."

The lichens stopped talking, but I did not stop thinking. What would my young reader have thought had he been there?—Sunday School Times.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE COLOR OF LIGHT.—The light of the sun is white. A very simple experiment demonstrates it. If, in the interior of a dark room, the solar light be received direct on a screen of white paper, after it has passed through a hole pierced in the shutter, the image of the sun on the paper, as is well known, will be a spot round and white. But this white light is not simple. It is composed of a multitude of colors or of tints which are themselves so many simple colors. This fact has been placed beyond doubt by a series of experiments varied in every form, but which, for the most part, are due to Newton.

Let us indicate the most conclusive: A triangular prism of flint glass is placed in the course of the solar rays, after their passage through the round hole in the shutter of the dark room, in such a manner that its edges are placed horizontally, and that the luminous pencil penetrates obliquely through one of its faces. Then you perceive upon the screen, instead of the round and white image of the sun, and at a certain distance above the point where it formed before the interposition of the screen, a bright elongated streak formed of a succession of extremely bright colors. It is this streak that is called the "solar spectrum."—American Artisan.

SOME years ago the astronomer royal proved, by the evidence of many years' observations at Greenwich Observatory, that there was no foundation for the popular belief that the changes of the moon produce a change in the wind. But the mass of mankind, and sailors especially, are still quite sure that the wind changes when the moon changes. Perhaps they will discover a hero in Mr. Park Harrison, a painstaking meteorologist, who has made it clear to the Astronomical Society that the heat reflected from the moon's surface does affect our atmosphere, and consequently our weather. Many persons have remarked that the sky is clear about the time of full moon. The explanation is that the reflected heat, being entirely absorbed by our atmospheric vapor, raises the temperature of the air above the clouds, which then evaporate more freely. The difference of temperature between the greatest and least amount of heat reflected from the moon is two degrees and a fraction only; yet, small as it is, it appears to be sufficient to produce the effect of clearing our atmosphere. Mr. Harrison is too diligent a worker not to carry his investigation further.—Atheneum.

SILK, muslin or other fibrous material may be coated with copper, silver or gold by electricity, if they be first dipped in a solution of nitrate of silver with ammonia, and then dried and exposed to a current of hydrogen gas. The ammonia must be sufficiently in excess to redissolve the precipitate. The fabric treated is coated in the usual manner.—American Artisan.

The Pontifical military almanac has just been distributed to the diplomatic body at Rome. In the papal army there are eight generals, twenty-four chaplains, and seven hundred officers, thus divided as to nationalities: four hundred and sixty-four Italians, one hundred and twenty-nine French, fifty-nine Swiss, nineteen Germans, twenty Belgians, nine Dutchmen and four English.

FARM AND GARDEN.

HYBRIDIZING GRAPES.

The analyses of grapes show us that a few days in the fall add greatly to the specific gravity of this fruit. It is found that the cause of this specific gravity is the formation of sugar, and that this sugar is not obtained at the expense of the acid, for in some cases the acid also increases. The few days also add aroma, flavor, and richness.

The process of hybridization is interesting. The grape opens its flower by a singular process, different from most other plants. We see the cherry, peach and apple expand their petals, and retain them with their white or red colors several days, but the grape has its petals so united at the top of the flower that, as it opens, the petals are drawn off from their attachment, and cast off in a sort of hood that falls to the ground, leaving the stamens and pistils naked. If there is any difficulty in making hybrids, it is the removal of this hood, which should be done as soon as it is loose, and before it is naturally thrown off, and so to do it as not to jar down the pollen of the stamens on the top of the pistil, for pollen is often seen to fall in a cascade of yellow particles, so heavy is it. Notwithstanding the apparent difficulty, the hood is easily removed by the forceps and scissors, no more delicate nor by a hand more steady than is required by the surgeon in many cases demanding his skill.

One circumstance is often noted, that is, that as soon as the hood of the petals is off, the top of the pistils begins to be covered with a minute globe of transparent fluid, beautifully clear and highly refractive, glistening like a dew drop on the top of the pistil. It takes usually from a few moments to an hour or two, according to the weather, for this minute globule to be perfected. No impregnation can take place unless this minute drop of fluid receives the pollen; this pollen falls upon, adheres to, and sinks into this minute drop; and as soon as a sufficient quantity has thus been received by this drop of fluid, it becomes turbid or milky, losing its transparency, and is drawn into certain pores or tubes, which are seen by their months, as roughness on the stigma, which is the enlarged portion on the top of the pistil. Thus, if the pollen is abundant, and the weather favorable, a few hours may suffice; if not, a day or two, or even the third day may be required to complete the impregnation. After the third day the drops of fluid are rarely seen and the top of the pistil is dry. But a rain may wash this drop off; and hence, there may be a large failure of grapes, though the drop is often renewed, at least once or twice, after an accident.

It will be seen, therefore, that it is quite possible to artificially sprinkle this drop with pollen from another plant at the right moment, so that, although the stamens are not cut away, the hybridization is surely done, for we have merely to dust thoroughly this minute drop, and preoccupy its whole capacity, and the work is complete, and in a few hours after the whole drop of fluid is drawn in and the top of the pistil is dry even before natural impregnation would have been completed. The successful hybridist needs to study well this drop of clear fluid on the top of the pistil. Failure can only take place under the following circumstances: The pollen may not be taken up by the drop of fluid; or it may be applied too soon, or too late, when the drop is partially dried up and a little milky, with pollen already absorbed.

Another circumstance to be noticed is that in a certain selected bunch of flowers all of them do not open on the same day, and all the drops are not matured on the pistils at once.

Early in the morning of the first day of the opening of the flowers, or soon after daylight, a few of the petal hoods fall and a few drops expand, but not many until the genial warmth of nine or ten o'clock is reached, which is the most favorable hour for hybridization. The operator then taking his stand by the bunch of flowers, cuts away those that have opened and expanded the drop fully, while he watches for the loosening of a number of petal hoods; these he immediately removes, either with fine forceps or the point of a fine scissors, his eye closely watching whether any other bursts and lets fall a stream of pollen upon the somewhat expanded globule. At this stage there is fear of pollen dust; it falls heavily and quickly. If the globule of the pistil has escaped this danger, the operator allows a moment to pass, that the others may expand or bend outward on their stems when he cuts them away. These he selects, and operates on as many flowers as he desires, or which open that morning. He now watches the maturing expansion of the minute globule on the top of each pistil, and as soon as they have acquired a full soundness, curving to the smaller base by which they rest on the pistils, he knows they are ready to receive the pollen artificially. On a favorable day this takes but a short time; in less favorable weather, hours may be needed, and in bad weather a day or two. But when the right moment has arrived, dust the globule freely, sprinkle it with an excess of pollen, then wait a few hours and see if the globule has lost its transparency, and is withdrawn down into the recess of the germ to perfect the seed of the future grape vine. If so, then the hybridization is complete; if not, the globule must be redusted every few hours while it is visible.

The seed planter needs this thousands of seeds, and these he must obtain; but the hybridist needs but a few seeds; each having acquired new and wonderful powers by the foreign pollen, thus he seeks but a few fertile pistils, and hence he should cut away the rest of the flowers that are unexpanded. The next morning he must examine the pistils again, and see if there are any globules yet clear and full, as sometimes they reappear the second day, and need another dusting with pollen.

For dusting, a small camel-hair brush is recommended. Let it be one-eighth of an inch in diameter, dry and dipped in an abundance of pollen; thus the inside of the brush will appear yellow, being filled with it. Now hold the brush a quarter of an inch above the minute globule on the pistil, and with a knife-blade, or other convenient instrument, jar the brush with taps, which will cause the pollen to fall freely on the globule, an assistant catching the surplus pollen in a small paper box below. Perhaps a more perfect duster would be a tube with a small aperture at the lower end, out of which the pollen can be shaken by tapping. As to the age of the pollen, we are informed that in the use of it in Europe for crosses, a month, or even two, does not impair its power or impregnating properties.

It is customary in Europe to get it from the old vinery, and use it within ten days, keeping it in a small paper box in a moderately damp condition till the paper you wish to operate upon has opened its flowers. Sometimes the pollen has been poured on the pistils, and the surplus caught, to be again poured over the pistil, or the brush has been wet, and as much pollen taken up as possible upon it, and the globule then fairly rubbed with the heavily charged brush. Any of these methods will be quite likely to be successful.—New York Day Book.

Gardening in Southern Louisiana.

SEPTEMBER.

But little can be done at gardening till September.

Gardens in July and August in this country are apt to be considerably neglected, and to become grassy. But something may be done in gardens every month in the year.

Those who have not dug their Irish potatoes should dig them. They keep well till the first hard frost by spreading them out on an outhouse floor, or on the dry ground, under a building that sets up two or more feet above the ground. Any dry, cool place will do if they are spread out thin.

Cabbage seeds should be sown in August and September. Old turf, thrown in a pile and well rotted, should be used, mixed with old manure and rotten leaves and fresh vegetable mould. Scatter a little moss over the seed bed, and keep the surface moist by watering it late in the evening. Never water in the morning.

Plant squashes, and snap and pole beans in rich and mellow soil, and after they come up keep the ground stirred around them to the depth of an inch. Always stir the soil as soon after a rain as the soil will pulverize.

Plant cow peas. They run to vines less, and produce more peas when planted late in the season.

Plant tomato seeds, in seed beds like cabbage seeds, for a second crop.

If the season prove favorable watermelon and muskmelon seeds may be planted this month, and produce healthy and good melons.

Sugar corn, and even the common corn of the country, may be planted this month and next, for roasting ears.

Lady peas may now be planted, and will do well.

On every fresh, new land, where brush piles have been burned, Dutch and ruta baga turnips may be sown on the full moon of this month, but on most soils they will be hard, woody, stunted and bitter if planted before September.—Planters' Banner.

THE WORLD'S FRIENDSHIPS.—One morning I found him quite alone. He bade me remark this: 'Formerly,' he said, 'when I was young scarcely any one passed my door, men or women, without calling to see me. To day, from that window, I observe them all go by, as formerly, but they enter no more.'—Guizot on Lord Holland.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00
French or one Modern Language	20 00

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

This climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.
